TITLE 70
PROPERTY

CHAPTER 1
PROPERTY IN GENERAL REAL AND PERSONAL

Part 1
General Provisions

70-1-101. Property defined — ownership.

Case Notes

Determination of Vehicle Ownership — Installment Sales Contract Not Indicative of Ownership for Insurance Purposes: Jordet, an adult, jointly purchased a vehicle for the exclusive use of his minor sister-in-law, who made the downpayment, repaid registration and license fees, made the only installment payment, purchased separate insurance, possessed the only keys, and maintained sole use and control of the vehicle. The District Court decided that the term "owned vehicle" in Jordet's automobile policy included the jointly owned vehicle and that Jordet's signature on the installment sales contract conclusively placed the vehicle under his policy. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that the purchase of property and the insurance of property are distinct transactions and that Jordet's signature on the sales contract did not establish ownership for insurance purposes. Implicit in ownership is the ability to control how, when, where, and by whom the property will be used. Since Jordet never exercised any of the indicia of ownership that would be compatible with his insuring the vehicle, it was not an "owned vehicle" under the terms of his policy. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Nelson, 228 M 233, 743 P2d 572, 44 St. Rep. 1482 (1987).

Tax Sale Provisions Applicable to Improvements on Tax-Exempt Land — Meaning of "Real Property" and "Real Estate": Montana's tax collection laws governing real estate tax sales apply to improvements located on tax-exempt lands. The conveyance by tax deed of appellant's log cabin for nonpayment of taxes was upheld against his assertion that the cabin, situated on Forest Service land, is not an improvement fixed to land for purposes of the Realty Transfer Act and not "real estate" for purposes of the tax sale provisions. The court traced the Legislature's circuitous route to a definition of taxable real property in support of its holding. Brown v. Hart, 213 M 517, 692 P2d 14, 41 St. Rep. 2264 (1984).

Public Office as Property Interest: The incumbent of a public office for a definite term carrying a fixed salary has a "property interest" therein within meaning of this section and 70-1-104 and within constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law. State ex rel. Ryan v. Norby, 118 M 283, 165 P2d 302 (1946).

Case Notes

Deposit for Benefit of Sureties — Principal Entitled to Accretions or Profits: A deposit in a bank to indemnify sureties on a bond against possible loss being a pledge, title to it, as between the principal and the sureties, is in the former, and the accretions or profits, if any, belong to him and not to the sureties. Leggat v. Palmer, 39 M 302, 102 P 327 (1909).

Owner of Animal Entitled to Offspring: Under this section the jury was properly instructed, in an action of claim and delivery to recover possession of a mare and colt, that if the mare had been given to defendant, verdict should be for her for the possession of the animal "and for any increase or offspring thereof", even though plaintiff was in the actual possession of dam at the time the colt was foaled and when defendant took both animals. Frank v. Symons, 35 M 56, 88 P 561 (1907).

70-1-104. In what things property interests may exist.

Case Notes

Requirement That Defendant Remove Indoor Pets From County as Sentencing Condition for Public Nuisance Affirmed: As a condition of deferred sentencing for maintaining a public nuisance, Zimmerman was ordered to remove his indoor house pets from a dilapidated house he looked after in Dutton. Each day, Zimmerman drove from Great Falls to Dutton to feed his indoor pets; he had been feeding a clowder of feral cats in and around Dutton as well, and neighbors complained about the proliferation of cats in town. The jury returned a guilty verdict, and Zimmerman was forbidden to feed the feral cats. At sentencing, the state recommended a $500 fine and a 2-year deferred sentence, which included a condition that Zimmerman also remove his house pets from the county. Zimmerman appealed this condition on grounds that his house pets were his personal property, that their removal would cause irreparable harm, and that the condition had no nexus to him or to the crime of maintaining a public nuisance. The Supreme Court disagreed. Even though the pets were not the basis of the charge, they were an integral part of Zimmerman's established feeding routine for more than 3 years. By ordering that the indoor pets be removed, the District Court minimized the likelihood that Zimmerman would bring cat food to Dutton, which in turn reduced the likelihood that Zimmerman would return to feeding feral cats, so it was plausible that removal of the indoor pets was reasonably related to protecting the citizens of Dutton from further nuisances. Further, Zimmerman was not deprived of his personal pets, but only required to remove them from the county. The sentencing requirement had a nexus to the crime and was not so unduly punitive that it amounted to an abuse of the sentencing court's discretion, so the District Court was affirmed. St. v. Zimmerman, 2010 MT 44, 355 Mont. 286, 228 P.3d 1109.

Deed Reserving Mineral Rights: Conveyance of surface estate by deed providing that "all coal and mineral rights are reserved by" the grantors effectively reserved in the grantors a mineral estate in the conveyed land. Lien v. Simons, 522 F. Supp. 712, 38 St. Rep 1644 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Segregation and Conveyance of Mineral Interests: The title to mineral interests in land, including oil, gas, and coal interests, may be segregated in whole or in part from the rest of the fee simple title, and there is little doubt that such interests may be separately conveyed. Lien v. Simons, 522 F. Supp. 712, 38 St. Rep. 1644 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Public Office as a Property Interest: The incumbent of a public office for a definite term carrying a fixed salary has a "property interest" therein within meaning of this section and 70-1-101 and within constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law. State ex rel. Ryan v. Norby, 118 M 283, 165 P2d 302 (1946).

70-1-105. Real or personal.

Case Notes

Tax Sale Provisions Applicable to Improvements on Tax-Exempt Land — Meaning of "Real Property" and "Real Estate": Montana's tax collection laws governing real estate tax sales apply to improvements located on tax-exempt lands. The conveyance by tax deed of appellant's log cabin for nonpayment of taxes was upheld against his assertion that the cabin, situated on Forest Service land, is not an improvement fixed to land for purposes of the Realty Transfer Act and not "real estate" for purposes of the tax sale provisions. Crops — Personal Property: Crops of wheat and oats are emblements and as such are treated as chattels personal, subject to sale or mortgage and levy of attachment or execution, even while still annexed to the soil. Power Mercantile Co. v. Moore Mercantile Co., 55 M 401, 177 P 406 (1918).

Growing Timber — Real Property: Growing timber is realty under Montana law. R. M. Cobban Realty Co. v. Donlan, 51 M 58, 149 P 484 (1915).

Case Notes

Proper Deposit of Leasehold Interest Entitling Leaseholder to Notice and Right to Redeem Property Tax Lien: Section 15-18-212 requires that the purchaser or assignee of a tax sale certificate notify all persons interested in the property, including a person with properly recorded interest in the property, that a tax deed will be issued to the purchaser unless the tax lien is redeemed prior to the expiration date of the redemption period. Under 70-21-209, an acknowledged or certified instrument is considered recorded when it is deposited with the appropriate County Clerk and Recorder. In this case, an instrument reflecting plaintiffs' interest as assignee of a vendor's interest in the contract for sale of a cabin and leasehold, which constituted real property, was properly recorded at the Lewis and Clark County Clerk and Recorder's office, so plaintiffs were entitled as an interested party to notice by certified mail pursuant to 15-18-212; however, no notice was given. Plaintiffs' right to redeem the property tax lien continued indefinitely until proper notice was given; thus, a tax deed subsequently issued by the county was void for failure to comply with the notice provisions of 15-18-212. Ditto v. Kipp, 2000 MT 162, 300 M 278, 3 P3d 647, 57 St. Rep. 679 (2000). See also Kneedler v. League Wide, Inc., 1999 MT 80, 294 M 101, 979 P2d 163 (1999).

School Trust Land Water Rights Owned by State: In a case involving a dispute over ownership of water rights on state school trust lands, the Supreme Court ruled that title to the surface and ground water rights on school trust lands vests in the state and that the lessee, in making appropriations on and for school trust sections, is acting on behalf of the state. It is only through state action that the lessee is on the land, and Montana law expressly provides that the lessee must be reimbursed for all capital expenditures made in putting the water to beneficial use. The state is the beneficial user of the water, and its duty as trustee of the school trust lands prohibits it from alienating any interest in the land without receiving full compensation for it or from giving up control over the water rights. Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

Tax Sale Provisions Applicable to Improvements on Tax-Exempt Land — Meaning of "Real Property" and "Real Estate": Montana's tax collection laws governing real estate tax sales apply to improvements located on tax-exempt lands. The conveyance by tax deed of appellant's log cabin for nonpayment of taxes was upheld against his assertion that the cabin, situated on Forest Service land, is not an improvement fixed to land for purposes of the Realty Transfer Act and not "real estate" for purposes of the tax sale provisions. The court traced the Legislature's circuitous route to a definition of taxable real property in support of its holding. Brown v. Hart, 213 M 517, 692 P2d 14, 41 St. Rep. 2264 (1984).

Status of Property for Taxation Purposes Not Relevant to Determination of Its Status Under Property Law: The method by which property is assessed for purposes of taxation has no bearing on whether the structure is real or personal property. Pac. Metal Co. v. NW. Bank of Helena, 205 M 323, 667 P2d 958, 40 St. Rep. 1301 (1983).

Oil and Gas in the Ground — Real Property: So long as petroleum and gas remain in the ground they are part of the realty and as such subject to the owner's control. Willard v. Fed. Sur. Co., 91 M 465, 8 P2d 633 (1932).

Shares of Stock in Mutual Irrigation Company — Personal Property: While shares of stock in a mutual irrigation company, organized for the convenience of its members in the distribution to them of water for use upon their lands in proportion to their respective interest, are personal property for the purpose of transfer, they are appurtenant to the lands held by their owners and, unless reserved, pass with the conveyance of the lands though not mentioned therein. Yellowstone Valley Co. v. Assoc. Mtg. Investors, Inc., 88 M 73, 290 P 255, 70 ALR 1002 (1930).

Sale of Land — Growing Crops Included: Annual crops growing upon land are not part of the land under the statutes of this state, but where the owner of the land sells it with the right of immediate possession in the purchaser and without reserving the crops thereon and the purchaser takes possession before severance, title passes to the crops as well, and this principle is applicable where the land is sold at decretal or execution sale. Kester v. Amon, 81 M 1, 261 P 288 (1927).

Annual Crops — Personal Property: Annual crops are usually treated as chattels personal, subject to sale or mortgage and levy of execution as are other chattels, even while still annexed to the soil, and are not included within the definition of real property. Morton v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 80 M 593, 261 P 278 (1927).

Growing Grass — Real Property: Growing grass is a part of the soil of which it is the natural growth, within the meaning of this section and 70-15-103, and destruction thereof by the herding of livestock thereon constitutes a damage to the owner's real property. Kiehl v. Holliday, 77 M 451, 251 P 527 (1926).

Easements — Real Property:

A right-of-way and the right to a ditch, canal, or other structure in which water is conveyed for irrigation or other lawful purposes are easements over the land occupied by the ditch, canal, etc. An "easement" is an appurtenance to land and constitutes an interest in real property. Mannix v. Powell County, 60 M 510, 199 P 914 (1921). See also Rodda v. Best, 68 M 205, 217 P 669 (1923).

An easement for a right-of-way for cutting and hauling timber is realty under Montana law. R. M. Cobban Realty Co. v. Donlan, 51 M 58, 149 P 484 (1915).

Buildings: In the absence of anything to show an intention to the contrary, things affixed to the realty, such as buildings permanently resting upon foundations embedded in the soil, are part of the realty and pass with it. Hence, ownership of such a structure necessarily followed ownership of the land rightfully decreed to plaintiff. Hauf v. School District, 52 M 395, 158 P 315 (1916).

Growing Timber — Real Property: Growing timber is realty under Montana law. R. M. Cobban Realty Co. v. Donlan, 51 M 58, 149 P 484 (1915).

Bridges — Real Property: Where a person enters upon an existing public highway and voluntarily erects a bridge, intending that it should be a part of the same and belong to the public, it becomes of necessity affixed to the land and is real property. State ex rel. Donlan v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 49 M 517, 143 P 984 (1914), followed in Kelly v. Wallace, 1998 MT 307, 292 M 129, 972 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1271 (1998).

Mining Machinery — Real Property: Mining machinery, being deemed affixed to the mine, is real property. Britannia Min. Co. v. USF&G Co., 43 M 93, 115 P 46 (1911).

Case Notes

Rebuttable Presumption That Prison Escapee Abandoned Personal Property: Hawkins escaped from the state prison. Immediately following the escape, officials packed up Hawkins' personal property, sealed it in boxes with security tape and Hawkins' name on each box, and placed it in the prison storage room. After 2 days, Hawkins was apprehended and returned to prison. He was found guilty of escape, but his property was not ordered destroyed. Over the next 30 days, Hawkins requested the return of his personal property several times. Eventually, Hawkins was escorted to the storage room and allowed to remove his legal papers but was informed that, by policy, when a prisoner escapes, all personal property is considered abandoned, so the remainder of his property was destroyed or sold. Hawkins filed an action for the value of the property, alleging that prison officials destroyed his property without affording him due process, which constituted cruel and unusual punishment and violated a gratuitous bailment that Hawkins had formed. The District Court, concluding that Hawkins had abandoned his property by his escape and that the abandonment constituted a complete defense to any action brought by Hawkins that depended on his ownership of the property, dismissed the action based on failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939), for the proposition that in determining whether one has abandoned property or rights, intention is the first and paramount object of inquiry. If there is no expressed intent to abandon, then intent must be inferred from the acts of the property owner. The presumption or inference of intent to abandon one's property based solely on the acts of the owner is a rebuttable presumption. Here, upon returning to prison and requesting the return of his property, Hawkins effectively rebutted the presumption that he intended to abandon it, and when he reclaimed his property by requesting its return, he regained his status as owner of his personal property against all others. The District Court committed reversible error when it found that Hawkins abandoned the property by escape and dismissed the action based on failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Hawkins v. Mahoney, 1999 MT 296, 297 M 98, 990 P2d 776, 56 St. Rep. 1185 (1999), distinguishing Herron v. Whiteside, 782 SW 2d 414 (1989). See also 1 C.J.S. Abandonment §12 (1985).

Status of Property for Taxation Purposes Not Relevant to Determination of Its Status Under Property Law: The method by which property is assessed for purposes of taxation has no bearing on whether the structure is real or personal property. Pac. Metal Co. v. NW. Bank of Helena, 205 M 323, 667 P2d 958, 40 St. Rep. 1301 (1983).

Retail Liquor License: A retail liquor license is salable and is personal property of value and subject to attachment. Stallinger v. Goss, 121 M 437, 193 P2d 810 (1948).

70-1-109. Choice of law as to personal property.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Law Governing Personal Property Decided by Situs of Property and Domicile of Owner — Tenancy by the Entirety Impermissible Mode of Personal Property Ownership in Montana: A Montana District Court determined that personal property jointly owned by Lurie and her husband as tenancy by the entirety in Missouri was owned by them either as joint tenancy property or as tenancy in common property after the couple moved to Montana. The property was subject to execution to satisfy a judgment against the husband on a validly issued writ. Lurie contended that as tenancy by the entirety property, it was not subject to execution to satisfy a judgment against the husband only, because Missouri law followed the personal property and should be applied in Montana. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court was correct in determining that the law governing personal property is decided by the situs of the property and the domicile of the owner, so Montana law applied. Further, under Clark v. Clark, 143 M 183, 387 P2d 907 (1963), tenancy by the entirety is not a permissible mode of real property ownership in Montana, and the District Court properly extended the reasoning in Clark with equal force to personal property in Lurie's case. Lurie v. Sheriff, 2000 MT 103, 299 M 283, 999 P2d 342, 57 St. Rep. 414 (2000), distinguishing Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998).

70-1-110. How property acquired.

Case Notes

Doctrine of Agreed Boundary: The standard of proof necessary to invoke the doctrine of agreed boundary is clear and convincing. Where, as here, the evidence does not show more than mere acquiescence by property owners as to placement of a fence and occupancy, petitioner/owner does not adequately establish that he and the other owner agreed to a boundary line. Therefore, the doctrine that adjacent landowners may move the boundary line of their respective parcels by agreement does not apply. Huggans v. Weer, 189 M 334, 615 P2d 922 (1980), following Townsend v. Konkol, 148 M 1, 416 P2d 532 (1966).

Part 2
General Rights of State Over Property

70-1-202. Property of the state — what included.

Case Notes

Missouri River Islands Connected to Shore by Accretion — Ownership by State: The ownership of two tracts of land that were discernible Missouri River islands prior to attaching to adjoining lands was properly claimed by the state. Migration of the Missouri was not avulsion, which creates an identifiable piece of land through a sudden change in the river channel, but rather accretion, which is the deposit of sediment on one bank along the waterline due to the gradual and imperceptible change in the river course over a period of time. The property boundary line shifts with the waterline. Dept. of State Lands v. Armstrong, 251 M 235, 824 P2d 255, 49 St. Rep. 10 (1992), distinguishing McCafferty v. Young, 144 M 385, 397 P2d 96 (1964).

Public Recreational Use Rights Statute — Constitutionality: Following Curran and Hildreth decisions, which held that the public trust doctrine provides the public with a constitutional right to use the bed and banks of navigable streams up to the high-water mark despite a landowner's fee title, the Legislature enacted a statute providing public recreational use of streams. Plaintiff filed suit requesting the court to declare the recreational use statute an unconstitutional taking of private property without just compensation. Plaintiff then appealed after the trial court upheld the statute's constitutionality and awarded the state summary judgment. The Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional 23-2-302(2)(d), (2)(e), and (2)(f), which provided the public a right to hunt big game, build duck blinds and boat moorages, and camp overnight so long as not within sight of an occupied dwelling or within 500 yards of an occupied dwelling, whichever is less. The court further held as unconstitutional 23-2-311(3)(e), which required a landowner to pay costs of constructing a portage route around artificial barriers. The public has a right of use of the bed and banks up to the high-water mark but only such use as is necessary to utilization of the water itself. Any use of the bed and banks must be of minimal impact. Galt v. St., 225 M 142, 731 P2d 912, 44 St. Rep. 103 (1987), followed in Bitterroot River Protective Assoc., Inc. v. Bitterroot Conserv. Dist., 2008 MT 377, 346 M 507, 198 P3d 219 (2008). See also Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Public Right to Use Beaverhead River for Recreational Purposes: Following the decision in Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984), the Supreme Court held that: (1) the Beaverhead River is navigable for recreational purposes and the public has a right to use its bed and banks up to the ordinary high-water mark with limited right to portage across private property in order to bypass barriers in the water; (2) determination of navigability for title is not necessary; (3) the public does not have the right to trespass over private property in order to reach the state-owned waters; and (4) plaintiff's action did not constitute inverse condemnation because public use of waters, rather than title, was determined. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Hildreth, 211 M 29, 684 P2d 1088, 41 St. Rep. 1192 (1984).

Determining Public's Right to Use Dearborn River — Indispensable Parties: Stream access coalition, the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation), and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks sued landowner along the Dearborn River, seeking a determination of the public's right to use the river. The District Court did not err for failure to dismiss the plaintiffs' claims for failure to join indispensable parties. When litigation seeks vindication of a public right, those who may be adversely affected by a decision do not thereby become indispensable parties. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Determination of Public's Right to Use Dearborn River — Standing of Coalition of Citizens: In action for determination of the public's right to use the Dearborn River, whether the Montana Coalition for Stream Access, Inc., had standing to bring suit was immaterial because the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks were also plaintiffs. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Navigability for Title Purposes — Federal Test — Dearborn River Navigable: Federal law controlled the issue of whether the Dearborn River was, at the time Montana became a state, navigable for the purpose of determining title to its bed. Under federal law, rivers are navigable in law if they are navigable in fact, and they are navigable in fact if they were used or capable of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce over which trade and travel were or could be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on the water at the time of the state's admission to the Union. Navigability in fact can be determined by using the log-floating test. That test was satisfied by evidence that in 1887, 2 years before Montana became a state, the Dearborn was used to float about 100,000 railroad ties and that in 1888 or 1889, one or two log drives a year were floated down the river, one of them containing 700,000 board feet. Title to the riverbed was thus in the federal government when Montana became a state in 1889 and was transferred to the State upon its admission to the Union. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Navigability for Title Purposes — Summary Judgment — Dearborn River: The District Court properly granted the coalition for stream access and two state departments summary judgment on the issue of navigability of the Dearborn River in 1889 for title purposes. The affidavits and depositions of plaintiffs' two competent historians were admissible because the historians were qualified experts who provided evidence of the history of the river, their affidavits and depositions disclosed circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness, and the facts and data they relied on were of a type reasonably relied on by experts in their field; the facts and data did not themselves have to be admissible. The affidavits of defendant landowner's witnesses were worthless, were not admissible, and did not create any genuine issue of material fact concerning the navigability of the river at the time Montana became a state in 1889. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Public Recreational Use of Dearborn River — No Inverse Condemnation: Landowner along Dearborn River was sued by parties seeking a determination of the public's right to use the river for recreational uses. Landowner counterclaimed for inverse condemnation, basing the counterclaim on his claim to ownership of the riverbed. The Supreme Court held that the question of title to the bed was irrelevant to determining navigability for use by the public; that landowner had no claim to the waters; that since there was no claim to the waters, nothing was taken and thus there was no ground for an inverse condemnation claim; and that, consequently, the District Court did not err in dismissing the counterclaim. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Public Recreational Use Rights on Dearborn River — Limits: Navigability for public use is governed by state law and is separate from the question of navigability under federal law for title purposes. The question is whether waters owned by the State under Art. IX, sec. 3(3), Mont. Const., are susceptible to recreational use by the public. The capability of use of the waters for recreational purposes determines the availability of the waters for recreational use by the public. Whether or not a private party owns the bed beneath the waters is irrelevant. The constitution and the Public Trust Doctrine bar a private party from interfering with the public's right to use of the surface of the waters owned by the State, and any surface waters that are capable of recreational use may be so used by the public without regard to streambed ownership or navigability for nonrecreational purposes. The public's recreational use right extends to the point of the high-water marks. The public does not have the right to cross over private property to reach waters upon which they have a recreational use right, though they may portage around barriers in the water in the least intrusive way possible, avoiding damage to any private property holder's rights. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Title to and Public Recreation on Dearborn River — Ex Post Facto, Contract Clause, and Irrevocable Privileged Considerations: The Supreme Court held that the State, not the landowner along the Dearborn River, held title to the bed of the river under the federal test of navigability (at the time Montana became a state) for purposes of determining title to the riverbed. The court also held that landowner had no right to exclude the public from recreational use of the waters of the Dearborn. Because of these holdings, landowner's questions relating to ex post facto laws, violation of the contract clause of the constitution, and irrevocable rights and privileges were not germane to the case. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Title to and Public Use of Dearborn River — Federal Commerce Clause Navigability Immaterial: In action for determination of the public's right to use the Dearborn River, whether Montana has adopted the log-floating test of commercial navigability and whether the Dearborn is navigable under the federal commercial use test were immaterial because the question was one of recreational use or navigability, not commercial navigability. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Title to and Public Use of Dearborn River — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Found: Landowner along the Dearborn River claimed the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over action for determination of the public's right to use the river, basing his claim on the presumption that he held title to the riverbed and that the State had no power to strip him of that title under the guise of determining navigability of the waters over the riverbed. The claim lacked merit because the State holds title to the riverbed and the water flowing over it, so that there was no question of the District Court's subject matter jurisdiction. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Severed Mineral Estate — Subject to Accretion and Erosion: The mineral interests in land bordering the Yellowstone River on the east were severed from the surface estate in 1938. The original survey of the area was done in 1884. Since the time of the original survey, the Yellowstone River has gradually moved eastward. In a quiet title action, a question of first impression was presented, viz., whether a severed mineral estate bordering a navigable waterway is subject to the doctrines of accretion and erosion. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court's reliance on Nilson v. Tenneco Oil Co., 614 P2d 36 (Okla. 1980). The court held that a severed mineral estate is subject to the doctrines of accretion and erosion, and that prior exception by a riparian owner on one side of a navigable waterway will not work to divest the state (owner of the land underlying the waterway) or another riparian owner of ownership in lands underlying navigable waterways or minerals situated in accreted lands. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 40 St. Rep. 1214 (1983).

Abandoned Bed of Missouri River — Property of State: When the Missouri River changed its channel, the abandoned bed occupied by the river at time of the avulsion, extending to the ordinary low watermark, belonged to the state, since under this section the state became the owner of the riverbed, subject to federal navigation rights. Since the Missouri is a navigable stream, the riparian owner, under 70-16-201, owns land to the low watermark. U.S. v. Eldredge, 33 F. Supp. 337 (D.C. Mont. 1940).

Owner of Land Below Water of a Navigable Stream: The state owns all land below the water of a navigable stream, and therefore the waters above the bed or channel of such a stream at low watermark are public waters in which the people have a right to fish, except as restrained by general law, and to shoot wildfowl upon the surface of the stream or flying thereover so long as they do not trespass upon the land of an adjacent owner. Herrin v. Sutherland, 74 M 587, 241 P 328, 42 ALR 937 (1925).

Attorney General's Opinions

Access to Rivers and Streams Via County Road Right-of-Way and Bridges: Given that the public has the right to use public highways in any manner and for any purpose consistent with or reasonably incidental to public travel, this right includes the use of public rights-of-way created by county roads to gain access to rivers and streams. Using a county road right-of-way as an access point to a river or stream right-of-way is consistent with and reasonably incidental to the public's right to travel on county roads. Further, a bridge and its abutments, as part of a public highway, offer the same access to rivers and streams for recreational use as the highway to which they are attached. However, the public's right of access is not unlimited and is subject to the following limitations: (1) the recreating public must stay within the county road and bridge right-of-way, which is assumed to be 60 feet unless otherwise stated by petition or dedication; (2) access may be limited by the reasonable exercise of a governing body's police power to control the use of roads for purposes such as safety and parking; and (3) use of a public highway may be limited by the manner in which it was created, such as a road created by prescriptive easement, which is limited both in size and usage to the original use during the prescriptive period and may include access for hunting, fishing, and recreation. 48 A.G. Op. 13 (2000).

Tax Sale Provisions Applicable to Improvements on Tax-Exempt Land — Meaning of "Real Property" and "Real Estate": Montana's tax collection laws governing real estate tax sales apply to improvements located on tax-exempt lands. The conveyance by tax deed of appellant's log cabin for nonpayment of taxes was upheld against his assertion that the cabin, situated on Forest Service land, is not an improvement fixed to land for purposes of the Realty Transfer Act and not "real estate" for purposes of the tax sale provisions. The court traced the Legislature's circuitous route to a definition of taxable real property in support of its holding. Brown v. Hart, 213 M 517, 692 P2d 14, 41 St. Rep. 2264 (1984).

Process for Amending Restrictive Covenant to Be Strictly Followed: Myers contended that a subdivision corporation did not follow the proper method for amending a restrictive covenant disallowing the rental of subdivision property for less than 30 days. The District Court disagreed, holding that the amendment was properly adopted and restrained Myers from renting the property for less than 30 days. Myers appealed. The Supreme Court held that because restrictive covenants must be strictly construed, when a covenant is amended to impose an impediment on use of the property, the method prescribed for amending the covenant must also be strictly followed. In this case, Myers established that the prescribed amendment method was not used, so the Supreme Court reversed the judgment. Point Serv. Corp. v. Myers, 2005 MT 322, 329 M 502, 125 P3d 1107 (2005).

Rules for Interpretation of Restrictive Covenants: Restrictive covenants are construed under the same rules of construction as other contracts. Declarations of covenants are read on their four corners as a whole, and terms are construed in their ordinary or popular sense. Bordas v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2004 MT 342, 324 M 263, 102 P3d 1219 (2004), following Windemere Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McCue, 1999 MT 292, 297 M 77, 990 P2d 769 (1999), and followed in Point Serv. Corp. v. Myers, 2005 MT 322, 329 M 502, 125 P3d 1107 (2005).

Lack of Legal Description of Tracts in Covenant Amendment Not Fatal When Landowners Provided Actual Notice of Amendment: A supermajority of subdivision property owners authorized an amendment creating new and unexpected restrictions not contained or contemplated in the original declaration of restrictive covenants. Some landowners who disagreed with the amendment appealed, contending that it was invalid because it did not contain a legal description of the affected property. The District Court found the argument unpersuasive because the amendment referred to a previous amendment that did contain a legal description. The Supreme Court agreed, noting further that none of the appellants denied that they had actual notice of the amendment, so their claims of inadequate notice failed. Windemere Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McCue, 1999 MT 292, 297 M 77, 990 P2d 769, 56 St. Rep. 1173 (1999). See also Poncelet v. English, 243 M 481, 795 P2d 436, 47 St. Rep. 1342 (1990).

Original Declaration of Restrictive Covenants Broad Enough to Authorize New or Unexpected Restrictions: A supermajority of subdivision property owners authorized an amendment creating new and unexpected restrictions not contained or contemplated in the original declaration of restrictive covenants, resulting in assessment against subdivision landowners of the costs of paving a common road. Strictly construing the original amendment language, the District Court ruled that the clause in the covenants allowing amendment was broad enough to authorize new or unexpected restrictions. The Supreme Court agreed. Under the rule of strict construction, covenants should not be extended by implication or enlarged by construction. In this case, the drafters of the original covenants used universal language to describe the kinds of changes that could be made, clearly providing that each aspect of the covenants, conditions, restrictions, and uses was subject to amendment by a supermajority. Further, under the universal language, it was unnecessary that amendments to the restrictive covenants be connected to a provision in the original covenants. Windemere Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McCue, 1999 MT 292, 297 M 77, 990 P2d 769, 56 St. Rep. 1173 (1999), following Sunday Canyon Property Owners Ass'n v. Annett, 978 SW 2d 654 (Tex. App. 1998), and distinguishing Lakeland Property Owners Ass'n v. Larson, 459 NE 2d 1164 (Ill. App. 1984), Caughlin Ranch Homeowners Ass'n v. Caughlin Club, 849 P2d 310 (Nev. 1993), and Boyles v. Hausmann, 517 NW 2d 610 (Nebr. 1994).

Restrictive Covenant Allowing Disapproval of House Plans Based on "Harmony of External Design" — Specific Objective Standards Required: A restrictive covenant that allowed a design review committee to disapprove house plans and prevent construction based on "harmony of external design" was held to be too vague to be enforceable absent some general plan or scheme defining the standard of approval or an objective standard of design. Town & Country Estates Ass'n v. Slater, 227 M 489, 740 P2d 668, 44 St. Rep. 1257 (1987), contrasted in Jarrett v. Valley Park, Inc., 277 M 333, 922 P2d 485, 53 St. Rep. 671 (1996).

Construction of Restrictive Covenants: There are three basic rules regarding restrictive covenants: (1) that restrictive covenants are to be strictly construed; (2) that ambiguities are to be resolved in favor of free use of property; and (3) that the court should not broadly interpret and impose restrictive covenants in terms of what the parties would have desired. Higdem v. Whitham, 167 M 201, 536 P2d 1185 (1975), followed in Jarrett v. Valley Park, Inc., 277 M 333, 922 P2d 485, 53 St. Rep. 671 (1996). See also Windemere Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McCue, 1999 MT 292, 297 M 77, 990 P2d 769, 56 St. Rep. 1173 (1999), in which the universal language of an original declaration of restrictive covenants was found to be broad enough to authorize subsequent amendment, by a supermajority of affected property owners, authorizing creation of new or unexpected restrictions not contained or contemplated in the original covenants.

Definition of "Necessary Outbuilding": A "necessary outbuilding" for the purpose of a restrictive covenant is one convenient to a dwelling. Higdem v. Whitham, 167 M 201, 536 P2d 1185 (1975).

Strict Construction of Restrictions on Land Use: The overriding policy of individual expression in free and reasonable land use dictates that restrictions should not be aided or extended by implication or enlarged by construction. Higdem v. Whitham, 167 M 201, 536 P2d 1185 (1975), followed in Town & Country Estates Ass'n v. Slater, 227 M 489, 740 P2d 668, 44 St. Rep. 1257 (1987), and Jarrett v. McCue, 1999 MT 292, 297 M 77, 990 P2d 769, 56 St. Rep. 1173 (1999), in which the universal language of an original declaration of restrictive covenants was found to be broad enough to authorize subsequent amendment, by a supermajority of affected property owners, authorizing creation of new or unexpected restrictions not contained or contemplated in the original covenants.

Acquisition of Property: Where family-owned dairy farm corporation sold its lessors' interest in half of its herd to third party who then leased cattle back to corporation, the corporation, to the extent of the lease agreement, continued to own the cattle and, as long as operation of dairy farm was uninterrupted and not abandoned, there was no "acquisition" of the farm under Milk Control Board regulations. Death of Partner — Disposition of Property Held Jointly by Partners: Robert and William, brothers, opened a joint checking account in 1947, paid all ranch expenses through the account, put all ranch income in the account, and equally split net profits. All cattle were branded with either of two brands, each of which was registered in the name of "William Palmer or Robert Palmer". The brothers were also joint tenants in a commodity brokerage account. The Supreme Court held that the cattle and both accounts were partnership property not held in joint tenancy and remained so upon Robert's death. Thus, they did not pass to William as the surviving joint tenant; rather, they remained in the partnership for the purpose of winding up the partnership and paying its liabilities, after which William must account to Robert's survivor, his widow, for Robert's share of the partnership. By its very nature, partnership property must be treated differently than property of individuals, including property held by individuals as joint tenants but who are not in partnership. This rule applies regardless of the formal legal manner in which the property is held. This is a rule of equity developed over hundreds of years and codified in the Uniform Partnership Act. In re Estate of Palmer, 218 M 285, 708 P2d 242, 42 St. Rep. 1585 (1985), followed in Fiedler v. Fiedler, 266 M 133, 879 P2d 675, 51 St. Rep. 691 (1994).

Creation of Tenancy in Common in Bank Account — Rights of Creditor: When the signature card for a bank account did not specify that the two account holders had rights of survivorship, the estate created was that of a tenancy in common rather than a joint tenancy. Therefore, the creditor of one account holder was entitled to only one-half of the total amount of funds in the account. Univ. of Mont. v. Coe, 217 M 234, 704 P2d 1029, 42 St. Rep. 1160 (1985), distinguished in Seman v. Lewis, 252 M 508, 830 P2d 1294, 49 St. Rep. 206 (1992).

Lease of Land Held in Common: It is a well-settled principle of law that to make a binding lease of the whole of a piece of property held in common, all the tenants in common must join in the lease. Unlawful Detainer by Tenant in Common — Amendment of Pleading Properly Denied: Where the plaintiff and her sister leased farmland they owned as tenants in common to the defendant for a 6-year period and the sister conveyed her interest in the property to the defendant shortly before the expiration of the lease, the court did not err, in an action by the plaintiff brought in 1974 for an accounting of rents and profits from the defendant, in refusing to allow the plaintiff to plead and prove an unlawful detainer against the defendant. Leave of court should not be granted to allow amendments that present theories totally inapplicable to the case. As a tenant in common is an owner of an undivided interest in the property, a claim of unlawful detainer may not be asserted against a cotenant, but only against a tenant for a term less than life. A cotenant is allowed to possess and use commonly held property, and an action will lie for waste but not unpermitted use. Fry v. Heble, 191 M 272, 623 P2d 963, 38 St. Rep. 228 (1981).

"And/Or" — Joint Tenancy: In Montana an ownership document showing title in two or more persons "and/or" has the effect of creating a joint tenancy estate with right of survivorship. This applies to personal property, not real estate. First Westside Nat'l Bank v. Llera, 176 M 481, 580 P2d 100 (1978).

Joint Tenancy and Right of Survivorship: A conveyance to persons in joint tenancy carries with it the common-law right of survivorship since Legislature did not abrogate that right as an incidence of joint tenancy. Hennigh v. Hennigh, 131 M 372, 309 P2d 1022 (1957).

Division of Property of Tenants in Common — Presumptions and Intent: Assets held by tenants in common are presumed to be divided equally because the assets are presumed to be owned equally, but that presumption shifts when there is evidence of unequal contribution. When the preponderance of evidence establishes that the cotenants contributed unequally to the value of the property, it is presumed that the property will be divided in proportion to each cotenant's contribution. When there is an indication that one party intended to gift property to the other, the party who seeks to establish a disproportionate distribution based on gifted property has the burden of demonstrating that intent, and all relevant evidence of the parties' intent is admissible to sustain or rebut the presumptions. Intent of the parties may be demonstrated by conduct over the course of time, sharing of other expenses, labor, or other admissible means. In this case, the District Court's finding that the parties intended to split their assets equally was supported by substantial evidence and affirmed. However, the court erroneously adjusted a previous settlement of the parties regarding the distribution of the proceeds of a money market account when that asset was not in dispute and erred in awarding rent payments to one cotenant in contravention of the general rule that a tenant in common is not liable for the use and occupation of the premises until a tenant out of possession brings an action demanding the equivalent of joint possession. Thus, the case was remanded for entry of proper judgment on those issues. Flood v. Kalinyaprak, 2004 MT 15, 319 M 280, 84 P3d 27 (2004), following In re Estate of Dern, 279 M 138, 928 P2d 123 (1996), and followed in Anderson v. Collateral Estoppel Applied to Preclude Reopening Settlement Agreement Regarding Disposition of Jointly Owned Marital Property — Property Interest Not Altered by Filing of Partition Action: When the husband and wife separated, they entered a property settlement agreement dividing all their real and personal property, agreeing that they would continue to jointly own their residence, with the right of survivorship. In the decree of dissolution, the District Court affirmed that the property settlement agreement was fair and equitable. Several years after the divorce, seeking to wrap up financial affairs with her former husband, the wife moved to partition the residence and obtain an equal division of the value of the property. At trial, the husband argued that the property settlement agreement was unfair and that the wife should be denied any recovery for her interest in the residence because it was purchased prior to the marriage and because she did not contribute to the marriage financially. The wife moved in limine to preclude the husband from reopening matters that should have been raised in the divorce proceedings. The court denied her motion, reasoning that the property was not divided in the divorce and that because the partition action was an action at equity, surrounding circumstances could be considered. The court found that the filing of the partition action severed the joint tenancy, and the husband was then allowed to introduce evidence regarding the marital equities. The court ultimately concluded that the wife's interest in the residence was not compensable because she had not contributed significantly to the acquisition or improvement of the property or contributed to the parties' assets during the marriage. The wife appealed. The Supreme Court found that res judicata and equitable estoppel barred relitigation of the fairness of the joint ownership issue, which was considered and approved in the decree of dissolution. Further, the mere filing of the partition action does not sever one's interest in property. Rather, the parties' respective interests remain intact until the judgment severing the tenancy is entered. The rebuttable presumption that underlies a joint tenancy in property is equal shares, and there was nothing in the evidence to rebut that presumption and no evidence of postdecree events that would justify a different result. The husband failed to carry the burden of rebutting the presumption of equal shares, and the Supreme Court remanded for a 50-50 partition of the value of the residence. Rausch v. Hogan, 2001 MT 123, 305 M 382, 28 P3d 460 (2001).

Contents of Safe Deposit Box Not Considered Jointly Held Asset: Silver directed his son to lease a safe deposit box for Silver's cash and signed a statement authorizing his son's access to the box. The lease form was prepared by a bank employee, who indicated that it was a joint agreement. Without Silver's direction, consent, or knowledge, the son subsequently removed the cash and placed it in his own safe deposit box in the same bank. Silver died 8 days later, and the personal representative sought to recover the cash, a substantial portion of which Silver had bequeathed to a charitable foundation. The District Court allowed the personal representative and a family friend to testify regarding statements that Silver made to them about the cash and its disposition. The court also admitted extrinsic evidence regarding the safe deposit box lease, holding that the fact that the lease form was prepared by a bank employee was relevant to interpretation of the document. The son alleged error on both issues, contending that the cash was a jointly held asset. The Supreme Court, citing Thompson v. Steinkamp, 120 M 475, 187 P2d 1018 (1947), and Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035 (1982), found that the contested testimony put into context Silver's lease of the box and constituted evidence of Silver's intent to retain ownership of the cash. The fact that Silver did not select the form of lease or check the box on the lease form was supported by substantial credible evidence and was not clearly erroneous. Nevertheless, the son cited 70-1-308 for the contention that the cash was a jointly held asset. However, both the lease agreement and the statute provided for joint access to and possession of the safe deposit box and its contents, but not for joint ownership of the contents. Moreover, the language regarding the rights of surviving joint tenants did not apply here because Silver was still alive when the cash was removed. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the cash was not a jointly held asset by virtue of the agreement or the statute. The son could cite no contract theory under which he could be declared the owner of the cash, so the District Court did not err in applying gift theory rather than contract theory in determining ownership of the contents of the box or in concluding that the cash was not a gift to the son, based on the fact that Silver retained ownership. The District Court properly awarded the contents of the box to the estate. In re Estate of Silver, 2000 MT 127, 299 M 506, 1 P3d 358, 57 St. Rep. 526 (2000), distinguishing Malek v. Patten, 208 M 237, 678 P2d 201 (1984).

Law Governing Personal Property Decided by Situs of Property and Domicile of Owner — Tenancy by the Entirety Impermissible Mode of Personal Property Ownership in Montana: A Montana District Court determined that personal property jointly owned by Lurie and her husband as tenancy by the entirety in Missouri was owned by them either as joint tenancy property or as tenancy in common property after the couple moved to Montana. The property was subject to execution to satisfy a judgment against the husband on a validly issued writ. Lurie contended that as tenancy by the entirety property, it was not subject to execution to satisfy a judgment against the husband only, because Missouri law followed the personal property and should be applied in Montana. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court was correct in determining that the law governing personal property is decided by the situs of the property and the domicile of the owner, so Montana law applied. Further, under Clark v. Clark, 143 M 183, 387 P2d 907 (1963), tenancy by the entirety is not a permissible mode of real property ownership in Montana, and the District Court properly extended the reasoning in Clark with equal force to personal property in Lurie's case. Lurie v. Sheriff, 2000 MT 103, 299 M 283, 999 P2d 342, 57 St. Rep. 414 (2000), distinguishing Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998).

Interest Created in Bank Accounts Determined by Language on Signature Cards: The lower court ruled that an ambiguity existed as to whether two of the deceased's bank accounts were created as joint tenancies or tenancies in common. The Supreme Court held that no ambiguity existed because the language on the account signature cards clearly showed that one was a joint tenancy and the other was a tenancy in common. The Supreme Court stated that on one signature card, it was expressly stated that the account was a joint tenancy and the parties' signing of the card had to be interpreted as manifesting the intent to create a joint tenancy. The Supreme Court also noted that the other card described the account as a "joint" account but that such language did not show an express intent to create a joint tenancy. Therefore, the parties were tenants in common with respect to the second account. In re Estate of Hill, 281 M 142, 931 P2d 1320, 54 St. Rep. 101 (1997).

Living Trust — Judicial Construction of Trust Documents — Determination of Share in Cotenancy: Clifford and his wife Mary established a living trust for the benefit of their family. The trust documents established a family bypass trust to be funded by the remainder of Clifford's separate trust and the remainder of Clifford's interest in the marital trust estate. All of the property in Clifford's separate trust had been bequeathed, so it was necessary to determine Clifford's interest in the marital trust estate in order to determine the amount in the family bypass trust. Expenses for Clifford's funeral were to be paid from the "trust estate", and because the only money in the "trust estate" was in the marital trust estate, the Supreme Court concluded that the funeral expenses had to be deducted from the marital trust estate. The District Court determined and the Supreme Court agreed that Clifford's interest as a cotenant in the remaining money in the marital trust estate was the interest of a joint tenant entitled under this section to an equal share in certain accounts in a bank because there was no proof to the contrary. The Supreme Court concluded that Clifford was a joint tenant in an account at the credit union and, although there is a presumption that the shares of either a joint tenant or tenant in common are equal, Clifford's children had presented sufficient proof, through proof of unequal contributions by Clifford and Mary to the account, to rebut the presumption. The Supreme Court held that Clifford did not intend to give his unequal contribution to the credit union account to Mary as a gift but intended that his unequal contribution to the credit union account be used to fund the marital trust estate and that the marital trust estate, minus funeral expenses, costs, and attorney fees, be used as the principal of the family bypass trust for the benefit of Clifford's children. In re Estate of Dern, 279 M 138, 928 P2d 123, 53 St. Rep. 1087 (1996), followed in Tipp v. Skjelset, 285 M 274, 947 P2d 480, 54 St. Rep. 1147 (1997), and Flood v. Kalinyaprak, 2004 MT 15, 319 M 280, 84 P3d 27 (2004).

"Payable on Death" Designation Negates Joint Tenancy Language on CD Form: The deceased's personal representative was his granddaughter, who was also the person named as the payable on death (POD) beneficiary of the deceased on several certificates of deposit (CDs). The granddaughter obtained a ruling from the District Court that she was a joint tenant with the right of survivorship with respect to the CDs, based upon the language on the CD forms specifically stating that the persons named on the CD were joint tenants. The Supreme Court held that a joint tenancy must be created by specific unambiguous language and that the POD designation on the CDs created an ambiguity negating the joint tenancy language. The Supreme Court further held that the POD language meant that the granddaughter could not have a present interest in the CDs at the time that the CDs were obtained by the deceased and that they could not pass to her under the principles of joint tenancy. The Supreme Court ruled that the POD designation acted to transfer the CDs to the granddaughter outside of the probate estate as a nontestamentary transfer. Placing Person's Name on Brand Certificate Not Evidence of Joint Tenancy: Ron Shaw claimed that cattle owned by his deceased parents were his property as a joint tenant because his name was on the brand certificate. The Supreme Court held that although a person's name on the certificate was prima facie evidence of ownership, it did not address the nature of that ownership and that a joint tenancy could only be created by an express declaration that the parties are creating a joint tenancy. In re Estate of Shaw, 259 M 117, 855 P2d 105, 50 St. Rep. 709 (1993).

Joint Tenancy Not Terminated by Violation of Four Unities or by Divorce: The decedent and his first wife sold certain real property on a contract while they were still married. The contract specifically referred to them as joint tenants. The decedent's second wife was the executor of his estate and listed one-half of the contract proceeds as property of the estate. The second wife argued that when the decedent and his first wife split the proceeds after their divorce, the joint tenancy was destroyed because one of the four unities (the unity of interest) was violated. The Supreme Court held that rigid requirements of the common-law doctrine of the four unities were not part of Montana's statutory law on property. The court also held that divorce does not terminate a joint tenancy. In re Estate of Sander, 247 M 328, 806 P2d 545, 48 St. Rep. 221 (1991).

Interest in Negotiable Instruments Not Joint Tenancy Interest: To create a joint tenancy interest in a negotiable instrument, there must be an express declaration in the instrument declaring the ownership to be a joint tenancy in order to comply with 70-1-307. In this case, the Supreme Court affirmed a District Court decision, on remand, that the Uniform Commercial Code (Title 30, ch. 1 through 9) does not provide for joint tenancy interests in negotiable instruments made payable to more than one person and that the use of the term "joint payee" does not create a joint tenancy interest. Stapleton v. First Sec. Bank, 219 M 323, 711 P2d 1364, 42 St. Rep. 2056 (1985), modifying Stapleton v. First Sec. Bank, 207 M 248, 675 P2d 83, 40 St. Rep. 2015 (1983).

Death of Partner — Disposition of Property Held Jointly by Partners: Robert and William, brothers, opened a joint checking account in 1947, paid all ranch expenses through the account, put all ranch income in the account, and equally split net profits. All cattle were branded with either of two brands, each of which was registered in the name of "William Palmer or Robert Palmer". The brothers were also joint tenants in a commodity brokerage account. The Supreme Court held that the cattle and both accounts were partnership property not held in joint tenancy and remained so upon Robert's death. Thus, they did not pass to William as the surviving joint tenant; rather, they remained in the partnership for the purpose of winding up the partnership and paying its liabilities, after which William must account to Robert's survivor, his widow, for Robert's share of the partnership. By its very nature, partnership property must be treated differently than property of individuals, including property held by individuals as joint tenants but who are not in partnership. This rule applies regardless of the formal legal manner in which the property is held. This is a rule of equity developed over hundreds of years and codified in the Uniform Partnership Act. In re Estate of Palmer, 218 M 285, 708 P2d 242, 42 St. Rep. 1585 (1985), followed in Fiedler v. Fiedler, 266 M 133, 879 P2d 675, 51 St. Rep. 691 (1994).

Extrinsic Evidence of Ownership of Joint Bank Account Inadmissible When Third-Party Rights Involved: Evidence of the intent of the parties with respect to ownership of funds in a joint bank account is admissible only in a dispute between those parties and not when the dispute involves the rights of a third party. Univ. of Mont. v. Coe, 217 M 234, 704 P2d 1029, 42 St. Rep. 1160 (1985), distinguished in Seman v. Lewis, 252 M 508, 830 P2d 1294, 49 St. Rep. 206 (1992), in which extrinsic evidence regarding intent was held admissible because it was submitted to supplement rather than contradict the uncertain terms of the signature card. See also In re Estate of Hill, 281 M 142, 931 P2d 1320, 54 St. Rep. 101 (1997), partially overruling Seman v. Lewis respecting use of extrinsic evidence in contradiction to 70-1-314.

Language on Savings Account Signature Card Not Conclusive: A son was added as a joint tenant on his mother's savings accounts by signing the savings institution's signature card. The card contained language declaring one-half the deposit a gift to the joint tenant. The mother later brought an action against her son, asserting that she never intended to gift any portion of the accounts to her son but merely to allow him to withdraw money for her expenses if needed. Because the mother raised the issue of ownership of funds in a joint tenancy account during her lifetime, the language on the signature card was not conclusive. Additional evidence could be examined to ascertain the true intent of the parties. Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035, 39 St. Rep. 273 (1982).

Elements of Joint Tenancy: The essential characteristic of a joint tenancy is the right of survivorship. Casagranda v. Donahue, 178 M 479, 585 P2d 1286 (1978), followed in Vogele v. Estate of Schock, 229 M 259, 745 P2d 1138, 44 St. Rep. 1950 (1987).

Joint Bank Accounts: A joint bank account has the special attribute which allows either joint owner, by virtue of the contract with the bank, to acquire dominion over the entire account by drawing a proper order on the bank. Nevertheless, a joint bank account is otherwise subject to the same rules as other joint tenancies. The joint account signature card settles the question of the parties' intent as to ownership, and evidence as to contrary oral agreements may not be considered. Casagranda v. Donahue, 178 M 479, 585 P2d 1286 (1978), distinguished in Seman v. Lewis, 252 M 508, 830 P2d 1294, 49 St. Rep. 206 (1992), and followed in In re Estate of Dern, 279 M 138, 928 P2d 123, 53 St. Rep. 1087 (1996).

"And/Or" — Joint Tenancy: In Montana an ownership document showing title in two or more persons "and/or" has the effect of creating a joint tenancy estate with right of survivorship. This applies to personal property, not real estate. First Westside Nat'l Bank v. Llera, 176 M 481, 580 P2d 100 (1978).

Joint Tenancy Auto Title — Effect on Default: When defendant borrowed from plaintiff on auto collateral registered in his "and/or" another's name, the plaintiff bank was entitled to sell the auto upon defendant's default and receive one-half of the proceeds even though the bank's security interest was unperfected at the time of defendant's fraudulent assignment of his interest to his sister without value. The joint tenancy interest of the defendant was severed upon his default, and the bank became tenant in common with the holder of the remaining interest in the auto. First Westside Nat'l Bank v. Llera, 176 M 481, 580 P2d 100 (1978).

Ownership of Cattle:

Although under this section and 81-3-105 prima facie owners of recorded brand have the same interest in the cattle bearing their brand as shown in brand record, joint ownership of the cattle may be contradicted and overcome by other evidence under 26-1-102(5). Marshall v. Minlschmidt, 148 M 263, 419 P2d 486 (1966).

Prima facie showing of one-third interest in partnership cattle arising from recording of brand in name of three persons was overcome, in action by administrator of estate of deceased partner against surviving partners to recover assets transferred by deceased during his last illness, by evidence that deceased had a half interest in partnership cattle and failure of defendants to produce any of the partnership records. Marshall v. Minlschmidt, 148 M 263, 419 P2d 486 (1966).

Proceeds From Contract for Sale of Real Estate Deposited in Joint Bank Account: Provision in testatrix's real estate sales contract whereby payments were to be deposited in a certain bank account subject to draft by testatrix and her husband or either of them or their survivor did not create a joint tenancy in the interest of the property being conveyed. The contract containing no express declaration establishing a joint tenancy in the property being sold thereunder as required by this section, the vendor's interest in the contract passed into testatrix's estate under 70-1-314. Moxley v. Vaughn, 148 M 30, 416 P2d 536 (1966).

Estates by Entirety: While a joint tenancy is a joint interest, a joint interest is not limited to the estate of joint tenancy but may include estates by entirety. However, estates by the entirety are no longer a permissible mode of property ownership in this state, and where husband and wife took under a deed to them "as joint tenants with right of survivorship and not as tenants in common", the property was held in a joint tenancy and this was not converted by divorce into a tenancy in common. Clark v. Clark, 143 M 183, 387 P2d 907 (1963), followed in Lurie v. Sheriff, 2000 MT 103, 299 M 283, 999 P2d 342, 57 St. Rep. 414 (2000), in which tenancy by the entirety as applied to personal property was held an impermissible mode of ownership in Montana in the same way that tenancy by the entirety as applied to real property was held impermissible in Clark.

Shares of Stock Held in Joint Tenancy — Not Included in Estate of Deceased: Stocks issued in names of deceased and his children as joint tenants with right of survivorship and not as tenants in common and deposited in safety deposit boxes rented in the names of the owners who had inspected the stock in the safety deposit boxes and included dividends from stocks in individual income tax returns were delivered by the donor to the donees and did not belong to deceased at the time of his death so as to be a part of his estate. Marans v. Newland, 141 M 32, 374 P2d 721 (1962).

Joint Tenancy and Right of Survivorship: A conveyance to persons in joint tenancy carries with it the common-law right of survivorship since Legislature did not abrogate that right as an incidence of joint tenancy. Hennigh v. Hennigh, 131 M 372, 309 P2d 1022 (1957).

70-1-308. Safe deposit box — joint tenancy.

Case Notes

Contents of Safe Deposit Box Not Considered Jointly Held Asset: Silver directed his son to lease a safe deposit box for Silver's cash and signed a statement authorizing his son's access to the box. The lease form was prepared by a bank employee, who indicated that it was a joint agreement. Without Silver's direction, consent, or knowledge, the son subsequently removed the cash and placed it in his own safe deposit box in the same bank. Silver died 8 days later, and the personal representative sought to recover the cash, a substantial portion of which Silver had bequeathed to a charitable foundation. The District Court allowed the personal representative and a family friend to testify regarding statements that Silver made to them about the cash and its disposition. The court also admitted extrinsic evidence regarding the safe deposit box lease, holding that the fact that the lease form was prepared by a bank employee was relevant to interpretation of the document. The son alleged error on both issues, contending that the cash was a jointly held asset. The Supreme Court, citing Thompson v. Steinkamp, 120 M 475, 187 P2d 1018 (1947), and Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035 (1982), found that the contested testimony put into context Silver's lease of the box and constituted evidence of Silver's intent to retain ownership of the cash. The fact that Silver did not select the form of lease or check the box on the lease form was supported by substantial credible evidence and was not clearly erroneous. Nevertheless, the son cited this section for the contention that the cash was a jointly held asset. However, both the lease agreement and the statute provided for joint access to and possession of the safe deposit box and its contents, but not for joint ownership of the contents. Moreover, the language regarding the rights of surviving joint tenants did not apply here because Silver was still alive when the cash was removed. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the cash was not a jointly held asset by virtue of the agreement or the statute. The son could cite no contract theory under which he could be declared the owner of the cash, so the District Court did not err in applying gift theory rather than contract theory in determining ownership of the contents of the box or in concluding that the cash was not a gift to the son, based on the fact that Silver retained ownership. The District Court properly awarded the contents of the box to the estate. In re Estate of Silver, 2000 MT 127, 299 M 506, 1 P3d 358, 57 St. Rep. 526 (2000), distinguishing Malek v. Patten, 208 M 237, 678 P2d 201 (1984).

Joint Tenancy in Certificates Held in Joint Safe Deposit Box Upheld — Single Signature on Bank Card and Possession of Key Held Immaterial: The decedent sister of the plaintiff had purchased certificates of deposit made payable to the decedent or her defendant husband, but only the decedent signed the bank card for the certificates, which were placed in a jointly held safe deposit box to which only the decedent held a key. In an action brought by the decedent's brother for the value of the certificates, the Supreme Court held that the placement of the certificates in a jointly held safe deposit box, together with the fact that the certificates were issued in the name of the decedent or the defendant, established the husband's ownership of the certificates. The court held it was immaterial that only the decedent held a key to the box and had signed the bank card of deposit. Malek v. Patten, 208 M 237, 678 P2d 201, 41 St. Rep. 305 (1984).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

No Authority for One Cotenant to Sue for Entire Amount of Damages: A tenant in common may bring or defend an action in vindication of the tenant's own rights without enjoining other cotenants as necessary parties. However, absent an authorized agency relationship between cotenants, there is no authority for one cotenant to sue for the entire amount of tort damages to both himself and another cotenant in a personal action arising out of the tenancy. Therefore, it was error to dismiss one cotenant from a fraud case and then award the entire amount of damages to the other cotenant, because the effect of the award was to grant damages to a person who was not a plaintiff at the time of judgment. Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993). Because the underlying action was for personal damages, not property damages, the District Court properly determined on remand that plaintiff was entitled to only 50% of the personal damages arising from defendant's fraud, even though the cotenant quitclaimed all property interests to plaintiff. However, the court miscalculated the amount of accrued interest owing, so the case was remanded for a recalculation of damages. Dew v. Dower, 269 M 286, 888 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1388 (1994).

Breach of Joint Venture Fiduciary Trust — Award of Investment Plus Interest Affirmed: Kelly and Rust agreed to purchase land, subdivide it, and sell it at a profit. Rust advanced Kelly $4,000 as one-half the purchase price. Kelly paid the $4,000 balance and recorded the deed, but did not include Rust on the recorded deed. Rust moved from the area and later attempted, through his agent, to purchase Kelly's interest in the land. The agent was told the land was already sold, so Rust brought an action to recover his investment plus interest. The trial court properly held that: (1) the parties had entered into a joint venture; (2) Kelly was required in equity to hold the property in a constructive trust; (3) Kelly breached the joint venture fiduciary duty and attempted to deprive Rust of his interest in the property; and (4) Rust was entitled to return of his $4,000 investment plus interest. Rust v. Kelly, 228 M 220, 741 P2d 786, 44 St. Rep. 1471 (1987).

Unlawful Detainer by Tenant in Common — Amendment of Pleading Properly Denied: Where the plaintiff and her sister leased farmland they owned as tenants in common to the defendant for a 6-year period and the sister conveyed her interest in the property to the defendant shortly before the expiration of the lease, the court did not err, in an action by the plaintiff brought in 1974 for an accounting of rents and profits from the defendant, in refusing to allow the plaintiff to plead and prove an unlawful detainer against the defendant. Leave of court should not be granted to allow amendments that present theories totally inapplicable to the case. As a tenant in common is an owner of an undivided interest in the property, a claim of unlawful detainer may not be asserted against a cotenant, but only against a tenant for a term less than life. A cotenant is allowed to possess and use commonly held property, and an action will lie for waste but not unpermitted use. Fry v. Heble, 191 M 272, 623 P2d 963, 38 St. Rep. 228 (1981).

Assignor Bringing Action: Assignee of one-half interest of an overriding royalty agreement with plaintiff-assignor and defendant could not be joined as a party plaintiff in a suit to compel defendant to pay the other half interest to plaintiff whether assignor was a trustee for the assignee or they were tenants in common. Lowe & Lynn v. Flank Oil Co., 144 M 499, 398 P2d 608 (1965).

Purchaser Under Contract: Where plaintiff in action to quiet title claimed to be the owner of an entire leasehold in oil lands but proof showed he entered into an agreement with another to convey an undivided one-half interest to him, unexecuted, the latter became a tenant in common with plaintiff in the ownership of the leasehold and as such could, in prosecuting or defending actions concerning the common property, treat it as his own against everyone except his cotenant. Nadeau v. Texas Co., 104 M 558, 69 P2d 586 (1937), distinguished in Stumps v. Fidelity Gas Co., 294 F2d 886 (9th Cir. 1961).

Death of Partner — Disposition of Property Held Jointly by Partners: Robert and William, brothers, opened a joint checking account in 1947, paid all ranch expenses through the account, put all ranch income in the account, and equally split net profits. All cattle were branded with either of two brands, each of which was registered in the name of "William Palmer or Robert Palmer". The brothers were also joint tenants in a commodity brokerage account. Thus, they did not pass to William as the surviving joint tenant; rather, they remained in the partnership for the purpose of winding up the partnership and paying its liabilities, after which William must account to Robert's survivor, his widow, for Robert's share of the partnership. By its very nature, partnership property must be treated differently than property of individuals, including property held by individuals as joint tenants but who are not in partnership. This rule applies regardless of the formal legal manner in which the property is held. This is a rule of equity developed over hundreds of years and codified in the Uniform Partnership Act. 70-1-313. Interest in common defined.

Case Notes

Cotenants' Equal Access and Use Rights: Cotenants have a right of equal access and use of property held in common. Jarrett v. Jarrett, 202 M 471, 659 P2d 839, 40 St. Rep. 222 (1983).

Lease of Land Held in Common: It is a well-settled principle of law that to make a binding lease of the whole of a piece of property held in common, all the tenants in common must join in the lease. Neither the entire property nor any specific part of it can be leased by one tenant unless he is authorized by all the other tenants to do so. Jarrett v. Jarrett, 202 M 471, 659 P2d 839, 40 St. Rep. 222 (1983).

Tenancy in Common Created: A "tenancy in common" is created whenever the instrument bringing an estate in two or more persons into existence does not specifically state that the estate created is other than a tenancy in common. Ivins v. Hardy, 120 M 35, 179 P2d 745 (1947).

Mineral Rights — Ingress and Egress Implied: Where decree in quiet title action in effect declared defendant a tenant in common with plaintiff under an assignment of a certain percent of the minerals in the land but failed to adjudge in him a right of ingress and egress for the purpose of exploration, his right in that respect would be implied in the decree, since necessary implication is as much a part of an instrument as if it were plainly expressed. Hochsprung v. Stevenson, 82 M 222, 266 P 406 (1928).

Irrigation Ditch: Where plaintiff in an action to enjoin another from using an irrigation ditch owned only an undivided interest therein and defendant over whose land it ran owned the remaining interest, they were tenants in common and each was entitled to use the ditch, being bound to exercise his right so as not to interfere with the other's right. Rodda v. Best, 68 M 205, 217 P 669 (1923). See also Isom v. Larson, 78 M 395, 255 P 1049 (1927).

70-1-314. Interest in common — how created.

Case Notes

Initialing Estate Inventory Not Judicial Admission That Bank Accounts Estate Property: The lower court ruled that an ambiguity existed as to whether two of the deceased's bank accounts were created as joint tenancies or tenancies in common. The Supreme Court held that no ambiguity existed because the language on the account signature cards clearly showed that one was a joint tenancy and the other was a tenancy in common. The Supreme Court also ruled that the fact that one of the parties had initialed the estate inventory was not an acquiescence to having the joint tenancy treated as property of the estate. The Supreme Court held that the lower court erred in holding that initialing the document in a probate action constituted a judicial admission barring that party from arguing that the property was not part of the estate because a judicial admission must be made during the litigation in which it is sought to be enforced as an admission. In re Estate of Hill, 281 M 142, 931 P2d 1320, 54 St. Rep. 101 (1997).

Interest Created in Bank Accounts Determined by Language on Signature Cards: The lower court ruled that an ambiguity existed as to whether two of the deceased's bank accounts were created as joint tenancies or tenancies in common. The Supreme Court held that no ambiguity existed because the language on the account signature cards clearly showed that one was a joint tenancy and the other was a tenancy in common. The Supreme Court stated that on one signature card, it was expressly stated that the account was a joint tenancy and the parties' signing of the card had to be interpreted as manifesting the intent to create a joint tenancy. The Supreme Court also noted that the other card described the account as a "joint" account but that such language did not show an express intent to create a joint tenancy. Therefore, the parties were tenants in common with respect to the second account. In re Estate of Hill, 281 M 142, 931 P2d 1320, 54 St. Rep. 101 (1997).

"Payable on Death" Designation Negates Joint Tenancy Language on CD Form: The deceased's personal representative was his granddaughter, who was also the person named as the payable on death (POD) beneficiary of the deceased on several certificates of deposit (CDs). The granddaughter obtained a ruling from the District Court that she was a joint tenant with the right of survivorship with respect to the CDs, based upon the language on the CD forms specifically stating that the persons named on the CD were joint tenants. The Supreme Court held that a joint tenancy must be created by specific unambiguous language and that the POD designation on the CDs created an ambiguity negating the joint tenancy language. The Supreme Court further held that the POD language meant that the granddaughter could not have a present interest in the CDs at the time that the CDs were obtained by the deceased and that they could not pass to her under the principles of joint tenancy. The Supreme Court ruled that the POD designation acted to transfer the CDs to the granddaughter outside of the probate estate as a nontestamentary transfer. In re Estate of Lahren, 268 M 284, 886 P2d 412, 51 St. Rep. 1311 (1994), following In re Estate of Shaw, 259 M 117, 855 P2d 105 (1993). See also In re Estate of Hill, 281 M 142, 931 P2d 1320, 54 St. Rep. 101 (1997).

Placing Person's Name on Brand Certificate Not Evidence of Joint Tenancy: Ron Shaw claimed that cattle owned by his deceased parents were his property as a joint tenant because his name was on the brand certificate. The Supreme Court held that although a person's name on the certificate was prima facie evidence of ownership, it did not address the nature of that ownership and that a joint tenancy could only be created by an express declaration that the parties are creating a joint tenancy. In re Estate of Shaw, 259 M 117, 855 P2d 105, 50 St. Rep. 709 (1993).

Joint Tenancy Not Terminated by Violation of Four Unities or by Divorce: The decedent and his first wife sold certain real property on a contract while they were still married. The contract specifically referred to them as joint tenants. The decedent's second wife was the executor of his estate and listed one-half of the contract proceeds as property of the estate. The second wife argued that when the decedent and his first wife split the proceeds after their divorce, the joint tenancy was destroyed because one of the four unities (the unity of interest) was violated. The Supreme Court held that rigid requirements of the common-law doctrine of the four unities were not part of Montana's statutory law on property. The court also held that divorce does not terminate a joint tenancy. In re Estate of Sander, 247 M 328, 806 P2d 545, 48 St. Rep. 221 (1991).

Extrinsic Evidence of Ownership of Joint Bank Account Inadmissible When Third-Party Rights Involved: Evidence of the intent of the parties with respect to ownership of funds in a joint bank account is admissible only in a dispute between those parties and not when the dispute involves the rights of a third party. Univ. of Mont. v. Coe, 217 M 234, 704 P2d 1029, 42 St. Rep. 1160 (1985), distinguished in Seman v. Lewis, 252 M 508, 830 P2d 1294, 49 St. Rep. 206 (1992), in which extrinsic evidence regarding intent was held admissible because it was submitted to supplement rather than contradict the uncertain terms of the signature card.

"And/Or" — Joint Tenancy: In Montana an ownership document showing title in two or more persons "and/or" has the effect of creating a joint tenancy estate with right of survivorship. This applies to personal property, not real estate. First Westside Nat'l Bank v. Llera, 176 M 481, 580 P2d 100 (1978).

Proceeds of Contract for Sale of Real Estate Deposited in Joint Account — Joint Tenancy Not Created: Provision in testatrix's real estate sales contract whereby payments were to be deposited in a certain bank account subject to draft by testatrix and her husband or either of them or their survivor did not create a joint tenancy in the interest in the property being conveyed. The contract containing no express declaration establishing a joint tenancy in the property as required by 70-1-309 (now repealed), the vendor's interest in the contract of sale passed into the testatrix's estate. Moxley v. Vaughn, 148 M 30, 416 P2d 536 (1966).

Joint Tenancy and Right to Survivorship: By this section the Legislature recognized the difference between joint interests and interests in common and left people free to contract in either manner. A joint tenancy is a joint interest, and the Legislature did not abrogate the common-law right of survivorship incident to a joint tenancy. Hennigh v. Hennigh, 131 M 372, 309 P2d 1022 (1957).

Tenants in Common When No Evidence of Purchase as Copartners: Where there was no indication in contract of purchase of ranch property that purchasers were buying as copartners, their relationship, so far as ownership of realty was concerned, became prima facie that of "tenants in common" rather than that of "partnership". Ivins v. Hardy, 120 M 35, 179 P2d 745 (1947).

Tenants in Common: Husband and wife who admittedly owned realty at time they executed a deed were, under this section, tenants in common, each owning an undivided one-half interest therein. Isom v. Larson, 78 M 395, 255 P 1049 (1927).

70-1-319. Mere possibility not an interest.

Case Notes

Enacting Common Law — Power of Court of Equity Not Changed: This section and 70-1-505 are simply declaratory of the common law, under which such intangible rights or interests as those mentioned in these sections cannot be transferred; but it was not the intention of the Legislature in enacting those sections to make any change in the rule by which courts of equity were theretofore governed in dealing with this class of contracts. Winslow v. Dundom, 46 M 71, 125 P 136 (1912).

Montana to Use California Construction: Since this section is identical in terms with a section of the California Civil Code, the presumption must be indulged that in adopting it the Legislature intended that the same construction should prevail in this jurisdiction as prevailed in California. Winslow v. Dundom, 46 M 71, 125 P 136 (1912).

Reversionary Interest or Possibility of Reverter: The reversionary interest an owner of oil land has on termination of a lease, or the possibility of reverter, is a vested interest which may be conveyed, and the time when the enjoyment shall begin may be made to depend upon a future event. Krutzfeld v. Stevenson, 86 M 463, 284 P 553 (1930).

70-1-405. Conditions restraining alienation void.

Case Notes

Right of First Refusal — Unreasonable Restraint on Alienation: A right of first refusal that fixed the sale value and required the personal representatives or heirs of the property sellers to give buyers notice within 6 months of the seller's death was reasonable. However, the right could be interpreted to go on in perpetuity if notice was not given, which constituted an unreasonable restraint on alienation, repugnant to the interests of the buyers, and thus was void. A restraint that tends to increase the value of the property or that is imposed on property that is otherwise unmarketable is considered more reasonable, but in this case, the restraint decreased the property value by fixing the price at a greatly depreciated value in an area where the property would be highly marketable without the fixed price restraint. Urquhart v. Teller, 1998 MT 119, 288 M 497, 958 P2d 714, 55 St. Rep. 461 (1998).

Restraints on Alienation Valid When Reasonable: The District Court erroneously held that a repurchase option granted to sellers was void as a matter of law. The court erred in interpreting 70-1-405 as an absolute prohibition against any restraint on the alienation of real property. The provision is a statement of the common-law rule that restraints on alienation, when reasonable, are valid. Among factors to be considered when determining the reasonableness of any restraint are price and the intent of the parties contracting for the preemptive right. The Restatement of Property, section 406, comment "i", sets forth various factors that may be considered when determining the reasonableness of any restraint. Edgar v. Hunt, 218 M 30, 706 P2d 120, 42 St. Rep. 1372 (1985), followed in Baker v. Berger, 265 M 21, 873 P2d 940, 51 St. Rep. 389 (1994), and Urquhart v. Teller, 1998 MT 119, 288 M 497, 958 P2d 714, 55 St. Rep. 461 (1998).

Meaning of "Property of Another" — Arson Statute: Property which defendant had conveyed to his son by quitclaim deed with the conditions that the property would revert to the defendant if the son died before him and that the property could not be sold by the son during the defendant's lifetime is "property of another" for the purposes of a criminal prosecution under 45-6-103. St. v. Berklund, 217 M 218, 704 P2d 59, 42 St. Rep. 1147 (1985).

Justiciable Controversy Required: The parties were all heirs of Robert Hardy. He created trusts that became operative upon his death. The trusts were terminated, and the heirs entered negotiations for the division of a ranch making up the corpus of the trust. An agreement was entered dividing the ranch into seven tracts. The agreement provided that prior to the sale of any tract the other six heirs were to be given the right of first refusal. If all declined and a contract was entered into with a third party, all six had the right to meet the offer, with the first to accept to be given priority. The plaintiffs filed a complaint for declaratory relief seeking to have the provisions on first refusal declared an unreasonable restraint on alienation. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court remanded with instructions to dismiss. The court held that there was no justiciable controversy as no attempts had been made to sell any of the tracts. The court held that the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act could not be used as a platform for the courts in Montana to plunge into indefinite, amorphous ponds of contract interpretation. Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274, 40 St. Rep. 1823 (1983).

Provision Against Transfer Without Consent: Provision in contract for deed prohibiting transfer without seller's consent was not repugnant to this section. Dobitz v. Oakland, 172 M 126, 561 P2d 441 (1977).

Agreement Not to Sell Except to Grantor — Void: Typewritten statement, added to a printed warranty deed, that grantees agreed not to sell or dispose of land except to grantors or their heirs violated this section and did not limit the interest conveyed to a life estate. In re Vincent's Estate, 133 M 424, 324 P2d 403 (1958).

Part Case Notes

Reservation of Easement Held Sufficient — Wild Rivers and Ruana Distinguished: The Andersons, as the buyers, entered into a buy-sell agreement with the Rankins, as the sellers, that stated that the Rankins were "keeping an easement 30' Wide" across the property sold to the Andersons. Later, the Andersons entered into a contract for deed with the Rankins that attached an Exhibit "A". Exhibit "A" stated that the property was purchased "[s]ubject however, to reservation of an easement of right of way with ingress and egress" by the Rankins and then described the easement. A notice of purchasers' interest was later signed by both parties and recorded with the county with the same Exhibit "A" attached. Still later, a warranty deed was filed that stated that the property acquired by the Andersons was subject to the easement reserved by the Rankins. At the same time, the Andersons recorded a homestead exemption that reserved the 30-foot easement for the Rankins. Subsequently, the Rankins sold property to the Reichles through a buy-sell agreement and warranty deed, both of which noted that the Reichles would be able to use the Anderson-Rankin 30-foot easement as a public road for access to the Reichles' property. After the Reichles notified the Andersons that the Reichles intended to fence off the easement and graze llamas, the Rankins notified the Reichles' attorney that the Reichles would not be allowed any further use of the easement. The Reichles brought a declaratory judgment action against the Andersons and the Rankins for enforcement of the right-of-way easement. The Supreme Court, distinguishing the "subject to" language at issue in Wild Rivers Adventures, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees, 248 M 397, 812 P2d 344 (1991), and Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247 (1996), held that the language of Exhibit "A" with its "reservation" of an easement was sufficient to reserve that easement when the Rankins' property was conveyed to the Andersons and that the Rankins could later convey that easement to the Reichles. Reichle v. Anderson, 284 M 384, 943 P2d 1324, 54 St. Rep. 930 (1997).

Creation of Negative Easement Notwithstanding Absence of Conveyance: A written agreement in the form of a court settlement not to use property as a restaurant and bar creates a valid and enforceable covenant which runs with the land and which is binding on each of the parties and their successors in interest notwithstanding absence of a conveyance of the estate to which the covenant pertains or words to that effect in the settlement agreement. The agreement was expressly intended to constitute a covenant running with the land and to bind the present owners, heirs, and assigns and was entered into voluntarily. A negative easement, as was created here, can be created by a grant (conveyance) or agreement; the agreement being construed as a grant is binding upon purchasers of the servient tenement who have actual or constructive notice of it. Reichert v. Weeden, 190 M 95, 618 P2d 1216, 37 St. Rep. 1788 (1980).

70-1-501. Transfer defined.

Case Notes

Recording of Document Not Proof of Validity: The act of recording a document such as a deed or condominium declaration does not establish the document's validity simply because the County Clerk and Recorder's office accepted and recorded it. Etzler v. Flathead County, 2009 MT 367, 353 M 252, 220 P3d 395 (2009), following Elk Park Ranch, Inc. v. Park County, 282 M 154, 935 P2d 1131 (1997).

Division of Land by Deed in Which Grantor and Grantee Same Party — No Transfer of Title: A transfer of land requires a conveyance of title from one person to another. If the persons are the same, no transfer occurs. If there is no transfer, there is no division of land. Therefore, a landowner cannot divide a large parcel of land into smaller parcels by executing a deed in which the grantor and the grantee are the same party. Rocky Mtn. Timberlands, Inc. v. Lund, 265 M 463, 877 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 653 (1994), followed in Elk Park Ranch, Inc. v. Park County, 282 M 154, 935 P2d 1131, 54 St. Rep. 293 (1997).

70-1-502. Voluntary transfer — applicability of contract rules.

Case Notes

Validity of Voluntary Easement Affirmed: The Permanns requested that Urick grant an easement across Urick's property for the Permanns to go camping and move cattle, and Urick agreed. When Urick's sons discovered that the voluntary easement had been granted, they persuaded Urick to rescind the easement. Urick requested that the Permanns convey the easement back to her. They refused. Urick filed suit and then subsequently died. Urick's son Gliko, as trustee of Urick's estate, brought an action against the Permanns seeking to have the easement rescinded, citing mutual mistake, constructive fraud, undue influence, and lack of consideration. The District Court held that the easement was valid, and Gliko appealed. The Supreme Court considered each of Gliko's rescission arguments in turn. The language of the easement was simple and unambiguous, so there was no mutual mistake. Urick had testified by deposition that no misleading statements were made relating to the easement, so there was no constructive fraud. There was no confidential relationship between Urick and the Permanns, Urick was not possessed of weakness of mind, and no advantage was taken of Urick's necessities or distress, so there was no undue influence. Last, there was no evidence that consideration was meant to be given, so lack of consideration was not a valid ground for rescission. The District Court was affirmed. Gliko v. Permann, 2006 MT 30, 331 M 112, 130 P3d 155 (2006).

Assignment Not Prohibited by Contract — Mineral Development Contract Not So Personal or Unique as to Preclude Assignment: A contract for the development of a mineral interest did not prohibit assignment or delegation. Despite this fact, appellants argued out that an exception to the general rule (that rights arising under a contract are generally assignable unless prohibited by the contract) exists when the contract is personal in nature and an assignment would deprive a party of the benefit of his bargain. The Supreme Court acknowledged this exception but found that the duties imposed by the agreement were not so unique in the industry as to involve a degree of trust and confidence singularly personal to the contracting parties. Somont Oil, Inc. v. Nutter, 228 M 467, 743 P2d 1016, 44 St. Rep. 1685 (1987).

Consent to Contractual Assignment Refused — Breach of Contract: A contract for sale of real property provided that assignment could be accomplished only with written consent of the seller and that such consent could not be unreasonably withheld. The District Court properly found that the contract was breached by the seller's failure to provide a sufficient reason for refusing to consent to an assignment and that seller was therefore responsible for damages. Erban v. Monforton, 227 M 531, 740 P2d 677, 44 St. Rep. 1290 (1987).

Contract for Deed — Notifying Escrow Agent of Default: Seller under contract for deed did not have to notify the escrow agent as well as the buyers that payments were in default and the contract was terminated, because the contract only provided for notice to buyers and did not require notice to the escrow agent. More important, the contract gave buyers the right to pay the accelerated balance due within 90 days of receipt of the notice of default, the deed and other documents were held by and the payments were made to the escrow agent, and notice of default to the escrow agent would have prematurely closed the escrow account and denied the buyers the opportunity to pay off the contract within 90 days. Boles v. Ler, 222 M 28, 719 P2d 793, 43 St. Rep. 1035 (1986).

Contract for Deed — Seller's Right to Cancel After Accepting Late Payments to Escrow Agent: Buyers under contract for deed made three late payments to the escrow agent. The escrow agent's acceptance of the three checks was not acceptance by the seller under the theory that the escrow agent was the seller's agent and acceptance by the agent was acceptance by the principal, nor did seller's acceptance of the payments from the escrow agent ratify the agent's acceptance. Failure to promptly return the payments did not waive seller's right to cancel the contract. The contract gave buyers 90 days from notice of default to pay the balance due under the contract, and they could do so in more than one installment. Seller decided the three payments might be installments in an attempt to pay the balance due and decided to hold the checks until it became apparent that the buyers were either going to pay off the balance due or were attempting to induce seller to waive her right to cancel the contract. Seller returned the checks when she realized the latter was the motive. In addition, seller sent a second cancellation notice, making it clear what her intent was. Boles v. Ler, 222 M 28, 719 P2d 793, 43 St. Rep. 1035 (1986).

Execution and Delivery of Quitclaim Deed Supported in Evidence — Effect: The District Court found that a quitclaim deed was executed and delivered by the Morins to the Mapstons before a typewritten note was signed by Mapstons to convey the subject property to Morins. This central finding of fact was held to be clearly supported in the evidence. The legal effect of the finding is that the quitclaim deed constituted a gift to Mapstons, no consideration being necessary. The transfer vested all actual title which Morins then had, since no different intention was expressed or necessarily implied. The typewritten note cannot be specifically enforced by Morins because they had not received an adequate consideration for the contract and because the contract lacks mutuality. Moreover, no involuntary trust was created. Morin v. Mapston, 217 M 403, 705 P2d 118, 42 St. Rep. 1283 (1985).

Action to Set Aside Quitclaim Deed — No Failure of Consideration Proved: The plaintiff, son of a deceased rancher, received 24 ½% of the surface rights to his father's ranch in accordance with the terms of an estate plan established for the benefit of the plaintiff and his brothers, the defendants. Upon leaving the ranch, plaintiff executed one quitclaim deed to his mineral interest in 1977 and one quitclaim deed to his surface interest in 1968 in exchange for a promise that the defendants would hold him harmless on a promissory note. The District Court did not err (in a subsequent challenge by the plaintiff to the validity of the quitclaim deeds) in declaring both deeds to be valid and denying the plaintiff any interest in the ranch. The facts and law do not support the plaintiff's contention that there was a failure of consideration for his signing the two quitclaim deeds. First, 28-2-1711 is not applicable, because under 70-1-502 consideration for the transfer of real property is not required. Second, the facts of the case show that the plaintiff was indemnified for signing the two deeds by the defendants' agreement to hold the plaintiff harmless on the promissory note. That is sufficient consideration. Turley v. Turley, 199 M 265, 649 P2d 434, 39 St. Rep. 1336 (1982).

70-1-503. What may be transferred.

Case Notes

Enforcement of Agricultural Lien Following Sale or Transfer of Farm Products — Assignment of Inchoate or Unperfected Lien Interests Allowed: A crop of sugar beets was sold, and a pesticide sprayer that held an agricultural lien sought to enforce the lien after the sale. Plaintiff bank also held a secured interest on the proceeds of the crop. The buyer issued checks made payable jointly to the bank and the sprayer, honoring the agricultural lien, and the lienholder's unconditioned negotiation of the check acknowledged satisfaction and release of its lien. The bank asserted that, not being an agricultural supplier, the sprayer had no right to file the lien and further contended that because inchoate or unperfected liens are not assignable, any argument that the supplier had assigned its lien right to the sprayer must fail as a matter of law. The sprayer argued that the supplier was clearly eligible to file an agricultural lien and that all actions taken by the sprayer were taken in an agency capacity for the supplier, as indicated in the lien filing, so the payment was not an assignment. Alternatively, the sprayer contended that the transaction was a pass-through between related entities constituting a limited assignment for collection purposes only and that even if the bank's evidence was sufficient to demonstrate that the transaction was a full assignment supported by consideration, inchoate lien interests are nonetheless assignable. The Supreme Court concluded that the dispute was best resolved on the issue of the assignability of inchoate lien interests, noting that generally property of any kind may be transferred, that a right arising out of an obligation is the property of the person to whom it is due and may be transferred, and that Montana's general policy supports the free assignability of rights and obligations stemming from contractual obligations. An agricultural lien is a security and ought to follow the debt or contract to which it pertains, and the free assignability of the right to perfect an agricultural lien comports with lien statutes as well as modern business practices. Thus, even though the supplier's lien was not yet perfected when transferred to the sprayer, it was assignable, and the sprayer validly proceeded to perfect and enforce the lien and was entitled to funds in the amount stipulated by the parties as payment for the chemicals sold by the supplier to the farm and applied by the sprayer and was entitled to the interest on the funds to be credited on that sum. Stockman Bank of Mont. v. Mon-Kota, Inc., 2008 MT 74, 342 M 115, 180 P3d 1125 (2008).

Mineral Development Contract Not So Personal or Unique as to Preclude Assignment: A contract for the development of a mineral interest did not prohibit assignment or delegation. Despite this fact, appellants pointed out that an exception to the general rule (that rights arising under a contract are generally assignable unless prohibited by the contract) exists when the contract is personal in nature and an assignment would deprive a party of the benefit of his bargain. The Supreme Court acknowledged this exception but found that the duties imposed by the agreement were not so unique in the industry as to involve a degree of trust and confidence singularly personal to the contracting parties. Somont Oil, Inc. v. Nutter, 228 M 467, 743 P2d 1016, 44 St. Rep. 1685 (1987).

Deed Reserving Mineral Rights: Conveyance of surface estate by deed providing that "all coal and mineral rights are reserved by" the grantors effectively reserved in the grantors a mineral estate in the conveyed land. Lien v. Simons, 522 F. Supp. 712, 38 St. Rep 1644 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Segregation and Conveyance of Mineral Interests: The title to mineral interests in land, including oil, gas, and coal interests, may be segregated in whole or in part from the rest of the fee simple title, and there is little doubt that such interests may be separately conveyed. Lien v. Simons, 522 F. Supp. 712, 38 St. Rep. 1644 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Judgments Assignable: A judgment is assignable, and a banking corporation may transfer one owned by it just as it may sell bonds or other securities of which it has become the owner in the ordinary course of business. Genzberger v. Adams, 62 M 430, 205 P 658 (1922).

70-1-504. Possibility not transferable.

Case Notes

Montana to Use California Construction: Since this section is identical with a section of the California Civil Code, the presumption must be indulged that in adopting it the Legislature intended that the same construction should prevail in this jurisdiction as prevailed in California. Winslow v. Dundom, 46 M 71, 125 P 136 (1912).

Option to Purchase Realty: Right under option contract for sale of real property was assignable and enforceable in equity where contract was silent upon question of its assignability, intention of parties was not shown to have been that the right created should be personal to the option holder, and the agreement involved simply the cash payment of the purchase price. Winslow v. Dundom, 46 M 71, 125 P 136 (1912).

70-1-505. Right of reentry or repossession transferable.

Case Notes

Common-Law Rule: While under the common law a right of reentry upon land after breach of a condition subsequent incorporated in a deed does not constitute an interest in real property and is therefore not susceptible of conveyance, under this section such a right may be transferred. Waddell v. School District, 79 M 432, 257 P 278 (1927).

70-1-506. Oral transfer permitted.

Case Notes

Transfer to Third Person for Benefit of Transferee: Where oral transfer of personal property to third person for benefit of transferee is called in question, assent of the latter to the transfer must be shown. Dept. of Agriculture, Labor, & Industry v. DeVore, 91 M 47, 6 P2d 125 (1931).

Transfer of a Judgment — No Writing Necessary: The transfer of a judgment need not be in writing; hence even though it may have been error to admit a written assignment, the error was harmless, plaintiff having made no effort to show that a transfer had not been made. Genzberger v. Adams, 62 M 430, 205 P 658 (1922).

70-1-507. Grant defined.

Case Notes

Assignment of Oil and Gas Lease Working Interest to Trust Valid Grant: In 1954, Fitzpatrick and three other parties entered into an operating agreement concerning the working interest in an oil and gas lease. The agreement included a clause giving each party a preferential right to purchase the working interest of any other party. In 1969, Fitzpatrick divided his interest into three parts. He assigned one-third to his wife, reserved one-third in himself, and assigned one-third in four equal parts to four trusts which he had created for his four children. In 1972, Fitzpatrick signed a quitclaim assignment of whatever working interest he had to Youngblood, successor in interest to one of the four parties to the 1954 agreement. Youngblood had acquired similar quitclaim assignments from the other two parties to the original agreement. Believing that he owned 100% of the working interest in the lease, Youngblood began development of oil and gas wells on the land. The land became productive in 1972. In 1975, Youngblood, concerned about whether or not he had acquired all of Fitzpatrick's interest, had Fitzpatrick and his wife sign letters to ratify that Youngblood had acquired all their working interest in 1972. The Fitzpatrick children, as beneficiaries of the trusts, refused to sign similar letters. Youngblood then filed an action to quiet title to the working interest in him. The District Court found for Youngblood, ruling that the 1969 assignment was invalid for failure of delivery, failure of acceptance, and for retention of dominion and control over the working interest by Fitzpatrick. The Supreme Court reversed. The court ruled that Fitzpatrick's intent in making the 1969 assignment was to transfer income from oil and gas production to his wife and four children and that delivery was therefore complete. Acceptance of the assignment may be presumed because the net effect of the assignment was beneficial to the trusts. The court further ruled that there was not sufficient evidence that Fitzpatrick retained dominion and control over the working interests after the 1969 assignment. Finally the court ruled that the parties did not intend the preferential purchase clause to apply to a transfer without consideration between family members, so Youngblood was not entitled to enforce that clause. Exeter Exploration Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 202 M 209, 661 P2d 1255, 40 St. Rep. 38 (1983).

70-1-508. Delivery of grant necessary.

Case Notes

Loss of Repossession Rights Upon Delivery of Warranty Deed: A grant of property cannot be delivered conditionally; rather, delivery to a grantee is considered to be absolute, and the instrument takes effect upon its delivery. Any prior conditions are discharged at the time of delivery. Upon transfer of property, the transferee obtains all title held by the transferor unless a different intention is expressed or is necessarily implied. The fact that a warranty deed contained language stating that it was "subject to" a prior mortgage did not render inoperative the presumption of intention to convey the entire interest. An unambiguous provision in a deed prevails over an inconsistent provision in a sales contract pursuant to which the deed was given. Romain v. Earl Schwartz Co., 238 M 500, 779 P2d 54, 46 St. Rep. 1450 (1989).

Assignment of Oil and Gas Lease Working Interest to Trust Valid Grant: In 1954, Fitzpatrick and three other parties entered into an operating agreement concerning the working interest in an oil and gas lease. The agreement included a clause giving each party a preferential right to purchase the working interest of any other party. In 1969, Fitzpatrick divided his interest into three parts. He assigned one-third to his wife, reserved one-third in himself, and assigned one-third in four equal parts to four trusts which he had created for his four children. In 1972, Fitzpatrick signed a quitclaim assignment of whatever working interest he had to Youngblood, successor in interest to one of the four parties to the 1954 agreement. Youngblood had acquired similar quitclaim assignments from the other two parties to the original agreement. Believing that he owned 100% of the working interest in the lease, Youngblood began development of oil and gas wells on the land. The land became productive in 1972. In 1975, Youngblood, concerned about whether or not he had acquired all of Fitzpatrick's interest, had Fitzpatrick and his wife sign letters to ratify that Youngblood had acquired all their working interest in 1972. The court further ruled that there was not sufficient evidence that Fitzpatrick retained dominion and control over the working interests after the 1969 assignment. Finally the court ruled that the parties did not intend the preferential purchase clause to apply to a transfer without consideration between family members, so Youngblood was not entitled to enforce that clause. Exeter Exploration Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 202 M 209, 661 P2d 1255, 40 St. Rep. 38 (1983).

Placing in Joint Safe Deposit Box — No Delivery: Where deed from mother to daughter was executed but not recorded and was placed in mother's safe deposit box and mother later destroyed the deed, there was no delivery so as to give title to daughter although daughter testified that she had access to safe deposit box. Cleveland-Arvin v. Cleveland, 123 M 463, 215 P2d 963 (1950).

Death of Grantor — Delivery Not Possible: There can be no delivery of a deed after death of grantor, since a dead man is not capable of any activity. Direction by a grantor in a deed which he had signed, sealed, and acknowledged that it be delivered after his death did not amount to constructive delivery. Where a deed remains in possession of grantor, to be delivered and to take effect after his death, it is void for want of delivery during his lifetime, i.e., to be made operative it must have been made effectual during the grantor's lifetime. Miller v. Talbott, 115 M 1, 139 P2d 502 (1943).

What Does Not Constitute Delivery: In absence of evidence of intent of grantor to part with control over deed and title to realty other than mere fact of delivery of deed to depositary, transfer of mere possession of deed does not constitute delivery where deed is placed in hands of third person for safekeeping only and not for delivery to grantee or where the fact that the instrument is a deed is not made known to depositary at any time before death of grantor or name of the grantee is not given. Delivery is not complete until grantor has so dealt with the instrument as a means of divesting his title as to lose control over it and place it beyond his right of recall. Miller v. Talbott, 115 M 1, 139 P2d 502 (1943).

Presumption of Nondelivery:

Presumption of nondelivery flowing from testimony by defendant that he saw the deed upon which plaintiff based his claim of title in the possession of the grantor several months after its recordation was overcome by proof that the deed was mailed to plaintiff immediately after recording, that possession was in plaintiff through a tenant, that defendant's own conduct thereafter recognized plaintiff's ownership, and that defendant's husband, an attorney, several years after the transfer attached it as belonging to plaintiff in suits for himself and clients. Cook v. Rigney, 113 M 198, 126 P2d 325 (1941).

Delivery is the final act which consummates a deed. Possession of deed by grantor long subsequent to its date and before recordation raises presumption that deed has not been delivered. Springhorn v. Springer, 75 M 294, 243 P 803 (1926).

Incomplete Instrument: Delivery of an incompleted instrument is ineffective. Hence, where at the time a lessee signed a receipt for a copy of a lease the instrument was incomplete in that one of the lessors had not signed it, the court properly found that it was ineffective for failure of delivery, the fact that later in the day the missing signature was appended not changing the result in absence of evidence that the instrument was delivered thereafter. Nelson v. Davenport, 86 M 1, 281 P 537 (1929).

Escrow Deposits — Option to Purchase: Delivery being a necessity, if a husband and wife give an option to purchase land and deposit a deed in escrow to be delivered when the option is exercised but the husband dies before its delivery, his widow is entitled to dower in the land of which her husband died seized, though the deed was delivered after his death by the depositary. Tyler v. Tyler, 50 M 65, 144 P 1090 (1914).

70-1-509. Presumption of delivery.

Case Notes

Deeding of Property for Purpose of Controlling Distribution — Revocation of Qualified Gift: Intending to avoid probate, the Gilroys added their son's name to the title on their home and four vehicles for the purpose of controlling distribution upon the Gilroys' deaths. When the father died, the mother was placed in an extended care facility and an independent guardian was appointed to manage her affairs. The guardian determined that the mother's estate was running short of funds to defray the cost of extended care and sought return of the property in possession of the son. The son refused to return the property on grounds that following the father's death, interest in the vehicles passed equally to the mother and son, that the gift was complete, and that the son's interest was vested. The District Court held that placing the son's name on the titles was a qualified gift that could be revoked by the mother or the guardian. The Supreme Court affirmed. Because the addition of the son's name to the titles was an estate planning mechanism and the property was to be available for the use and benefit of the parents as long as they desired, the transfer was considered a revocable qualified transfer. Under 70-3-203, conditional transfers made in view of death are qualified and may be revoked by the giver at any time. Further, the son had agreed to transfer interest in the parents' home back to the mother at her request, so this section did not apply. In re Guardianship & Conservatorship of Gilroy, 2004 MT 267, 323 M 149, 99 P3d 205 (2004), distinguishing Gross v. Gross, 239 M 480, 781 P2d 284 (1989).

Loan of Title Based Upon Exchange of Deeds Upheld — Oral Extrinsic Evidence Controlling: Johnson agreed to loan Anderson the title to several lots that Johnson owned on Flathead Lake so that Anderson could mortgage the lots and use the proceeds for a business venture. Johnson and Anderson both executed deeds to the property, and Anderson occupied the property pursuant to a lease agreement. Later, the agreement was breached when Anderson conveyed his interest to a third party and cut trees from the property. Both parties sought a declaration of ownership in a quiet title action. The District Court admitted oral evidence showing that nothing more than a loan of title evidenced by an exchange of deeds was intended. The Supreme Court held that the timing of the execution and delivery of the two deeds was not controlling and that the deed conveying the property back to Johnson, even though it may have been signed and delivered first, was controlling in light of the circumstances of the transaction. The Supreme Court held that the deed conveying the property back to Johnson was valid as between the parties even though it was not recorded until later. Anderson v. Johnson, 264 M 66, 870 P2d 59, 51 St. Rep. 149 (1994).

Assignment of Oil and Gas Lease Working Interest to Trust Valid Grant: In 1954, Fitzpatrick and three other parties entered into an operating agreement concerning the working interest in an oil and gas lease. The agreement included a clause giving each party a preferential right to purchase the working interest of any other party. In 1969, Fitzpatrick divided his interest into three parts. In 1972, Fitzpatrick signed a quitclaim assignment of whatever working interest he had to Youngblood, successor in interest to one of the four parties to the 1954 agreement. Youngblood had acquired similar quitclaim assignments from the other two parties to the original agreement. Believing that he owned 100% of the working interest in the lease, Youngblood began development of oil and gas wells on the land. The land became productive in 1972. In 1975, Youngblood, concerned about whether or not he had acquired all of Fitzpatrick's interest, had Fitzpatrick and his wife sign letters to ratify that Youngblood had acquired all their working interest in 1972. The Fitzpatrick children, as beneficiaries of the trusts, refused to sign similar letters. Youngblood then filed an action to quiet title to the working interest in him. The District Court found for Youngblood, ruling that the 1969 assignment was invalid for failure of delivery, failure of acceptance, and for retention of dominion and control over the working interest by Fitzpatrick. The Supreme Court reversed. The court ruled that Fitzpatrick's intent in making the 1969 assignment was to transfer income from oil and gas production to his wife and four children and that delivery was therefore complete. Acceptance of the assignment may be presumed because the net effect of the assignment was beneficial to the trusts. The court further ruled that there was not sufficient evidence that Fitzpatrick retained dominion and control over the working interests after the 1969 assignment. Finally the court ruled that the parties did not intend the preferential purchase clause to apply to a transfer without consideration between family members, so Youngblood was not entitled to enforce that clause. Exeter Exploration Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 202 M 209, 661 P2d 1255, 40 St. Rep. 38 (1983).

Effect of Continued Control of Property by Grantor: Where grantor and grantee are husband and wife, fact that grantor continues in control and management of property conveyed during his lifetime does not destroy presumption of delivery arising from due execution and recordation of the deed. Roth v. Palutzke, 137 M 77, 350 P2d 358 (1960), followed in Gross v. Gross, 239 M 480, 781 P2d 284, 46 St. Rep. 1848 (1989).

Effect of Recording Deed: Fact that deed has been recorded strengthens presumption that deed which is duly executed and acknowledged has been delivered. Roth v. Palutzke, 137 M 77, 350 P2d 358 (1960), followed in Gross v. Gross, 239 M 480, 781 P2d 284, 46 St. Rep. 1848 (1989).

Prima Facie Case: Deed in the ordinary form conveying title to plaintiff dated, acknowledged, and recorded on the same day made out a prima facie case, since such a showing gave rise to the statutory presumption of delivery under this section. The burden then rested upon defendant to prove a superior title under 70-19-404. Cook v. Rigney, 113 M 198, 126 P2d 325 (1941).

Presumption of Delivery Rebuttable:

While the presumption under this section is that a deed duly executed was delivered at its date, such presumption is not conclusive but may be rebutted, and where the facts conclusively show that it was not delivered, the presumption disappears. Carnahan v. Gupton, 109 M 244, 96 P2d 513 (1939).

The presumption declared by this section that a grant duly executed is presumed to have been delivered at its date, arising from the certificate of acknowledgment, is not conclusive but may be overcome by other facts and circumstances, such as that the grantor remained in possession and control of the property for many years and up to the time of its recordation, that after recordation it was returned to him, etc. Springhorn v. Springer, 75 M 294, 243 P 803 (1926).

Upon transfer of property, the transferee obtains all title held by the transferor unless a different intention is expressed or is necessarily implied. Lease With Option to Purchase — Landlord Responsibility for Taxes: The city entered into an agreement with Pollard for construction and lease of a vehicle storage building, with an option to purchase throughout the term of the lease. After the city occupied the building, Pollard received notice that taxes had been assessed and were owing. Pollard maintained that the city had, by terms of the lease agreement, purchased the building and that he was not responsible for the taxes. He relied on the holding in Hunter v. Bozeman, 216 M 251, 700 P2d 184, 42 St. Rep. 784 (1985), that the lease was in fact a sale to the city and that the building was in effect a public works project. The Supreme Court found that the option to buy was not a sale and imposed no obligation to purchase. Rather, it found that the agreement fit the definition of a retail installment contract. Title bestowing ownership had not transferred to the city, so owner Pollard was responsible for the taxes on the building. Pollard v. Bozeman, 228 M 176, 741 P2d 776, 44 St. Rep. 1436 (1987).

Unconditional Delivery and Acceptance: Informal written instrument, indicating that donor wished to pay money on demand but that it could be collected against his estate if not demanded or paid sooner, was unconditionally delivered and accepted when accepted by donee, even though no demand for payment was made during donor's lifetime. Faith Lutheran Retirement Home v. Veis, 156 M 38, 473 P2d 503 (1970).

Delayed Payment: Fact that drafts indicated that balance of purchase price did not have to be paid for 30 days after sight "subject to approval of title" could not defeat effect of delivery of deeds which was to deprive grantor of interests conveyed thereby. In re Hume's Estate, 128 M 223, 272 P2d 999 (1954).

Placing in Joint Safe Deposit Box: Where deed from mother to daughter was executed but not recorded and was placed in mother's safe deposit box and mother later destroyed the deed, there was no effective delivery although daughter testified that she had access to safe deposit box. Cleveland-Arvin v. Cleveland, 123 M 463, 215 P2d 963 (1950).

Grantor's Continued Occupancy: A grant of real property takes effect upon its delivery by the grantor. A grant cannot be delivered to a grantee conditionally but is necessarily absolute, and the instrument takes effect thereon discharged of any condition upon which delivery is made. The transfer of actual possession of real property is not a necessary element of conveyance thereof, and the grantor's continued occupancy is not inconsistent with the alienation thereof by the owner. Walsh v. Kennedy, 115 M 551, 147 P2d 425 (1944).

Dispossession of Tenant: Where real property is conveyed by warranty deed, the grantee is entitled to immediate possession of the premises, and where at the time of the conveyances they are in the possession of a tenant, no duty rests upon the grantee to dispossess the latter, it being incumbent upon the grantor to deliver possession in accordance with the deed. Adams v. Durfee, 67 M 315, 215 P 664 (1923).

Constructive Delivery of Deeds Dependent Upon Death of Grantor, 1 Mont. L. Rev. 78 (1940).

70-1-511. Delivery in escrow.

Case Notes

Contract for Deed — Notifying Escrow Agent of Default: Seller under contract for deed did not have to notify the escrow agent as well as the buyers that payments were in default and the contract was terminated, because the contract only provided for notice to buyers and did not require notice to the escrow agent. More important, the contract gave buyers the right to pay the accelerated balance due within 90 days of receipt of the notice of default, the deed and other documents were held by and the payments were made to the escrow agent, and notice of default to the escrow agent would have prematurely closed the escrow account and denied the buyers the opportunity to pay off the contract within 90 days. Boles v. Ler, 222 M 28, 719 P2d 793, 43 St. Rep. 1035 (1986).

Contract for Deed — Seller's Right to Cancel After Accepting Late Payments to Escrow Agent: Buyers under contract for deed made three late payments to the escrow agent. The escrow agent's acceptance of the three checks was not acceptance by the seller under the theory that the escrow agent was the seller's agent and acceptance by the agent was acceptance by the principal, nor did seller's acceptance of the payments from the escrow agent ratify the agent's acceptance. Failure to promptly return the payments did not waive seller's right to cancel the contract. The contract gave buyers 90 days from notice of default to pay the balance due under the contract, and they could do so in more than one installment. Seller decided the three payments might be installments in an attempt to pay the balance due and decided to hold the checks until it became apparent that the buyers were either going to pay off the balance due or were attempting to induce seller to waive her right to cancel the contract. Seller returned the checks when she realized the latter was the motive. In addition, seller sent a second cancellation notice, making it clear what her intent was. Boles v. Ler, 222 M 28, 719 P2d 793, 43 St. Rep. 1035 (1986).

Delivery to Be Made Upon Death of Grantor: Where deeds had been delivered to grantor's attorney with written instructions for delivery to grantee after death of grantor and the instructions contained an acknowledgment signed by the grantor that such delivery placed the deeds out of the possession and control of the grantor, such delivery was sufficient to establish delivery in escrow. Blackmer v. Blackmer, 165 M 69, 525 P2d 559 (1974).

Oral Escrow Agreement With Deed and Check Sufficient: No precise form of words is necessary, and the agreement to deposit an instrument in escrow may be made orally. Where vendor deposited deed and vendee deposited check to be given in payment in an attorney's office, pending release of a mortgage, the deed and check constituted the escrow. Contract was not invalid under Statute of Frauds for absence of a formal, written instrument accompanying the escrow. Conner v. Helvik, 105 M 437, 73 P2d 541 (1937).

Instrument in Escrow Not Effective Until Delivered: An instrument delivered into escrow to be delivered on performance of certain conditions does not become effective until delivery by the depositary (subject to certain exceptions not involved in the case). Nadeau v. Texas Co., 104 M 558, 69 P2d 586, 111 ALR 874 (1937).

When Title Passes:

Under a contract of sale of real property on deferred payments, as distinguished from one where execution and performance involve but a single transaction, containing a provision that time shall be of the essence, deposit of deed in escrow not conveying a marketable title does not justify the vendee in suspending payments, the effective date of delivery of title by deed in escrow being the date of delivery by the depositary. Silfvast v. Asplund, 93 M 584, 20 P2d 631 (1933).

Where an owner sells his land on the installment plan and places the contract and deed in escrow, to be delivered to purchaser upon completion of payments, the latter does not obtain title until all of the payments are made; until then, title is in the vendor. Knapp v. Andrus, 56 M 37, 180 P 908 (1919).

Where Contract for Deed and Deed Placed in Escrow Vary:

Where contract for deed was complete in itself and called for execution of deed in compliance with description of property contained therein, the deed to be placed in escrow, but the description in the deed did not conform to that contained in the contract and vendees had not agreed to accept the deed as drawn, the contract could not be held to have been modified by or merged in the deed. Hollensteiner v. Anderson, 78 M 122, 252 P 796 (1927).

While a deed to land is an "agreement" which, when delivered, may modify a contract for the deed, a deed deposited in escrow is but an escrow, does not pass title, and can modify the contract only on a clear showing that the opposing party knew of the recitals in the deed and acceded thereto and that the deed and contract were parts of the same transaction. Hollensteiner v. Anderson, 78 M 122, 252 P 796 (1927).

Effect of Delivery on Performance of Condition After Death: The deposit of a deed to be delivered on performance of a condition after death of grantor, such as payment of funeral expenses, stands on the same footing as a deposit for delivery unconditionally after death, and the grantee may after the grantor's death perform the condition and take title as of the date when the deed was deposited. Plymale v. Keene, 76 M 403, 247 P 554 (1926), distinguished in Carnahan v. Gupton, 109 M 244, 96 P2d 513 (1939).

When Delivery Deemed Complete:

Fact that officer of bank, with which deed was deposited by grantor with instructions to deliver it to grantee, his son, after grantor's death, testified that if grantor had demanded return of deed his request would have been complied with was properly disregarded by trial court in concluding that grantor did not intend to retain any control or dominion over deed when it was deposited. Plymale v. Keene, 76 M 403, 247 P 554 (1926), distinguished in Carnahan v. Gupton, 109 M 244, 96 P2d 513 (1939).

If a deed, fully executed and so drawn as to convey a present title, is deposited by grantor with a third person with directions to deliver it to grantee after grantor's death, and grantor, in making such deposit, reserves no power to recall or modify it or thereafter to control in any manner its disposition, the delivery will be deemed complete as of the date when the deed was deposited, grantor's intention at time of passing deed to third person being the controlling factor in determining the question of delivery or nondelivery. Plymale v. Keene, 76 M 403, 247 P 554 (1926).

Definition of an Escrow: An "escrow" is a written instrument delivered to a third person to take effect upon the happening of a contingency and delivery of it to the person entitled to it. Under this definition, neither money nor a receipted bill, deposited in bank under an agreement between the parties to a proposed lease of coal land, could properly become the subject of an escrow, neither being a written contract. Glendenning v. Slayton, 55 M 586, 179 P 817 (1919).

Case Notes

Recording of Revocation of Trust Agreement as Constructive Delivery: Section 70-21-302 imparts constructive delivery of the contents of the revocation instrument. The recording statutes import notice to all interested parties in matters affecting title to real property. Therefore, all cotrustees received constructive delivery when a revocation of trust was recorded with the County Clerk and Recorder. Hauseman v. Koski, 259 M 498, 857 P2d 715, 50 St. Rep. 898 (1993).

Circumstances Under Which Constructive Delivery Not Maintainable: Constructive delivery of deeds was not established in absence of any evidence warranting conclusion that grantee was entitled to immediate possession of lands deeded and in view of fact that until his death the grantor, after executing the deeds, dealt with the lands as his own. Delivery must be with intent in grantor to divest himself of title, a question of fact ascertainable from all of the evidence bearing thereon. Carnahan v. Gupton, 109 M 244, 96 P2d 513 (1939).

Dead Person — Cannot Deliver Deed: Since a dead person is incapable of any activity, there can be no delivery of a deed, executed by him in his lifetime, after death. Reservation of a life estate in grantor of real property presupposes a conveyance of property in which life estate is reserved. Hence, where there was no such conveyance because the deeds, executed during grantor's lifetime, were not delivered until after his death, there could not have been any such reservation. Carnahan v. Gupton, 109 M 244, 96 P2d 513 (1939).

Delivery Neither Actual Nor Constructive Where Deed Left in Safety Deposit Box With Advice for Delivery After Grantor's Death: Deeds turned over to grantee upon grantor's death failed to convey title where grantor had inserted them in sealed envelope addressed to grantee, his nephew, and placed it in his safety deposit box over which he alone had control, had written grantee that deeds would be delivered to him by bank upon his, grantor's, death, and for 3 years had dealt with the lands, which were assessed to him, as his own. Carnahan v. Gupton, 109 M 244, 96 P2d 513 (1939).

When Delivery Complete: While delivery of a deed may be either by words or acts or both combined and actual manual handing over thereof by grantor to grantee is not required, delivery is not complete until grantor has so dealt with the instrument as a means of divesting his title as to lose all control over it and place it beyond the right of recall. The grantor shall unequivocally indicate it to be his intention that the instrument take effect as a conveyance of property. Carnahan v. Gupton, 109 M 244, 96 P2d 513 (1939), followed in Hauseman v. Koski, 259 M 498, 857 P2d 715, 50 St. Rep. 898 (1993), citing Hackley Union Nat'l Bank v. Farmer, 234 NW 135 (Mich. 1931).

Delivery Essential: Delivery of a deed to real property, either actual or constructive, by which the grantor is divested of title and loses control over the property beyond the right of recall is essential to a vestiture of title in the grantee. Springhorn v. Springer, 75 M 294, 243 P 803 (1926).

Case Notes

Genuine Issue of Material Fact Whether Dam Operation Damaged Lakeshore Properties — Summary Judgment Improper — Class Action Vacated: Flathead Lake landowners brought a class action suit against defendant operators of Kerr Dam for operating outside the scope of their easements in a manner that continuously eroded and damaged plaintiffs' lakeshore properties. The District Court rejected plaintiffs' argument that the dam operator was not allowed to affect plaintiffs' properties above an elevation of 2,893 feet, concluding instead that defendants' easements covered entire parcels. The court concluded that erosion, including wave action erosion, was within the scope of the easements and held that any duty defendants had to not cause unreasonable damage to plaintiffs' properties applied only to damage unrelated to use of the easement. Therefore, summary judgment was granted to defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court first agreed that the District Court's contour line theory was correct. The "2,893 feet" clause did not establish the vertical limit argued by plaintiffs because although the dam operators' right to flood, subirrigate, drain, or otherwise affect the shoreline was not unlimited, it was not restricted to a maximum elevation of 2,893 feet at each parcel, but rather extended to whatever part of each parcel was affected when the lake was held at 2,893 feet above mean sea level as measured at the dam. The court also agreed that the right to cause some erosion was necessary to the enjoyment of the right to perpetually flood, subirrigate, and drain and was thus included by implication in the easements. However, further factual development and trial were necessary to address the question of whether the erosion was reasonable, necessary, and within the scope of the easements, which could not be resolved by summary judgment. Additionally, the question of whether defendants breached their obligation to not cause unreasonable damage to the shoreline properties and to not unreasonably interfere with plaintiffs' enjoyment also required further factual development and possibly trial. Therefore, the order certifying the case as a class action was vacated and the case was remanded for further consideration. Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2009 MT 286, 352 M 212, 215 P3d 675 (2009).

On remand, the District Court decertified the class as to one defendant and denied the plaintiffs' motion for certification as to another defendant on the basis that the question of whether the erosion caused unreasonable damage to or unreasonably interfered with the plaintiffs' properties required an individual, property-by-property analysis that was improper for class certification. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that class certification to both defendants was proper because the reasonableness of the erosion presents a common question that is incapable of being resolved on a property-by-property basis since an aggregate of the benefits and burdens imposed on all of the shoreline properties must be considered together to determine reasonableness. Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2012 MT 318, 368 Mont. 1, 291 P.3d 1209.

Express Lease Provision Required for Survival of Overriding Royalty: An overriding royalty applies only to the lease out of which it was created. In the case of an oil or gas lease or sublease, if a party wishes an overriding royalty to survive the expiration of the lease or sublease, an express provision must be included in the lease or sublease to accomplish survival of the overriding royalty. Ritter v. Bill Barrett Corp., 2009 MT 210, 351 M 278, 210 P3d 688 (2009), following Edward v. Prince, 221 M 272, 719 P2d 422 (1986).

Terms of Attempted Easement Too Vague to Enforce — Deed Insufficient to Constitute Easement by Reservation: The founders of plaintiff homeowners' association recorded a declaration of conditions in 1973 that set aside certain undescribed property for parking and that provided that the homeowners' association would be formed after 75% of subdivision lots were sold and if 75% of lot owners voted to form an association. The homeowners' association was finally formed about 33 years later, but the property set aside for parking was never used and was ultimately sold in 1992. When the association eventually required more room for parking, they sought to enforce the declaration, but access to the property was denied by the current owner. The association filed an action to quiet title, but the District Court granted summary judgment for the landowner, so the association appealed. The Supreme Court held that the 1973 declaration and the 1992 deed did not result in an enforceable easement allowing the association to use the property, noting that a grant of an easement may be subject to conditions precedent, but if the uncertain event upon which the obligation hinges does not take place, the obligation does not materialize. The association never used the property for parking, so an easement never materialized. An agreement that requires parties to agree to material terms in the future is not an enforceable agreement. The court also found that the scope and terms of the attempted easement were too vague to be specifically enforced, and the 1992 deed was insufficient to constitute an easement by reservation. Therefore, summary judgment for the landowner was proper and the District Court was affirmed. Holter Lakeshores Homeowners Ass'n, Inc v. Thurston, 2009 MT 146, 350 M 362, 207 P3d 334 (2009).

Easement Limited to Historical Size and Location of Grant: In 1949, plaintiffs' predecessor in interest granted an easement to defendant's predecessor in interest to allow the construction of radio towers on a portion of a 160-acre parcel, conditioned on location and maintenance of the property. Defendant subsequently notified plaintiffs that he intended to expand the radio facilities beyond the original construction site. Plaintiffs sued, asserting that the expansion would encompass property not included in the original grant, while defendant contended that the easement encompassed the entire 160 acres described in the grant, so the facilities could be expanded onto other portions of the parcel or relocated elsewhere within the parcel. The District Court found for plaintiffs, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under the rules of contract construction, the grant language clearly limited placement of the radio facilities on a portion of the 160-acre parcel to be chosen by defendant's predecessor in interest. Thus, the easement did not encumber the full 160-acre parcel, but rather was limited in size and location to the historical location of the radio facilities. The original grant also required that wires, ground radial antennas, conduits, and transmission lines be buried to a minimum depth of 12 inches, and the District Court did not err in ordering defendant to bury the equipment pursuant to the maintenance portion of the grant. Anderson v. Stokes, 2007 MT 166, 338 M 118, 163 P3d 1273 (2007).

Proper Determination of Legal Access for Subdivision Parcels: Plaintiffs asserted that language in a declaration of a subdivision easement permitting all subdivision owners to use subdivision roads should limit access only to owners of lots that existed at the time that the declaration was executed. The District Court disagreed, and based on the clear and unambiguous language of the declaration, the Supreme Court concurred. Although not all of the subdivision parcels were established at the time that the declaration was executed, the declaration was clear that use of the roads extended to all lot owners, including the parcels yet to be divided. The Board of County Commissioners did not act arbitrarily in finding that legal access existed for the entire subdivision. Fielder v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2007 MT 118, 337 M 256, 162 P3d 67 (2007).

Improper Version of Subdivision Law Applied to Survey Exemption Question — Remand: The parents divided a parcel of land on Flathead Lake into two parcels and transferred one parcel to their daughter and her husband in 1973. The parents' adjoining parcel was transferred to other family members and ultimately transferred to plaintiff. Plaintiff sought to adjudicate the boundary between the properties. The District Court apparently applied the 2003 subdivision and platting law and found that the property division qualified for a family exemption and would not be considered as a subdivision under 76-3-207, but the court was unclear about the surveying criteria that it applied to the property division, apparently applying the subdivision law after finding that the subdivision law did not apply. The Supreme Court held that the District Court order was flawed because of the internal inconsistencies and because the District Court applied the 2003 law when it should have applied the law in effect when the property division was made in 1973. The case was therefore remanded for the District Court to determine whether additional factfinding or evidence was necessary in order to establish the proper survey criteria and resolve the boundary issue in accordance with the 1973 law. Karlson v. Rosich, 2006 MT 290, 334 M 370, 147 P3d 196 (2006).

Clear and Unambiguous Easement Language — Contract Principles Applied to Interpretation of Easement: After an initial conveyance of property, Tract A-1 was burdened by three easements: (1) an existing driveway; (2) an alternative drainfield easement; and (3) a trapezoid-shaped parcel called the trapezoid easement, which was designated as an easement for access to a seepage pit and alternative drainfield for an adjoining tract entitled "Tract 1". Following the subdivision of Tract 1 into Tract 1-A and Tract 1-B, the Linfords conveyed Tract 1-B to the Bings, but still continued to possess Tract 1-A and continued to benefit from the access easement. When Tract 1-A was later conveyed to the Bings, they acquired the same right to use easements appurtenant to the dominant estate that the Linfords previously enjoyed. A dispute then arose with the Mularonis, the owners of Tract 1-A, who contested the validity of the trapezoid easement, arguing that when the Bings took title to Tract A-1 from the Linfords, a merger of titles occurred that extinguished the easements. The District Court impliedly rejected the merger argument by holding that the easement burdening Tract A-1 benefited both Tract 1-A and Tract 1-B, and the Supreme Court concurred. In order to extinguish an easement by merger, there must be unity of title or ownership, coextensive in validity, quality, and all other circumstances of right. The language describing the trapezoid easement as an easement for access was clear and unambiguous and created a general access easement. Applying principles of contract interpretation to the transfer of property, the Supreme Court held that the incorporation of the certificate of survey into the deeds conveying the tracts to the Bings clearly and effectively described the easements in question and that the District Court did not err in finding that the Bings were entitled to general access across the trapezoid easement. Mularoni v. Bing, 2001 MT 215, 306 M 405, 34 P3d 497 (2001).

Reservation of Single Right-of-Way Over Existing Private Road — No Ambiguity or Conflict With Intended Access: The District Court determined that a reservation of rights in a 1965 deed was ambiguous because the reservation of rights over a single roadway conflicted with the grantors' intent to reserve as many means as possible to their remaining property in a mountainous area. Ambiguities in a reservation of rights in any grant of property are to be construed in favor of the grantor; however, the breadth and scope of an easement are determined upon the actual terms of the contract. The easement in this case was described as "a right of way" over "an existing private road which extends across" the servient tenement "for the use and benefit of Section 3 and [parts] of Section 34". That language indicated the use to which the easement would be put, not the scope of the easement itself. The Supreme Court found that the reservation of rights was not ambiguous; rather, the language restricting the easement to a single right-of-way over an existing private road did not conflict with the intended use of the easement to benefit the grantors' remaining properties, nor did the grantors' intent override any limitation of the singular use of the word "road" in the reservation. Van Hook v. Jennings, 1999 MT 198, 295 M 409, 983 P2d 995, 56 St. Rep. 767 (1999).

Assignment of Estate Rights — Certificate of Deposit Held by Surviving Joint Tenant Not Transferred: A $10,000 certificate of deposit (C.D.) held by a surviving joint tenant was properly not included as an asset of the estate; therefore, a transfer and assignment of the tenant's right, title, and interest in the estate did not affect the C.D., of which tenant was sole owner upon the death of the nonsurviving joint tenant. Yellowstone Bank of Absarokee v. Morse, 226 M 126, 733 P2d 1310, 44 St. Rep. 524 (1987).

Termination of Lease and Royalty Interest — No Error in Summary Judgment: The District Court did not err in granting a summary judgment when several contracts relating to the same matter and made as substantially one transaction clearly showed that a lease assignment incorporating by reference the exhibit which created an overriding royalty interest in defendant included language that the assignors were owners of the overriding royalty interest of which the defendant received a one-fourth interest and which terminated with the lease. Edward v. Prince, 221 M 272, 719 P2d 422, 43 St. Rep. 805 (1986).

Sufficiency of Default Notice — Mandatory Finding: Michunovich purchased a tract of land under contract for deed from the Brangers. Michunovich entered a contract for deed to sell a portion of that tract to Owen. Owen fulfilled his part of the contract. Michunovich defaulted on the Branger contract. Brangers filed a breach of contract suit against Michunovich. Michunovich served Owen a notice of termination since he was unable to secure a deed release from Brangers. Michunovich did not refund Owen's downpayment as required by the contract. Owen refused to vacate the property. Michunovich assigned all his interest in the Branger contract to Stevenson with the Brangers' consent. Since Stevenson was able to bring the Branger contract current, the Brangers stipulated to the dismissal of their suit against Michunovich. Owen filed a purchaser's lien on the property under his contract from Michunovich. Stevenson then filed a quiet title action. The trial court found for Stevenson, finding that the notice from Michunovich to Owen terminated that contract so that Owen had no interest in the land. The Supreme Court remanded because according to the terms of the contract the refund of Owen's downpayment was a condition precedent to the contract being declared void. The trial court was instructed to determine whether Stevenson's default notice terminated the Owen contract and to resolve issues regarding rental value and improvements. Stevenson v. Owen, 212 M 287, 687 P2d 1010, 41 St. Rep. 1743 (1984).

Case Notes

Granting Clause — Easement Conveyed: Granting clause which referred specifically to grantee's right to use the land as a public park constituted a clear and distinct limitation; interest conveyed was an easement. Park County Rod & Gun Club v. Dept. of Highways, 163 M 372, 517 P2d 352 (1973).

70-1-516. Interpretation against grantor — exception.

Case Notes

Easement by Grant Interpreted in Favor of Grantee — Access Provided by Initial Easement Affirmed: When Watson, in conjunction with her former husband Roger, purchased a parcel of property from defendants, Roger's parents, Watson and Roger received a permanent easement across defendants' property to access the parcel, as evidenced by defendants' representation in a loan agreement that allowed the purchase of the parcel. When Watson and Roger later divorced, Watson was granted full title to the parcel, but defendants then redefined the easement and informed Watson that only part of their property could be accessed through defendants' property, so Watson sued to enforce the terms of the initial easement. The District Court granted defendants summary judgment, but on appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Applying general principles of contract law and interpreting the easement in favor of grantee Watson, the court noted that under 1-3-213, one who grants a thing is presumed to also grant whatever is essential to its use. Further, the granting document, written by and thus construed against defendants, contained a significant ambiguity by providing Watson and Roger a permanent easement across all of defendants' remaining lands while contradictorily limiting the easement to cover only part of defendants' property. Interpreting the document as a whole and considering the acceptable intrinsic evidence, the Supreme Court concluded that Watson was entitled to a permanent easement across defendants' remaining property as necessary and essential to the complete use and enjoyment of the landlocked parcel sold by defendants. Watson v. Dundas, 2006 MT 104, 332 M 164, 136 P3d 973 (2006), following Erker v. Kester, 1999 MT 231, 296 M 123, 988 P2d 1221 (1999).

Reservation of Single Right-of-Way Over Existing Private Road — No Ambiguity or Conflict With Intended Access: The District Court determined that a reservation of rights in a 1965 deed was ambiguous because the reservation of rights over a single roadway conflicted with the grantors' intent to reserve as many means as possible to their remaining property in a mountainous area. Ambiguities in a reservation of rights in any grant of property are to be construed in favor of the grantor; however, the breadth and scope of an easement are determined upon the actual terms of the contract. The easement in this case was described as "a right of way" over "an existing private road which extends across" the servient tenement "for the use and benefit of Section 3 and [parts] of Section 34". That language indicated the use to which the easement would be put, not the scope of the easement itself. The Supreme Court found that the reservation of rights was not ambiguous; rather, the language restricting the easement to a single right-of-way over an existing private road did not conflict with the intended use of the easement to benefit the grantors' remaining properties, nor did the grantors' intent override any limitation of the singular use of the word "road" in the reservation. Van Hook v. Jennings, 1999 MT 198, 295 M 409, 983 P2d 995, 56 St. Rep. 767 (1999).

Easement Not Created by Wording "Subject To": The plaintiff argued that the language in a deed stating "subject to and together with a 40 foot private road easement" created an easement in the plaintiff's favor. The Supreme Court held that the words "subject to" are commonly used to refer to existing liens and do not connote a reservation or retention of property rights. The court further held that the original grantor had no dominant estate to be served by the alleged easement and therefore could not have created an easement. Wild River Adventures, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees, 248 M 397, 812 P2d 344, 48 St. Rep. 478 (1991), followed in Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247, 53 St. Rep. 216 (1996), and contrasted in Reichle v. Anderson, 284 M 384, 943 P2d 1324, 54 St. Rep. 930 (1997).

Ambiguous Conditional Deed Interpreted as Estate Subject to Condition Subsequent: A grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee. Therefore, a quitclaim deed that conveyed property from a father to a son with the conditions that the property would revert to the father if the son died before the father and that the property could not be sold by the son during the father's lifetime was interpreted as creating an estate subject to a condition subsequent rather than an estate determinable. St. v. Berklund, 217 M 218, 704 P2d 59, 42 St. Rep. 1147 (1985).

Meaning of "Property of Another" — Arson Statute: Property which defendant had conveyed to his son by quitclaim deed with the conditions that the property would revert to the defendant if the son died before him and that the property could not be sold by the son during the defendant's lifetime is "property of another" for the purposes of a criminal prosecution under 45-6-103. St. v. Berklund, 217 M 218, 704 P2d 59, 42 St. Rep. 1147 (1985).

Improperly Drafted Provision in Deed — No Interest Conveyed: Provision in deed purported to convey a one-half interest in all of a quarter section except a particular subdivision. The filed plat showed that the subdivision consisted of the entire quarter section. The District Court found that this provision was incapable of conveying anything, and the Supreme Court affirmed even though under this section a deed is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee. Tillotsen v. Frazer, 199 M 342, 649 P2d 744, 39 St. Rep. 1442 (1982).

Reserved Easement — No Grantee Rights in Easement: Plaintiff conveyed land to defendant's predecessor in interest. Plaintiff reserved two easements out of the conveyed premises, which did not expressly provide anyone with a right-of-way over the land retained by the plaintiff. The easement reservations in effect provided that defendants needed plaintiff's permission to travel on the access road to the property after the point where the road first entered plaintiff's property. The area was reserved for a private driveway for plaintiff's exclusive use. A reservation out of the grant of properties is to be interpreted in favor of the grantor. Defendants had no easement to use the reserved access road beyond the point where the road first entered plaintiff's property. Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Interest Conveyed: Although granting clause of deed read "remise, release and forever quitclaim", deed was more than a quitclaim deed and passed after-acquired title where habendum clause read "To have and to hold all and singular the said premises together with the appurtenances unto the said party of the second part, and to his heirs and assigns forever" and certain surface tracts were excepted from the conveyance. Henningsen v. Stromberg, 124 M 185, 221 P2d 438 (1950).

Modification of Easement by City: Where grantor reserved an easement in land conveyed, city purchasing land from grantee could not obtain modification of easement based on need. Missoula v. Mix, 123 M 365, 214 P2d 212 (1950), followed in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000).

Interpretation of Grants: Generally, a public grant is to be interpreted in favor of grantor, while one between private parties is to be interpreted in favor of grantee; lands in place when a survey was made and adjoining lands were homesteaded, lying between the meander line and the low watermark of the Missouri River, which subsequently changed its channel, continued to be the property of the United States, except the abandoned bed of the river, which belonged to the state (citing 70-1-202, 70-16-201, and 70-18-201). No Retention of Personal Interest in Property Following Corporate Settlement: A settlement agreement provided that certain farm equipment would be divided solely between two family farming groups through mutual bills of sale, but the bills of sale did not specify how the equipment would be divided between the individuals, corporations, and partnerships that made up each group. One of the group partners contended that he owned the disputed equipment individually and as a partner. The District Court held that the partner had no personal interest in the property, and on appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. The settlement agreement divided the equipment solely between the farming groups, and one of the groups insured and paid taxes on the disputed equipment. Thus, substantial evidence supported the District Court's conclusion that the partner retained no personal interest in the equipment following the settlement agreement. Hjartarson v. Hjartarson, 2006 MT 273, 334 M 212, 147 P3d 164 (2006).

Loss of Repossession Rights Upon Delivery of Warranty Deed: A grant of property cannot be delivered conditionally; rather, delivery to a grantee is considered to be absolute, and the instrument takes effect upon its delivery. Any prior conditions are discharged at the time of delivery. Upon transfer of property, the transferee obtains all title held by the transferor unless a different intention is expressed or is necessarily implied. The fact that a warranty deed contained language stating that it was "subject to" a prior mortgage did not render inoperative the presumption of intention to convey the entire interest. An unambiguous provision in a deed prevails over an inconsistent provision in a sales contract pursuant to which the deed was given. Romain v. Earl Schwartz Co., 238 M 500, 779 P2d 54, 46 St. Rep. 1450 (1989).

Execution and Delivery of Quitclaim Deed Supported in Evidence — Effect: The District Court found that a quitclaim deed was executed and delivered by the Morins to the Mapstons before a typewritten note was signed by Mapstons to convey the subject property to Morins. This central finding of fact was held to be clearly supported in the evidence. The legal effect of the finding is that the quitclaim deed constituted a gift to Mapstons, no consideration being necessary. The transfer vested all actual title which Morins then had, since no different intention was expressed or necessarily implied. The typewritten note cannot be specifically enforced by Morins because they had not received an adequate consideration for the contract and because the contract lacks mutuality. Moreover, no involuntary trust was created. Morin v. Mapston, 217 M 403, 705 P2d 118, 42 St. Rep. 1283 (1985).

Operation and Effect: Under the common law as well as 70-1-520, 70-15-105, and this section, whoever grants a thing tacitly grants that without which the grant would be of no avail, and the principal thing carries with it the incident. Yellowstone Valley Co. v. Assoc. Mtg. Investors, Inc., 88 M 73, 290 P 255, 70 ALR 1002 (1930), followed in Erker v. Kester, 1999 MT 231, 296 M 123, 988 P2d 1221, 56 St. Rep. 912 (1999).

Water Right Held Through Pre-1973 Mesne Conveyances — Summary Judgment Incorrectly Granted — Abandonment of Right Factually Dependent: Duncan, who lived on a tract of land in Madison County, used water from a spring located on property (the large parcel) now owned separately from the parcel (the small parcel) lived on by Duncan. In 1950, Duncan conveyed all the property in what is now the large and small parcels to Baker. In 1951, Baker divided the property, conveying the large parcel and all appurtenances to Halse and reserving the small parcel for herself. Baker made no express reservation of water rights with the reserved property, and the deed to Halse conveying the large parcel made no express grant of water rights. For the next 10 years, Baker made no use of the house located on the small parcel. In 1961, Baker conveyed the small parcel to the Hunts, expressly conveying water rights on the property. In 1963, Halse filed a declaration of vested ground water rights for the "total flow of all springs" located on the large parcel. Fosseco, who acquired the large parcel from Halse, conveyed it, through mesne conveyances, to M.S. Consulting. The Hunts conveyed the small parcel, through mesne conveyances, to the Axtells. All uses of the water were for livestock and domestic use. In 1993, the Axtells filed a notice of water rights with the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation. M.S. Consulting subsequently served the Axtells with notice that their water rights would be cut off in 45 days, and the Axtells brought an action to enjoin the discontinuance of their water supply. The District Court granted summary judgment for the Axtells, and M.S. Consulting appealed. The Supreme Court reviewed the background of the prior appropriation law in Montana, noting that because the current statutes recognize existing water rights, the law before the 1973 statutes were enacted is still the law with regard to water rights acquired before 1973. The Supreme Court reviewed the pre-1973 law and concluded that the water rights appurtenant to all the property passed to Baker but that there was a factual issue whether, as a result of Baker's nonuse of the property and its water rights for over 10 years, Baker had abandoned the water rights conveyed to her by Duncan. If the abandonment occurred, there was no reservation of conveyance and no right to use of the water after that period of nonuse. The issue of abandonment, the Supreme Court noted, depended in turn upon several other issues, such as whether Baker intended to abandon her water right. The Supreme Court also agreed with M.S. Consulting that several other issues of fact raised by the company may also exist, although it noted that these other issues were only material if the District Court ruled a particular way on the question of abandonment. Because there were genuine issues of material fact, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to the Axtells. Axtell v. M.S. Consulting, 1998 MT 64, 288 M 150, 955 P2d 1362, 55 St. Rep. 276 (1998).

Part Case Notes

Burden of Proof in Claiming Gift — General Rule: It is the general rule in Montana that the person claiming the fact of a gift has the burden of proving it, and a gift will not be presumed unless the parties stand in close relation to one another. This exception is limited to such relationships as parent and child or husband and wife and is not extended to more distant relationships. Further, a "close and loving" relationship does not establish an in loco parentis status. Niemen v. Howell, 234 M 471, 764 P2d 854, 45 St. Rep. 2058 (1988).

No Gift Intended Although Money Placed in Joint Tenancy Bank Account: The plaintiff added her nephew's name to a joint tenancy signature card for her bank checking account to facilitate the administration of her estate upon her death. All money in the account was deposited by the plaintiff, who exercised exclusive control over the account. The plaintiff transferred money from the account to her nephew and his wife, who used the sums to purchase real estate. After her nephew died, the plaintiff sought to secure title to the real property when her nephew's wife refused to repay the money the plaintiff had given the couple. The defendant contended the money was a gift to the couple, but the plaintiff testified at length that the money was intended as a loan. The addition of her nephew's name to the signature card of her checking account was not sufficient evidence to overcome the plaintiff's testimony that there was no donative intent. To constitute a gift, the addition of a party's signature to a bank account signature card must satisfy all the requirements of a gift inter vivos: delivery, donative intent, and acceptance by the donee. When, as in this case, the depositor raised the issue of donative intent during her lifetime, the language on the signature card was not conclusive evidence that a gift was intended. Peterson v. Kabrich, 213 M 401, 691 P2d 1360, 41 St. Rep. 2196 (1984).

PERSONAL PROPERTY — SPECIAL KINDS
QUIET TITLE AND PARTITION

Part 1
Special Kinds

70-2-101. Thing in action defined.

Case Notes

Tort Claim for Personal Injuries Not "Thing in Action": A cause of action for personal injuries is not a "thing in action" or "chose in action" and is not subject to levy of garnishment. Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935), distinguishing State ex rel. Coffey v. District Court, 74 M 355, 240 P 667 (1925).

Execution Against Cause of Action: A cause of action is the right which a party has to institute a judicial proceeding, and if the relief sought is the recovery of money, the cause of action is designated a "thing" or "chose in action", which is personal property and therefore subject to seizure and sale in satisfaction of a judgment. State ex rel. Coffey v. District Court, 74 M 355, 240 P 667 (1925), distinguished in Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935).

Assignment of Thing in Action: Where person engaged in business of supplying mining timbers borrowed money from defendant and as partial security for the loan assigned to defendant the money due him each month for timbers sold, transaction whereby the person's employee presented a due bill to defendant and received part of face amount in cash with remainder to be paid following month (the due bill calling for payments to be charged to employee's account) amounted to an assignment of a chose in action by employee to defendant. Joinder of Insurance Company: The insured may prosecute an action for the full amount of the loss or either the insured or the insurer may separately sue for his portion of the loss, and if the action is instituted by either one alone, the defendant can compel joinder of the other or may waive joinder. State ex rel. Slovak v. District Court, 166 M 485, 534 P2d 850 (1975).

Claim Against Federal Government: Insurance company subrogated to rights of insured upon payment of claim had no right to sue under Federal Tort Claims Act (28 U.S.C. §931) since 31 U.S.C. §203 prohibits the assignments of claims against United States. Cascade County v. U.S., 75 F. Supp. 850 (D.C. Mont. 1948).

Oral Assignment: Things in action or rights arising out of obligations are assignable as a general rule, nonassignability being the exception, and the transfer may be made without writing whenever a writing is not expressly required by statute. 70-2-201. Action for quieting title to personal property.

Case Notes

Rebuttable Presumption That Prison Escapee Abandoned Personal Property: Hawkins escaped from the state prison. Immediately following the escape, officials packed up Hawkins' personal property, sealed it in boxes with security tape and Hawkins' name on each box, and placed it in the prison storage room. After 2 days, Hawkins was apprehended and returned to prison. He was found guilty of escape, but his property was not ordered destroyed. Over the next 30 days, Hawkins requested the return of his personal property several times. Eventually, Hawkins was escorted to the storage room and allowed to remove his legal papers but was informed that, by policy, when a prisoner escapes, all personal property is considered abandoned, so the remainder of his property was destroyed or sold. Hawkins filed an action for the value of the property, alleging that prison officials destroyed his property without affording him due process, which constituted cruel and unusual punishment and violated a gratuitous bailment that Hawkins had formed. The District Court, concluding that Hawkins had abandoned his property by his escape and that the abandonment constituted a complete defense to any action brought by Hawkins that depended on his ownership of the property, dismissed the action based on failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939), for the proposition that in determining whether one has abandoned property or rights, intention is the first and paramount object of inquiry. If there is no expressed intent to abandon, then intent must be inferred from the acts of the property owner. The presumption or inference of intent to abandon one's property based solely on the acts of the owner is a rebuttable presumption. Here, upon returning to prison and requesting the return of his property, Hawkins effectively rebutted the presumption that he intended to abandon it, and when he reclaimed his property by requesting its return, he regained his status as owner of his personal property against all others. The District Court committed reversible error when it found that Hawkins abandoned the property by escape and dismissed the action based on failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Hawkins v. Mahoney, 1999 MT 296, 297 M 98, 990 P2d 776, 56 St. Rep. 1185 (1999), distinguishing Herron v. Whiteside, 782 SW 2d 414 (1989). See also 1 C.J.S. Abandonment §12 (1985).

Bank Claim to Property Alleged as Fixtures — Inferior to Owners' Property Rights: Mills took out a loan to acquire personal property to be used in a roller-skating facility, including a removable heating system, and paid off the loan about 18 months later. Mills later sold the roller-skating facility, including the heating system, to Davises. The transaction was financed through the Little Horn State Bank. The contract provided that in case Davises defaulted, possession of the real and personal property would return to Mills and Davises would retain no further interest. Davises defaulted and entered an agreement and release with the bank whereby the property was deeded to the bank in consideration of the bank satisfying the mortgage debt. Mills later offered to sell the heating system to the bank, but the bank refused and advised Mills that the bank claimed the property as fixtures pursuant to Davises' mortgage, whereupon Mills removed the heating system. However, because Mills were at all times the owners of the personal property, the bank obtained no more interest than that held by Davises. Therefore, the bank's claim to the heating system as fixtures was inferior and subject to the property rights of Mills. Little Horn St. Bank v. Mill, 233 M 372, 760 P2d 91, 45 St. Rep. 1563 (1988).

Sale Without Authority: Because it holds land in public trust and it failed to comply with statutory requirements for land sales, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) was without authority to make the sale of land. The deed derived from the sale without authority was held void. Therefore, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) cannot be estopped from denying the validity of the deed. Norman v. St., 182 M 439, 597 P2d 715 (1979).

Jury Trial: Actions to quiet title and petitions for Writs of Possession to enforce a court's decree are of equitable cognizance, and the findings of a jury in such an action are only advisory. Fuller v. Gibbs, 122 M 177, 199 P2d 851 (1948).

Assessment Liens: City claiming to be holder of lien for unpaid sewer assessments could not maintain a quiet title action under this chapter against owners of the real property on ground that lien constituted personal property, in absence of any allegation showing that owners of real property claimed any adverse interest in the lien. Cut Bank v. Clapper Motor Co., 120 M 274, 182 P2d 474 (1947).

Mortgage Foreclosure: Where a mortgage on an automobile, though recorded, was given by one not in the chain of title and therefore did not constitute constructive notice to subsequent purchasers, an innocent purchaser relying on record ownership was protected, the mortgagee had no right or interest, and the defendant in a foreclosure action, having filed a cross-complaint to quiet title, could be awarded damages for wrongful seizure. Rigney v. Swingley, 112 M 104, 113 P2d 344 (1941).

Allegations of Complaint: Complaint in an action in the nature of one to quiet title to mill tailings deposited and impounded by a mining company on placer ground claimed by defendants, alleging generally that plaintiffs "are and at all times herein mentioned were the owners and in possession" thereof, was sufficient to admit proof of any legal, general, or special title in them without disclosing the source of their title, the rule applying as well to actions relating to rights in real property. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

Mill Tailings: Mill tailings resulting from many years of operation of a quartz mine, deposited upon adjoining millsites and impounded by a cribbing of logs for the purpose of preventing them from escaping, with the idea of working them when improved metallurgical processes warrant, which millsites were later upon cessation of mining operations filed upon by others as placer ground, were personal property, and never having been abandoned, the property of the successors in interest of the mining company making the deposit. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

Fixtures: In an action in claim and delivery, and to quiet title under this section, to recover the possession of a dredge used in placer mining operations claimed by plaintiff lessee as personal property and by defendant lessor as a fixture, the trial court erred in directing a verdict for plaintiff in view of the evidence relating to the intention of the parties in entering into the contract of lease, from which different inferences might have been drawn by different reasonable men. Gifts Effected by Written Instrument: Faith Lutheran Retirement Home v. Veis, Temple, 35 Mont. L. Rev. 132 (1974).

General Provisions

Part Case Notes

Burden of Proof in Claiming Gift — General Rule: It is the general rule in Montana that the person claiming the fact of a gift has the burden of proving it, and a gift will not be presumed unless the parties stand in close relation to one another. This exception is limited to such relationships as parent and child or husband and wife and is not extended to more distant relationships. Further, a "close and loving" relationship does not establish an in loco parentis status. Niemen v. Howell, 234 M 471, 764 P2d 854, 45 St. Rep. 2058 (1988).

No Gift Intended Although Money Placed in Joint Tenancy Bank Account: The plaintiff added her nephew's name to a joint tenancy signature card for her bank checking account to facilitate the administration of her estate upon her death. All money in the account was deposited by the plaintiff, who exercised exclusive control over the account. The plaintiff transferred money from the account to her nephew and his wife, who used the sums to purchase real estate. After her nephew died, the plaintiff sought to secure title to the real property when her nephew's wife refused to repay the money the plaintiff had given the couple. The defendant contended the money was a gift to the couple, but the plaintiff testified at length that the money was intended as a loan. The addition of her nephew's name to the signature card of her checking account was not sufficient evidence to overcome the plaintiff's testimony that there was no donative intent. To constitute a gift, the addition of a party's signature to a bank account signature card must satisfy all the requirements of a gift inter vivos: delivery, donative intent, and acceptance by the donee. When, as in this case, the depositor raised the issue of donative intent during her lifetime, the language on the signature card was not conclusive evidence that a gift was intended. Peterson v. Kabrich, 213 M 401, 691 P2d 1360, 41 St. Rep. 2196 (1984).

70-3-101. Gift defined.

Case Notes

Premarital Agreement — Allocation of 40% Ownership Interest in Brokerage Service Company Upheld: A wife argued that the District Court erred in allocating a 40% ownership interest in a brokerage service company to her husband. The Supreme Court held that the transfer was enforceable under 30-18-106 even though the wife had provided $280,000, which was transferred to the husband's separate checking account without an acknowledgment before a notary public. The $280,000 was a loan from the wife that was repaid in full. The $20,000 used to purchase the initial interest was a gift since no repayment schedule was ever executed and no consideration was requested. In addition, under 28-3-206, uncertainty is to be resolved against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist. With respect to the loan, the Supreme Court remanded after applying 31-1-106 and holding that the wife's loan of $280,000 was not interest free. In re Marriage of Weiss, 2010 MT 188, 357 Mont. 320, 239 P.3d 123. In Weiss v. Weiss, 2011 MT 240, 362 Mont. 157, 261 P.3d 1034, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court correctly determined on remand that the $280,000 loan was paid off in full by the husband and that the District Court's calculation of simple interest on the loan was correct.

Evidence That Withdrawals Intended as Loans or Gifts — No Liability for Repayment: Parents argued that their children were obligated to repay two withdrawals from the parents' personal accounts that were used to effectuate the closing of a multimillion dollar corporate transaction. The District Court decided not to hold the children liable because the parents failed to present credible evidence as to whether the withdrawals were intended as loans or gifts. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Absent sufficient evidence whether the withdrawals were loans or gifts, the children could not be held liable for repayment. Hjartarson v. Hjartarson, 2006 MT 273, 334 M 212, 147 P3d 164 (2006).

Engagement Ring Given in Contemplation of Marriage Not Considered Gift — Conditional Gift Analysis: Albinger gave Harris a $29,000 diamond engagement ring when the two promised to marry. The relationship was strained, resulting in breakups and the return of the ring to Albinger several times, but each time the couple reconciled, and the ring was returned to Harris. Following their final separation, Albinger told Harris to "take the car, the horse, the dog, and the ring", so Harris moved to Kentucky, marriage plans evaporated, and Harris refused to return the ring. Albinger filed in District Court to settle ownership of the ring. The District Court found the ring to be a gift in contemplation of marriage, implying that the existence of a condition attached to the gift, and held that Albinger was entitled to return of the ring upon failure of the condition of marriage. Harris appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The rights and duties of parties regarding property exchanges in contemplation of marriage are determined by existing law and common-law principles. A gift is a transfer of personal property made voluntarily and without consideration, and the essential elements of an inter vivos gift are donative intent, voluntary delivery, and acceptance by the recipient. Delivery, which manifests the intent of the giver, must turn over dominion and control of the property to the recipient, and when made without condition, such a gift becomes irrevocable upon acceptance, so the Supreme Court will not void the transfer when the giver experiences a change of heart. The only revocable gift recognized under Montana law is a gift in view of death, and a gift causa mortis may be revoked by the giver at any time and is revoked by the giver's recovery from the illness or escape from the peril under which the gift was made. However, the Supreme Court declined to analogize gifts in contemplation of marriage with a gift in contemplation of death. Further, a purported gift that is part of the inducement for an agreement to do or not do a certain thing becomes the consideration essential to contract formation. An exchange of promises creates a contract to marry, albeit an unenforceable one, so when an engagement ring is given as consideration for the promise to marry, a contract is formed and legal action to recover the ring is barred by the abolition of breach of promise actions in 27-1-602. Here, the engagement ring was an unconditional, completed gift upon acceptance, and a completed gift is not revocable. Thus, the ring remained in Harris's ownership and control. Albinger v. Harris, 2002 MT 118, 310 M 27, 48 P3d 711 (2002).

Burden of Proof in Claiming Gift — General Rule: It is the general rule in Montana that the person claiming the fact of a gift has the burden of proving it, and a gift will not be presumed unless the parties stand in close relation to one another. This exception is limited to such relationships as parent and child or husband and wife and is not extended to more distant relationships. Further, a "close and loving" relationship does not establish an in loco parentis status. Niemen v. Howell, 234 M 471, 764 P2d 854, 45 St. Rep. 2058 (1988).

Evidence of Gift — Clear, Convincing, Strong, and Satisfactory: When a presumption of gift does not arise under the facts, proof that a gift was made must be established by clear, convincing, strong, and satisfactory evidence, i.e., by more than a mere preponderance of the evidence. In this case, there is substantial evidence to show that the plaintiff intended the transfer of money to her nephew as a loan to be repaid as he was able to do so. Thus, the burden of proof that a gift was intended has not been met. Peterson v. Kabrich, 213 M 401, 691 P2d 1360, 41 St. Rep. 2196 (1984).

No Gift Intended Although Money Placed in Joint Tenancy Bank Account: The plaintiff added her nephew's name to a joint tenancy signature card for her bank checking account to facilitate the administration of her estate upon her death. All money in the account was deposited by the plaintiff, who exercised exclusive control over the account. The plaintiff transferred money from the account to her nephew and his wife, who used the sums to purchase real estate. After her nephew died, the plaintiff sought to secure title to the real property when her nephew's wife refused to repay the money the plaintiff had given the couple. The defendant contended the money was a gift to the couple, but the plaintiff testified at length that the money was intended as a loan. The addition of her nephew's name to the signature card of her checking account was not sufficient evidence to overcome the plaintiff's testimony that there was no donative intent. To constitute a gift, the addition of a party's signature to a bank account signature card must satisfy all the requirements of a gift inter vivos: delivery, donative intent, and acceptance by the donee. When, as in this case, the depositor raised the issue of donative intent during her lifetime, the language on the signature card was not conclusive evidence that a gift was intended. Peterson v. Kabrich, 213 M 401, 691 P2d 1360, 41 St. Rep. 2196 (1984).

No "In Loco Parentis Relationship" — No Presumption of Gift: The plaintiff transferred money to her nephew and his wife, who used the sums to purchase real property. After her nephew died, the plaintiff brought an action to secure title to the real estate when her nephew's wife refused to repay the sums the plaintiff contended were a loan to her nephew. The defendant claimed that the transfer of funds from the plaintiff to her nephew raised a presumption that the transfer was intended as a gift because the plaintiff stood in loco parentis to her nephew and that relationship triggers the presumption of gift. However, the trial court found that no in loco parentis relationship existed between the plaintiff and her nephew. To stand in loco parentis to another, a person must intentionally assume the status of a parent by accepting the responsibilities and obligations incident to the parental relationship without benefit of legal adoption. The plaintiff did not assume any parental obligations toward her nephew. At the time the transfer of money was made, her nephew was an adult who lived in close contact with his own mother. As no in loco parentis relationship existed between the plaintiff and her nephew, no presumption of gift arises. Peterson v. Kabrich, 213 M 401, 691 P2d 1360, 41 St. Rep. 2196 (1984).

Language on Savings Account Signature Card Not Conclusive: A son was added as a joint tenant on his mother's savings accounts by signing the savings institution's signature card. The card contained language declaring one-half the deposit a gift to the joint tenant. The mother later brought an action against her son, asserting that she never intended to gift any portion of the accounts to her son but merely to allow him to withdraw money for her expenses if needed. Because the mother raised the issue of ownership of funds in a joint tenancy account during her lifetime, the language on the signature card was not conclusive. Additional evidence could be examined to ascertain the true intent of the parties. Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035, 39 St. Rep. 273 (1982).

Payments in Excess of Decree — Gifts: The marriage of the parties was dissolved in 1973. The wife brought suit to collect $15,000 in satisfaction of delinquent payments for support and maintenance for the years 1976, 1977, and 1978. The husband contended that certain sums paid in excess of the decree, amounting to $15,546.11, should be offset against the payments. The husband voluntarily increased support payments and paid for the wife's psychiatric care under an oral agreement. Letters from the husband and his attorney stated that the payments were voluntary and intended as gifts to the children. The trial court held that the excess payments were gifts and that the husband was liable for the back payments. The husband contended that the payments were not gifts because they were not voluntary. He claimed that constant harassing, phone calls, and threats to withhold visitation rights were responsible for the extra payments. The Supreme Court held that while these factors no doubt had an effect, they did not overcome the substantial evidence that the payments were intended as gifts, and the husband was not entitled to offset them against the amount owed under the decree. Delaney v. Delaney, 195 M 259, 635 P2d 1306, 38 St. Rep. 1832 (1981).

Donative Intent: Evidence that donor was 88 years of age, suffered from cerebral arteriosclerosis and was disoriented and forgetful, was more susceptible to suggestion than the average healthy person, that the donee was a close friend and blood relative of the donor, and that the donee had written a letter suggesting that the donor put someone else's name on her savings account was sufficient to void purported gift effected by transfer of donor's savings account to donor and donee jointly due to donor's mental incapacity to form the requisite intent. Patterson v. Halterman, 161 M 278, 505 P2d 905 (1973).

Stock Certificates — No Delivery: Aged mother did not make gift of stock certificates to son where there was no transfer of title to certificates in manner provided by Uniform Stock Transfer Act (15-628 to 15-651, R.C.M. 1947, now repealed). Bodine v. Bodine, 149 M 29, 422 P2d 650 (1967).

Shares of Stock — Delivery: Stocks which had been purchased by the deceased with his own funds and had been issued jointly to him and his son and daughter with right of survivorship and to son and daughter as tenants in common, deposited in safety deposit boxes rented in the names of the owners who had inspected the stock in the safety deposit boxes and included dividends from stocks in individual income tax returns, were delivered by the donor to the donees and did not belong to deceased at the time of his death so as to be a part of his estate. Marans v. Newland, 141 M 32, 374 P2d 721 (1962).

Inter Vivos Gift — Elements: To constitute a gift inter vivos, within the statute, the donor must voluntarily deliver the subject of the gift to the donee with the present intention to vest the legal title in the donee, who must accept it. The essential elements are delivery, the accompanying intent, and acceptance by donee. Such a gift is made without condition and becomes at once irrevocable. Baird v. Baird, 125 M 122, 232 P2d 348 (1951); Fender v. Foust, 82 M 73, 265 P 15 (1928); O'Neil v. O'Neil, 43 M 505, 117 P 889 (1911).

70-3-102. Gift — how made.

Case Notes

Statement of Present Intent to Perform or Not Perform Not Considered Contract — Lease Not Altered by Gratuitous Promise: Defendants had a 99-year lease on a ranch owned by Earl. The lease provided that in case of need, it was subject to recall on demand by Earl. When Earl had to be placed in a nursing home without the assets to bear her expenses and needed to liquidate the property in order to qualify for federal benefits, defendants were notified that the lease was being terminated. Defendants objected, citing a letter from Earl purporting to gift to them all interest in the ranch. However, to be a gift, a transfer of property must be irrevocable, complete, without adequate or full consideration, and unmistakably intended to divest the donor of title, dominion, and control over the property. The District Court concluded that sufficient need existed to terminate the lease and denied defendants' motion to resolve any effect that the letter had on the original lease. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the letter was a mere statement by Earl of present intent to perform or not perform an act in the future and that such a gratuitous promise did not constitute a valid written modification of the original lease. Earl v. Beager, 2001 MT 44, 304 M 258, 20 P3d 788 (2001).

Language on Savings Account Signature Card Not Conclusive: A son was added as a joint tenant on his mother's savings accounts by signing the savings institution's signature card. The card contained language declaring one-half the deposit a gift to the joint tenant. The mother later brought an action against her son, asserting that she never intended to gift any portion of the accounts to her son but merely to allow him to withdraw money for her expenses if needed. Because the mother raised the issue of ownership of funds in a joint tenancy account during her lifetime, the language on the signature card was not conclusive. Additional evidence could be examined to ascertain the true intent of the parties. Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035, 39 St. Rep. 273 (1982).

Instrument Transferring Title — No Delivery of Property Required: Where a gift inter vivos is made by a written instrument transferring the title to the donee, it is not necessary to the validity of the gift that delivery of the thing given be made to the donee. In the case of a sale of personal property, as in that of a gift, the transaction between the parties is good whether possession is delivered or not, want of delivery rendering it void only as to creditors and subsequent bona fide purchasers or encumbrancers. This rule is true with respect to a gift from husband to wife, the fact that donor at times had possession of the thing given after the execution of the instrument not changing the rule. Sylvain v. Page, 84 M 424, 276 P 16, 63 ALR 528 (1929).

70-3-103. Gift not revocable.

Case Notes

Doctrine of Corporation by Estoppel Versus De Facto Corporation Doctrine — Requisite Donative Intent to Show Inter Vivos Gift to Corporation by Estoppel: A church incorporated in 1998. The attorney who filed the incorporation subsequently moved out of state, and because annual reports were not filed, the Secretary of State involuntarily dissolved the church's corporate status in 2000. The church's corporate status was reinstated in 2004. The church was not aware that it was not a valid corporation when it received a gift of property in 2002, but claimed that it was nevertheless a de facto corporation able to accept the gift. The couple who donated the property claimed that because they did not know that the church was not a valid corporation, they should be allowed to revoke the gift and that the subsequent reinstatement of the church's corporate status after the couple sought to revoke the gift did not retroactively create donative intent that the couple had revoked. The Supreme Court distinguished the de facto corporation, which was abolished in 35-1-119, from the doctrine of corporation by estoppel, which provides that a party that has dealt with a corporation cannot then deny the corporation's existence. The court applied the doctrine of corporation by estoppel to this case. It would be inequitable to allow defendants to escape possible liability just because the church, acting in good faith, was involuntarily dissolved at the time that the possible liability arose. Thus, defendants were equitably estopped from denying the corporate status of the church. The couple had the requisite donative intent to meet the definition of an irrevocable inter vivos gift, and as owner of the gifted property, the church had standing to sue. Valley Victory Church v. Sandon, 2005 MT 72, 326 M 340, 109 P3d 273 (2005).

Language on Savings Account Signature Card Not Conclusive: A son was added as a joint tenant on his mother's savings accounts by signing the savings institution's signature card. The card contained language declaring one-half the deposit a gift to the joint tenant. The mother later brought an action against her son, asserting that she never intended to gift any portion of the accounts to her son but merely to allow him to withdraw money for her expenses if needed. Because the mother raised the issue of ownership of funds in a joint tenancy account during her lifetime, the language on the signature card was not conclusive. Additional evidence could be examined to ascertain the true intent of the parties. Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035, 39 St. Rep. 273 (1982).

Gifts in View of Death

70-3-201. Gift in view of death defined.

Case Notes

Deeding of Property for Purpose of Controlling Distribution — Revocation of Qualified Gift: Intending to avoid probate, the Gilroys added their son's name to the title on their home and four vehicles for the purpose of controlling distribution upon the Gilroys' deaths. When the father died, the mother was placed in an extended care facility and an independent guardian was appointed to manage her affairs. The guardian determined that the mother's estate was running short of funds to defray the cost of extended care and sought return of the property in possession of the son. The son refused to return the property on grounds that following the father's death, interest in the vehicles passed equally to the mother and son, that the gift was complete, and that the son's interest was vested. The District Court held that placing the son's name on the titles was a qualified gift that could be revoked by the mother or the guardian. The Supreme Court affirmed. Because the addition of the son's name to the titles was an estate planning mechanism and the property was to be available for the use and benefit of the parents as long as they desired, the transfer was considered a revocable qualified transfer. Under 70-3-203, conditional transfers made in view of death are qualified and may be revoked by the giver at any time. Further, the son had agreed to transfer interest in the parents' home back to the mother at her request, so 70-1-509 did not apply. In re Guardianship & Conservatorship of Gilroy, 2004 MT 267, 323 M 149, 99 P3d 205 (2004), distinguishing Gross v. Gross, 239 M 480, 781 P2d 284 (1989).

Inheritance Tax: The phrase "in contemplation of death" with reference to transfers made taxable under the inheritance tax statute is not confined to gifts causa mortis but embraces gifts inter vivos, even though they are fully executed. In re Wadsworth's Estate, 92 M 135, 11 P2d 788 (1932).

Delivery in Trust for Donee — Acceptance Presumed: A gift causa mortis may be affected by delivery to a third person in trust for the donee although the gift does not come to the knowledge of the latter and is not accepted by him until after the death of the donor. The acts of the trustee receiving the property are deemed to be in the interest of the donee and the acceptance of the gift is presumed. Stagg v. Stagg, 90 M 180, 300 P 539 (1931).

Gift Intended to Take Effect Only in Case of Death: One of the essential elements of a gift causa mortis is that the gift is intended to take effect only in case of death of the giver, but a gift made during the last illness of the giver or under circumstances which would impress him with an expectation of speedy death is presumed to be such a gift. Stagg v. Stagg, 90 M 180, 300 P 539 (1931).

Delivery of Bank Deposit Book: Where donor, believing himself to be in peril of death from heart disease, handed bank passbooks to his brother stating that he should have them, the delivery of the books was a sufficient delivery of the deposits represented by them, his intention to make the gift being shown by a writing left with each bank to the effect that the account in each was a joint one upon which the brother could draw and that on the death of either the other should have what was remaining in the account. Fender v. Foust, 82 M 73, 265 P 15 (1928).

Gift Causa Mortis — Conditions: A gift causa mortis is subject to the following conditions: (1) it must be made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death; (2) the donor must die of the illness or peril which he then fears or contemplates; and (3) the delivery must be made with the intent that title shall vest only in case of death. Fender v. Foust, 82 M 73, 265 P 15 (1928); O'Neil v. O'Neil, 43 M 505, 117 P 889 (1911).

Validity of Gift Where Interest Is Reserved: Delivery of promissory notes and Liberty bonds with the condition that the interest therefrom should go to donor as long as he lives does not invalidate the gift as one causa mortis, where the other two elements necessary to such gifts are present. Fender v. Foust, 82 M 73, 265 P 15 (1928).

Jurisdiction as to Validity of Gifts: The validity of a gift causa mortis is determinable by the law of the place where it is made, without reference to the domicile of the donor. O'Neil v. O'Neil, 43 M 505, 117 P 889 (1911).

Deeding of Property for Purpose of Controlling Distribution — Revocation of Qualified Gift: Intending to avoid probate, the Gilroys added their son's name to the title on their home and four vehicles for the purpose of controlling distribution upon the Gilroys' deaths. When the father died, the mother was placed in an extended care facility and an independent guardian was appointed to manage her affairs. The guardian determined that the mother's estate was running short of funds to defray the cost of extended care and sought return of the property in possession of the son. The son refused to return the property on grounds that following the father's death, interest in the vehicles passed equally to the mother and son, that the gift was complete, and that the son's interest was vested. The District Court held that placing the son's name on the titles was a qualified gift that could be revoked by the mother or the guardian. The Supreme Court affirmed. Because the addition of the son's name to the titles was an estate planning mechanism and the property was to be available for the use and benefit of the parents as long as they desired, the transfer was considered a revocable qualified transfer. Under this section, conditional transfers made in view of death are qualified and may be revoked by the giver at any time. Further, the son had agreed to transfer interest in the parents' home back to the mother at her request, so 70-1-509 did not apply. In re Guardianship & Conservatorship of Gilroy, 2004 MT 267, 323 M 149, 99 P3d 205 (2004), distinguishing Gross v. Gross, 239 M 480, 781 P2d 284 (1989).

Engagement Ring Given in Contemplation of Marriage Not Considered Gift — Conditional Gift Analysis: Albinger gave Harris a $29,000 diamond engagement ring when the two promised to marry. The relationship was strained, resulting in breakups and the return of the ring to Albinger several times, but each time the couple reconciled, and the ring was returned to Harris. Following their final separation, Albinger told Harris to "take the car, the horse, the dog, and the ring", so Harris moved to Kentucky, marriage plans evaporated, and Harris refused to return the ring. Albinger filed in District Court to settle ownership of the ring. The District Court found the ring to be a gift in contemplation of marriage, implying that the existence of a condition attached to the gift, and held that Albinger was entitled to return of the ring upon failure of the condition of marriage. Harris appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The rights and duties of parties regarding property exchanges in contemplation of marriage are determined by existing law and common-law principles. A gift is a transfer of personal property made voluntarily and without consideration, and the essential elements of an inter vivos gift are donative intent, voluntary delivery, and acceptance by the recipient. Delivery, which manifests the intent of the giver, must turn over dominion and control of the property to the recipient, and when made without condition, such a gift becomes irrevocable upon acceptance, so the Supreme Court will not void the transfer when the giver experiences a change of heart. The only revocable gift recognized under Montana law is a gift in view of death, and a gift causa mortis may be revoked by the giver at any time and is revoked by the giver's recovery from the illness or escape from the peril under which the gift was made. However, the Supreme Court declined to analogize gifts in contemplation of marriage with a gift in contemplation of death. Further, a purported gift that is part of the inducement for an agreement to do or not do a certain thing becomes the consideration essential to contract formation. An exchange of promises creates a contract to marry, albeit an unenforceable one, so when an engagement ring is given as consideration for the promise to marry, a contract is formed and legal action to recover the ring is barred by the abolition of breach of promise actions in 27-1-602. Here, the engagement ring was an unconditional, completed gift upon acceptance, and a completed gift is not revocable. Thus, the ring remained in Harris's ownership and control. Albinger v. Harris, 2002 MT 118, 310 M 27, 48 P3d 711 (2002).

FINDERS

Chapter Case Notes

Chapter Applicable Only to Private Citizens: It is highly unlikely that the legislative intent was to apply this chapter to police departments; the court interpreted the chapter to apply to a private citizen who finds a thing and chooses to take charge of it in order to find its rightful owner. Narum v. Billings, 207 M 322, 673 P2d 1253, 40 St. Rep. 2075 (1983).

Sale by Finder of Property He Gave Police — Negligent Treatment by Police: After contractor's employee painted building for city, he left the equipment by the curb for contractor to pick up later. Citizen, afraid it would be stolen, notified police, who picked the equipment up. Contractor reported the equipment stolen 4 days after police picked it up. After holding it for 90 days, police gave it to citizen, who sold it. The citizen, not the police, was the finder of the equipment, and since he failed to follow this chapter's procedure he was liable to contractor for twice the value of the equipment. However, police department had the duty to return the equipment to contractor but dealt with the equipment negligently, and that negligence was the proximate cause of contractor's loss. Citizen justifiably relied on the department's statement that the equipment was his after 90 days. Therefore, city was liable to citizen in the amount of his liability to contractor, minus what citizen had received from selling the equipment. Narum v. Billings, 207 M 322, 673 P2d 1253, 40 St. Rep. 2075 (1983).

Compensation for Finding:

In an action for compensation for finding, taking care of, and feeding a band of sheep, the plaintiff must recover on the basis of compensation alone. He is not entitled to recover a gratuity but he can recover for his services, though the sheep have been mingled with other sheep, if he can show the value of the proportion of his time, labor, feed, etc., given to the estrays. Kirk v. Smith, 48 M 489, 138 P 1088 (1914).

This section must be construed with 70-5-105, and when so construed, the terms of this section are made plain. The depositary for hire is only entitled to ordinary compensation, except insofar as this rule is modified by 70-6-404. Kirk v. Smith, 48 M 489, 138 P 1088 (1914).

Complaint to State That Property Was Lost: Assuming that Title 70, ch. 5, is applicable to the case of one who picks up estray domestic animals and takes care of and feeds them, a complaint which failed to allege that the animals were in fact lost did not state a cause of action under this section. CHAPTER 6
BAILMENT — DEPOSIT

Part 1
Nature and Classification of Deposits

70-6-101. Deposit — voluntary or involuntary.

Case Notes

Three-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Breach of Bailment Obligation: Pursuant to a breach of a bailment agreement related to the transfer of 10 horses and tack, plaintiff filed a claim for the value of the property, asserting that under 27-2-202(2), 5 years were allowed to bring the claim as a breach of contract. The District Court concluded that the voluntary bailment agreement was not a contract, but rather an obligation, which was governed by the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-202(3), and because the claim was not brought within 3 years, summary judgment for defendants was appropriate. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Regardless of the fact that plaintiff characterized the claim as a breach of contract, there was no evidence of an expressed agreement for sale of the property, so defendants were obligated but not contractually required to account for the property. Plaintiff's election to sue on a contract theory did not operate to grant 2 additional years for plaintiff to assert her rights. The District Court's conclusion that plaintiff's action was not timely was correct. Demarest v. Broadhurst, 2004 MT 147, 321 M 470, 92 P3d 1168 (2004).

Reasonable Expectation of Privacy in Lost Wallet — Evidence Obtained From Search of Lost Wallet Subject to Suppression: Hamilton's lost wallet was turned into the Bozeman police, who opened it to determine ownership. In doing so, the police discovered prescription drugs. Hamilton confessed that the drugs were not prescribed for her, and she was arrested and convicted. On appeal, Hamilton asserted that she retained an expectation of privacy in the lost wallet and that the fruits of the search of the wallet should be suppressed. The Supreme Court agreed. In determining whether an unlawful search of the wallet occurred, the court applied St. v. Scheetz, 286 M 41, 950 P2d 722 (1997), looking at whether Hamilton had an actual expectation of privacy that society was willing to recognize as objectively reasonable and at the nature of the state's intrusion. When a person intentionally abandons property, the expectation of privacy is abandoned as well. However, when property is not intentionally or voluntarily abandoned, the expectation of privacy remains substantially intact. Thus, Hamilton's expectation of privacy was diminished only to the extent necessary for the police to determine ownership. The police search exceeded what was necessary to determine ownership of the wallet and was not justified by any exception to the warrant requirements. Therefore, the warrantless search was illegal, and the evidence obtained as a result of the search should have been suppressed. Hamilton's conviction was reversed. St. v. Hamilton, 2003 MT 71, 314 M 507, 67 P3d 871 (2003).

Storing Valuables in Business Safe of Friend Who Dies — Necessity of Presenting Original Receipt or Filing Creditor's Claim to Recover Valuables: Boyer stored gold and silver in the coin shop safe of a friend with whom he did a lot of business and received a receipt, thereby creating a deposit for exchange under this section. The friend died. The friend's sons and widow assured Boyer that they knew of the storage agreement, that his metals were safe, that he did not have to file a creditor's claim against the estate, and that they would return the metals on presentation of the receipt and a demand for the metals. They refused to return the metals on demand because Boyer could not find the original receipt and presented a copy. They testified that they had paid other claims for which a creditor's claim against the estate had not been filed and had returned properties without presentation of the original receipts. They knew Boyer had not already used the original receipt to retrieve the metals and that Boyer had a good excuse for losing the original receipt. Relying on NW. Bank of Lewistown v. Estate of Coppedge, 219 M 473, 713 P2d 523 (1986), the Supreme Court held that they were estopped by their actions, statements, and knowledge from denying the existence and validity of the claim. The lower court erred in holding that a creditor's claim against the estate was necessary to require the estate to return the property. Boyer v. Sparboe, 263 M 289, 867 P2d 1116, 51 St. Rep. 60 (1994).

Loan for Exchange: Where a party let defendant have a check under an agreement that he would use the proceeds in his own business for cashing miners' pay checks and repay the amount on a certain day, defendant was not guilty of larceny as bailee where he used it for other purposes and did not repay it, as the transaction was a loan for exchange and the title passed to defendant. St. v. Karri, 51 M 157, 149 P 956 (1915), distinguished in St. v. Ahl, 140 M 305, 371 P2d 7 (1962).

Section Not Applicable if No Value Disclosed — Bags Lost by Armored Car Service: The Supreme Court held that the relationship between an armored car service and a customer was a contractual bailment. Five bags received from the customer were lost by the armored car service, but the contract receipt for the bags regarding the value of the contents had been left blank. This section is not applicable to the determination of damages in this case because it relates only to liability for the stated value of deposited items. Section 27-1-311, setting forth the general rule for the measure of damages for breach of contract, applies. Interstate Brands Corp. v. Cannon, 218 M 380, 708 P2d 573, 42 St. Rep. 1670 (1985).

Loan of Vehicle for Use — Section Inapplicable: A loan for use occurred when the owner of semitrailer left it with a log home company under an agreement that the company was to use it to haul one load of logs. No Implied Contract Agister's Lien Absent Custody or Control of Cattle: Bellanger obtained loans from the Daniels-Sheridan Federal Credit Union to finance a ranching operation, securing the loans with several promissory notes securing an interest in the cattle on the ranch. Bellanger subsequently defaulted on the loans, and the credit union initiated an action to enforce the promissory notes pursuant to the Uniform Commercial Code. The case broadened to encompass a dispute over proceeds from the sale of the cattle to include Bellanger's father Alfred, who asserted an agister's lien for having kept the cattle on his property. The cattle were subsequently seized and sold for $79,012.27, and the District Court split the proceeds, with $45,467.94 paid to the credit union and a judgment for the remainder owed on the promissory notes and $33,544.33 paid to the owner of the auction company where Bellanger customarily sold cattle, but Alfred and Bellanger were foreclosed of all interest in the proceeds. On appeal, Alfred asserted that his agister's lien should have entitled him to some of the proceeds. Alfred contended that an agister's lien was commenced via an implied contract when the credit union obtained a preliminary injunction against removal or sale of the cattle, which required Alfred to care for the cattle on his property, pursuant to 27-1-222, 45-8-211, and this section. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's finding that because Alfred never had custody or control of the cattle, allowing Bellanger to run the cattle on the property rent-free in exchange for looking after Alfred's cattle, the statutory duties upon which Alfred relied in support of an implied contract agister's lien were inapplicable. The court declined to recognize any manner for the creation of an agister's lien except as provided in 71-3-1201. Daniels-Sheridan Fed. Credit Union v. It is incumbent upon him, in an action for failure to redeliver two horses as agreed, to show that he did use that degree of care for the preservation of the property. Shropshire v. Denial of Liability: The general rule that where money is to become due only after demand, it is necessary for plaintiff to allege and prove that this requirement had been met does not apply where defendant denies all liability. Under such circumstances a demand would be useless and hence is not required by law. Cassidy v. Slemons & Booth, 41 M 426, 109 P 976 (1910); Judith Inland Transp. Co. v. Williams, 36 M 25, 91 P 1061 (1907).

Waiver of Demand: A cause of action does not arise in favor of a depositor until demand and refusal, unless the depositary has waived demand. Cassidy v. Slemons & Booth, 41 M 426, 109 P 976 (1910); Stadler v. First Nat'l Bank of Helena, 22 M 190, 56 P 111 (1899).

Interest on Money Deposited: This section refers only to the obligation resting upon the depositary to deliver. It cannot be applied in resisting the payment of interest on money deposited to indemnify sureties on a bond against loss. Leggat v. Palmer, 39 M 302, 102 P 327 (1909).

Bank Deposit: When money is deposited in a bank, the money becomes the property of the bank and the relation of debtor and creditor is created. A contract is implied that an equivalent sum shall be paid to the depositor upon demand. Stadler v. First Nat'l Bank of Helena, 22 M 190, 56 P 111 (1899). See Cassidy v. Part 3
Gratuitous Deposits

70-6-301. Gratuitous deposit defined.

Case Notes

Bank Holding Securities for Safekeeping Without Compensation a Gratuitous Bailee: Where bank accepted Liberty bonds for safekeeping but made no charge therefor, contention that bank was not a gratuitous bailee because, by rendering such service, it would induce customers to deal with the bank in other matters for its profit, was improper in absence of evidence that the bank had sought or advertised for such deposits of valuable papers, and the bank was a gratuitous bailee. Boyd v. Harrison St. Bank, 102 M 94, 56 P2d 724 (1936).

Demand for Return of Property: Where defendant's position with respect to property was that of a gratuitous bailee, a demand made upon him for the return of the property and a refusal by him were prerequisites to the accrual of the plaintiff's right of action to recover the property. Gates v. Powell, 77 M 554, 252 P 377 (1926).

70-6-302. Degree of care required of gratuitous depositary.

Case Notes

Inventory Search — Not Justified: Contraband found under a seat during inventory of an automobile held in police custody was not in plain view, thus it was seized in violation of individual privacy and freedom from unreasonable searches. The inventory search was not justified by protection of the contents for the owner's benefit or protection of the police from claims for lost property beyond articles in plain view from outside the vehicle. St. v. Sawyer, 174

M 512, 571 P2d 1131 (1977), distinguished in St. v. Pastos, 269 M 43, 887 P2d 199, 51 St. Rep. 1441 (1994).

Degree of Care Required: Where Liberty bonds were lost in bank robbery, after bank advised that robbery was scheduled and failed to take precaution of safety devices with which equipped, the rule of "slight care" provided by this section was not met by proof that bank exercised same degree of care of bailor's property as it did its own of like kind and value. Failure to use care as situation demands is gross negligence. Boyd v. Harrison St. Bank, 102 M 94, 56 P2d 724 (1936).

Deposit for Hire — Storage

70-6-403. Degree of care required of depositary for hire.

Case Notes

Ordinary Care — Burden of Proof on Bailee: A bailee for hire must use at least ordinary care for the preservation of the things stored. If the article placed in storage is in good condition and returned damaged or not returned at all, the presumption is that the bailee was negligent and the burden is upon the bailee to prove that he used due care. Ordinary Care: There is not necessarily any conflict between this section and 70-6-211. The rule that a bailee for hire is charged only with ordinary care has not been changed. Shropshire v. Sidebottom, 30 M 406, 76 P 941 (1904).

Case Notes

Liability of Tavern Owner for Foreseeable Injury-Producing Conduct by Visibly Intoxicated Patron: Wells was served alcohol at the Town Tavern immediately prior to driving a car through the wall of the tavern, injuring another patron. The patron sued the tavern owner, Mortensen, under the dram shop law in 27-1-710, which provides tavern owner liability for accidents arising from an event involving a visibly intoxicated patron. In defense, Mortensen contended that the injuries to the patron resulted from an intervening, superseding, new, and independent cause that was not reasonably foreseeable, thereby severing the chain of causation from Mortensen's negligent act. Wells was in a wheelchair and appeared to be unable to operate the wheelchair himself. Causation requires a determination, ordinarily by the factfinder, that a defendant's conduct helped produce the injury and that the injury would not have occurred without it. In cases involving alleged intervening causes, foreseeability is properly considered with respect to causation. An intervening cause is one in which a force came into motion at the time of the defendant's negligent act and combined with the negligent act to cause the injury to the plaintiff and is also determined by foreseeability. The consequences, including criminal conduct, of serving alcohol to a visibly intoxicated person are reasonably foreseeable precisely because of the causal relationship between serving alcohol and drunken conduct. When a person consumes alcohol, subsequent driving resulting in an injury-producing accident is an intervening act, but it is an act that is reasonably foreseeable as a matter of law. Thus, the affirmative defense of an intervening, superseding cause did not apply. Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351, 56 St. Rep. 864 (1999), following Nehring v. LaCounte, 219 M 462, 712 P2d 1329, 43 St. Rep. 93 (1986), and Jevning v. Skyline Bar, 223 M 422, 726 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1845 (1986), and distinguishing USF&G v. Part 8
Uniform Unclaimed Property Act

Part Official Comments

Prefatory Note — Statement of History of 1995 Model Act: This Act is preceded by the 1954 Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act (1954), which was revised in 1966, and the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act (1981). The 1954 Act was drafted during a period of conflicting legislation among the various States and several Supreme Court decisions in the late 1940's and early 1950's. In 1965, these conflicts were resolved by the decision in Texas v. New Jersey, 379 U.S. 674 (1965), which established a set of priorities for claimant States. These rules of priority were then adopted in the 1981 Act. They were re-examined and reaffirmed in Delaware v. New York, [507] U.S. [490], 113 S.Ct. 1550, 123 L.Ed.2d 211 (1993). Although the Delaware Court made no change in the rules of priority, it clarified the issue of how to determine the identity of the "debtor" — the "holder" under this Act — when payments by intermediaries are at stake. The "debtor" will be defined by reference to the state law that creates the property interest; an intermediary which holds property in its own name will generally be the debtor, and not the original obligor which has satisfied its obligation by transmitting payment to the intermediary. Delaware v. New York also makes it clear that no State may supersede the Court's priority rules by seeking to establish different priorities under state law. See Comments to Section 1 [70-9-802] and Section 4 [70-9-805] for further discussion of these rules.

This Act retains the custodial features of the 1954 Act and the 1981 Act. Thus, the State does not take title to unclaimed property, but takes custody only, and holds the property in perpetuity for the owner.

A State may enforce its claim of custody in the courts of other jurisdictions, see Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. Kervick, 60 N.J. 289, 288 A.2d 289 (1972), or in its own courts. Even if a holder does not do business in the State, that State should be able to require the holder to report and deliver unclaimed property in the State, under the Texas v. New Jersey rationale, based on the common law rule of mobilia sequunter personam: the right of succession to personal property is governed by the law of the owner's domicile. See also Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Moore, 333 U.S. 541, 546-47 (1947), where the Supreme Court described the State as a "conservator" when claiming property under a custodial unclaimed property law. The Court in Standard Oil Co. v. New Jersey, 347 U.S. 428, 437 (1951), characterized the Moore case as involving a "conservation statute." See generally Epstein, McThenia and Forslund, "Unclaimed Property Law and Reporting Forms," sections 2.01, 3.02, 4.01 (Matt. Bend. 1984).

Official Comments

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

The definitions reflect, pursuant to Texas v. New Jersey, 379 U.S. 674, 85 S.Ct. 626, 13 L.Ed. 2d 596 (1965), the fact that the Act applies to persons in other States who are holding property, eliminating any requirement that those persons be engaged in business in the enacting State. The obligation of a holder to report to all States in which a creditor had an address, or in which a transaction took place, or which is the holder's domicile, is now well established in the abandoned property statutes of the States and in the decisions of the Supreme Court. The holder's obligation to report is not confined to situations where the holder is authorized to do business or actually transacts business in a State. These jurisdictional rules are spelled out in detail in Section 4 [70-9-805].

Paragraph (2) [(2)] defines "apparent owner" in terms of reference to the person who appears on the holder's records to be the person entitled to the property. The right of a State to claim abandoned property depends on the information in the holder's records concerning the apparent owner's identification. It is of no consequence that without notice to the holder, the owner may have transferred the property to another person. In Nellius v. Tampax, Inc., 394 A.2d 333 (Del. Ch. Ct. 1978), the court held that the address of the apparent, not the actual, owner controlled. The holder is not required to ascertain the name of the current owner or resolve a dispute between the owner of record and a successor contesting ownership. However, nothing in this Act prohibits the actual owner from recovering the property, pursuant to Sections 10 and 15 [70-9-811 and 70-9-815], from the holder or the administrator. Similarly, the State of last known address of the actual owner can recover the property, pursuant to Section 14 [70-9-814], from the State which initially receives custody.

The definition of "business association" in paragraph (3) [(3)] expressly includes mutual funds, which previously were covered in general terms.

The definition of "holder" in paragraph 5 [(6)] is a clarification. There had been some confusion in the past over the identity of the holder of an obligation that had been transferred by the original obligor, as in the payment of dividends on corporate stock. As held by the Supreme Court in Delaware v. New York, the holder is the person indebted under the applicable state law. Thus, if the original debtor, the dividend-paying corporation, has satisfied its debt under its share contract and under state law by transmitting payment to an intermediary, which has undertaken to make the payment, the intermediary becomes the debtor. The holder thus is "a person obligated," i.e., a person who could be sued successfully by the owner for refusing to make payment.

Although the 1981 Act defined "last known address" as "a description of the location of the apparent owner sufficient for the purpose of the delivery of mail," that Act indicated some uncertainty over whether this was an accurate interpretation of Texas v. New Jersey, since this definition was accompanied by a Commissioners' Comment that appeared to be at odds with the definition itself. Thus, the Comment stated that "Where a holder originally had the address of the owner and it has been subsequently destroyed, a computer code may be one way of establishing an address within the state." "Last known address" is no longer defined in the Act; instead, the sections dealing with the jurisdictional rules (Sections 4 and 14) [70-9-805 and 70-9-814] are rewritten so that they define, individually, the rules of the States' priorities of taking.

The touchstone of those rules of priority is Texas v. New Jersey, 379 U.S. 674, 85 S.Ct. 626, 13 L.Ed. 2d 596 (1965), in which the Court established as a primary rule that unclaimed property goes to "the State of the last known address of the creditor, as shown by the debtor's books and records." Id. at 681-82, 85 S.Ct. at 631, 13 L.Ed. 2d at 601. Where the debtor has "no record of any address at all," the state of corporate domicile could take, id. at 682, 85 S.Ct. at 631, 13 L.Ed. 2d at 601, subject to proof by another State "that the last known address of the creditor was within its borders." Id., 13 L.Ed. 2d at 602. See also Pennsylvania v. New York, 407 U.S. 206, 32 L.Ed. 2d 693, 92 S.Ct. 2075 (1972).

In Delaware v. New York, the Court reaffirmed the rules of Texas v. New Jersey: Delaware, as the State of corporate domicile, would take the property initially where the holder's records did not contain a last known address. That delivery of the property to Delaware, however, would not cut off the rights of another State to later claim the property from Delaware. For instance:

On remand, if New York can establish by reference to debtors' records that the creditors who were owed particular securities distributions had last known addresses in New York, New York's right to escheat under the primary rule will supersede Delaware's right under the secondary rule. As we noted in Texas, "the State of corporate domicile should be allowed to . . . retai[n] the property for itself only until some other State comes forward with proof that it has a superior right to escheat." 379 U.S., at 682. Accord, Pennsylvania, 407 U.S., at 210-211. If New York or any other claimant State fails to offer such proof on a transaction-by-transaction basis or to provide some other proper mechanism for ascertaining creditors' last known addresses, the creditor's State will not prevail under the primary rule, and the secondary rule will control. Id. at ____, 113 S.Ct. at 1561-62, 123 L.Ed. 2d at 227-28. (Deletions in original.)

In sum, Delaware v. New York requires that some "proper mechanism" show that the owner had an address within the State that asserts a primary claim. A computer code would appear to be such a means of proof. On the other hand, showing that the transaction took place in the State would not be sufficient proof of an owner's address. Pennsylvania v. New York, 407 U.S. 206, 92 S.Ct. 2075, 32 L.Ed. 2d 693 (1972).

For purposes other than these jurisdictional rules — i.e., the holder's duties of reporting and maintenance of records and the States' duties of publication — the "last known address" will depend on the nature and extent of the holder's records. Thus, the holder will include in its report the best address it has, which may or may not include a street address, or, for example, an "E mail" address.

The definition of "money order" in paragraph (10) [(10)] is designed to distinguish between personal money orders issued by business entities which are not financial organizations, which have a seven year holding period, and those issued by financial organizations, which have a five year holding period.

The Act provides exclusively for the disposition of unclaimed intangible property and does not apply to tangible property, with one exception: Section 3 [70-9-804] applies to tangible property contained in safe deposit boxes. Paragraph (12) [(13)], defining property, is not intended as a substantive addition to the coverage of the 1981 Act. It is, however, intended to be all-inclusive; the descriptions of property interests that are set forth as examples are not limiting, but are stated to help holders identify kinds of property interests which otherwise may be overlooked. Thus, "property" is not the check, note, certificate or other document that evidences the property interest, but the underlying right or obligation. See Blue Cross of Northern California v. Cory, 120 Cal. App. 3d 723, 174 Cal. Rptr. 901 (1981) ("right to be paid" is the "'intangible personal property' (or 'chose in action') . . . which is recognized in the UPL"). The requirement that the right be "fixed and certain" excludes unliquidated claims from the coverage of the Act, such as disputed tort claims.

Many States already have laws that define utilities. Paragraph (15) [(16)] gives a State the option to adopt the Act's definition of a utility, or another definition contained in existing law. The term is intended to be broadly applied.

Official Comments

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

Section 2 [70-9-803] continues the general proposition that all intangible property is within the coverage of this Act. It provides in a single section for all the various periods of abandonment that were separately stated in several sections of the 1981 Act. With limited exceptions this reorganization does not alter the bases for presuming abandonment of the property from that established in the 1981 Act, but merely restates those standards in a unified section, more easily applied, with less repetition. One exception is that whereas the 1981 Act exempted from the presumption of abandonment certain property held by a bank if the bank held other property of the depositor not presumptively abandoned, the present Act does not. It was the conclusion of the Commissioners that an owner's knowledge of some property does not necessarily imply knowledge of all his or her property held by the bank, and that the owner is entitled to the protection of this Act as to all the owner's property.

This section treats underlying bond obligations the same as underlying stock, except as to bearer bonds and original issue discount bonds. Thus, registered interest paying bonds will be presumed abandoned five years after the date of an unpresented instrument issued to pay interest. In the case of bearer bonds, however, although interest held on deposit for more than five years that has not been paid out as a result of failure to present a coupon for payment will be considered abandoned, the underlying principal represented by the bearer certificate, provided such certificate is not held by an agent due to a mail return or other similar circumstance, will not be considered abandoned even if the coupons that were attached to that certificate at the time of original issuance have not been presented for payment. Where interest is accrued but not paid until the return of principal at the time the obligation matures or is called, and there is no making of periodic interest payments, there is not the same motivation for bond holders to communicate with the trustee or paying agent as in the case of interest paying bonds, and a lack of communication should not give rise to a presumption of abandonment. Therefore, bearer bonds and original issue discount bonds are excluded from paragraph (3) [(1)(c)] of this section, and will fall instead under paragraph (14) [(1)(n)]. Those bonds will be presumed abandoned five years after the issuer's obligation to pay arises, i.e., five years after call or maturity.

The 1981 Act shortened the general dormancy period from 7 years to 5 years. Certain exceptions continue to be appropriate. For instance, statistical evidence indicates that a period of 15 years continues to be appropriate in the case of travelers checks, and seven years in the case of personal money orders and money orders issued by express companies. Also, in certain instances shorter periods are appropriate. For instance, the likelihood of finding the owner of a payroll check is materially decreased after one year. Hence, there is a one year dormancy period for unclaimed wages. Coverage of consumer credits is specifically provided, which is a clarification of the 1981 Act. The term covers credits owed on consumer transactions such as returns of merchandise, cancellation of layaways, and various kinds of deposits. The existence and amounts of such credits will of course be dependent on the terms of the contract between the holder and the consumer.

The dormancy period for unpaid distributions from retirement accounts and plans has been modified to shorten the period of presumed abandonment from five to three years, since an earlier date of presumed abandonment should be of assistance in assuring that the assets of the plan are ultimately claimed by their owner.

Because the unclaimed property laws are matters of traditional state powers, are laws of general application, and have only a tenuous, remote and peripheral impact on ERISA plans, it has been held that they are not pre-empted by federal law. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Borges, 869 F.2d 142 (2nd Cir. 1989); Attorney General v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Michigan, 168 Mich. App. 372, 424 N.W.2d 54 (Ct. App. 1988), appeal denied, No. 83788 (March 31, 1989). These cases declined to follow two advisory opinions to the contrary, issued by the Department of Labor (Opinions 78-32A, December 22, 1978, and 79-30A, May 14, 1979). Thereafter, notwithstanding the Second Circuit and Michigan decisions, the Department continued to adhere to its position that unclaimed property laws "relate to" ERISA, and are thus pre-empted, in a letter opinion issued March 3, 1995. 22 BNA Pension & Benefits Reporter 743 (1995). That opinion relied on Ingersoll-Rand Co. v. McClendon, 498 U.S. 133 (1990), as holding that pre-emption extended to state laws that had only an indirect economic affect on ERISA plans. Subsequently, the Supreme Court in New York State Conference of Blue Cross & Blue Shield Plans v. Travelers Ins. Co., [514] U.S. [645] (63 Law Week 4372, April 26, 1995), expounded a much narrower meaning of Ingersoll-Rand. The case held that ERISA does not pre-empt the imposition of statutorily-mandated surcharges on bills of hospital patients whose commercial insurance coverage is purchased by an ERISA plan, or on HMOs insofar as their membership fees are paid by an ERISA plan. The Court emphasized that even though such state statutes would affect choices made by plan administrators, the ERISA pre-emption was not so broad as to nullify those state laws. The Court emphasized the basic presumption that "Congress does not intend to supplant state law" (63 LW at 4374). The Court said that Ingersoll-Rand does not hold that "merely economic influence" on administrative decisions will trigger pre-emption. (63 LW at 4376.) Ingersoll-Rand was explained to hold only that pre-emption would be found where state law produced "such acute, albeit indirect, economic effects" as to force a certain substantive scheme of coverage or effectively restrict insurance choices. (Id. at 4375.) Thus, "the basic thrust of the [ERISA] pre-emption clause, then, was to avoid a multiplicity of regulation in order to permit the nationally uniform administration of employee benefit plans." (Id. at 4375.) See also Mackey v. Lanier Collection Agency & Service, Inc., 486 U.S. 825 (1988), holding that ERISA does not pre-empt a state garnishment statute under which a creditor may reach plan participants' benefits. A state claim under its unclaimed property law would appear to be no more intrusive to the federal regulatory scheme than its garnishment laws. Accordingly, with one exception, the final distribution of assets of a terminated plan, which is governed by 29 U.S.C. sec. 1350, this Act presumes that it is not pre-empted by ERISA.

Intangible property held by a utility other than subscribers' deposits and refunds are subject to the five year rule of subsection (a)(14) [(1)(n)].

Subsection (e) [(5)] is intended to make clear that property is reportable notwithstanding that the owner, who has lost or otherwise forgotten his or her entitlement to property, fails to present to the holder evidence of ownership or to make a demand for payment. See Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Moore, 333 U.S. 541 (1948), in which the Court stated: "When the state undertakes the protection of abandoned claims, it would be beyond a reasonable requirement to compel the state to comply with conditions that may be quite proper as between the contracting parties." See also Provident Institution for Savings v. Malone, 221 U.S.. 660 (1911), involving savings account; Insurance Co. of North America v. Knight, 8 Ill. App. 3d 871, 291 N.E.2d 40 (1972), involving negotiable instruments, and People v. Marshall Field & Co., 83 Ill. App. 3d 811, 404 N.E.2d 368 (1980), involving gift certificates. With respect to gift certificates, see also Section 19(a) [70-9-819(1)], which invalidates private periods of limitation. Thus, gift certificates will be reportable notwithstanding language on the certificate purporting to avoid escheat by creating an expiration date prior to the time of presumed abandonment. Section (c) [(3)] also obviates the result reached in Oregon Racing Comm. v. Multonamah Kennel Club, 242 Or. 572, 411 P.2d 63 (1963), involving unpresented winning parimutuel tickets.

Since the holder is indemnified against any loss resulting from the delivery of the property to the administrator, no possible harm can result in requiring that holders turn over the property, even though the owner has not presented proof of death or surrendered the insurance policy, savings account passbook, the gift certificate, winning racing ticket, or other memorandum of ownership.

Section 3 [70-9-804] parallels Section 2(d) of the 1966 Act and Section 16 of the 1981 Act. This section is not intended to cover property left in places other than safekeeping depositories, for example, airport lockers or field warehouses. Its coverage is limited to tangible property held in safe deposit boxes in banks and financial institutions. Intangible property, evidence of which is found in a safe deposit box, is covered by Section 2 [70-9-803].

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

Section 4 [70-9-805] describes the general circumstances under which a State may claim abandoned intangible property. This section closely follows the language of Texas v. New Jersey, in which the court reasoned that unclaimed property is an asset of the creditor and should generally be paid to the creditor State, i.e., the State of residence of the apparent owner. Consistent with that reasoning it held that unclaimed intangible property is subject to escheat or custody as unclaimed property first by the State of the owner's last known address. (See Section

1(7) [70-9-802(7)] and the Comment with regard to "last known address.") If that State cannot claim the property, the State of the holder's domicile is entitled to custody. Consistent with the court's concern for a simple rule which would avoid the complexities of proving domicile and residence the court established the priority on the basis of information contained in the holder's records. Where the holder's records do not show that the owner had an address within the State, the second priority claimant, the State of domicile of the holder, is entitled to claim the property. Another State can later assume custody from the State of the holder's domicile by showing that the last known address of the owner was within its borders. Likewise, if the State of last known address does not have an unclaimed property law which applies to the property, the State of the holder's domicile can take the property, again subject to the right of the State of last known address to recover the property if and when it enacts an unclaimed property or escheat law.

Paragraph (1) [(1)] restates the factual situation in Texas v. New Jersey. As the court there said ". . . the address on the records of a debtor, which in most cases will be the only one available, should be the only relevant last known address."

Paragraph (2) [(2)] covers the situation in which, on the basis of the holder's records, the identity of the person entitled to the property is unknown, and the holder therefore reports to the State of its domicile, but it is later established by another State that the property was owned by or payable to a person whose last known address was within the claiming State. This is a rational extension of Texas v. New Jersey. Reunification of the owner with his or her property in this circumstance is impossible, and insofar as that issue is concerned, it makes no difference whether the property is delivered to the State of the holder's domicile or the State of the owner's last known address. However, following the equitable concept of distributing unclaimed property among creditor States articulated by the Supreme Court in Texas v. New Jersey, and reaffirmed in Delaware v. New York, the subsection directs that where there is no record of a name but there is a record that the last known address was within the State, that State where the owner had an address can claim the property.

Paragraph (3) [(3)] is the secondary rule of Texas v. New Jersey. The Supreme Court ruled that when property is owed to persons for whom there are no addresses, the property will be subject to escheat by the State of the holder's domicile, provided that another State may later claim upon proof that the last known address of the person entitled to the property was within its borders.

Paragraph (4) [(4)] provides that if the law of the State of the owner's last known address does not provide for escheat or taking custody of the unclaimed property or if that State's escheat or unclaimed property law is not applicable to the property in question, the property is subject to claim by the State in which the holder is domiciled. In that instance, the State of the owner's last known address may thereafter claim the property if it enacts an applicable unclaimed property law. The holder State will act as custodian and pay or deliver the property to the owner or the State which has priority under Texas v. New Jersey upon request. As held in State v. Liquidating Trustees of Republic Petroleum Co., 510 S.W.2d 311 (Texas 1974), Texas v. New Jersey dealt only with conflicting claims of two or more States, and provides no basis for a holder to object to the claim of its State of domicile by asserting that another State has a superior claim, if the holder has not already reported the property to that other State. Therefore a State which claims custody on the ground that it is the holder's domicile is not required to prove that the laws of some or all of the other 49 States do not "provide" for the taking of the property; if the holder has not reported and paid the property to another State, as between the domiciliary State and the holder, it will be presumed that such other State's laws do not apply. If another State does claim the property, it may of course proceed under Section 14 [70-9-814].

Paragraph (5) [(5)] provides that when the last known address of the apparent owner is in a foreign nation the State in which the holder is domiciled may claim the property. This issue was not dealt with by the Supreme Court in Texas v. New Jersey, but is a rational extension of that ruling.

Paragraph (6) [(6)] provides for a situation in which neither of the priority claims discussed in Texas v. New Jersey can be made, but the State has a genuine and important contact with the property. An example of the type of claim which might be made under paragraph (6) [(6)] arose in O'Connor v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 412 A.2d 539 (Pa.1980). There Pennsylvania sought to escheat unredeemed trading stamps sold by a corporation domiciled in New Jersey to retailers located in Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania took the position that Texas v. New Jersey did not create a jurisdictional bar to escheat by other States when the States granted priority were unable to take. There was no first priority claim since there were no addresses of the trading stamp purchasers. The second priority claimant, the State of corporate domicile (New Jersey), was not permitted under its law to escheat trading stamps (see New Jersey v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 56 N.J.Super. 589, 153 A.2d 691 (1959), affirmed per curiam, 31 N.J. 385, 157 A.2d 505 (1960)) and hence Pennsylvania urged that in order to prohibit a corporate windfall it should be allowed to claim this property. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court affirmed a lower court decision which overruled Sperry & Hutchinson's motion to dismiss but did not reach the Texas v. New Jersey issue.

Gift certificates, unused airline tickets, and other property for which there is no last known address may be claimed by the State where the purchase was made if the State of corporate domicile does not have an abandoned property law covering the property in question under paragraph (6) [(6)].

Travelers checks and money orders are covered under paragraph (7) [(7)], which states the rule adopted by Congress in 12 U.S.C. sections 2501 et seq. The congressional action was in response to the Supreme Court decision in Pennsylvania v. New York, 407 U.S. 206 (1972), which held that the State of corporate domicile was entitled to escheat money orders when there was no last known address of the purchaser although the property had been purchased in other States. Paragraph (7) [(7)], pursuant to the congressional mandate, substitutes as the test for asserting a claim to travelers checks and money orders the place of purchase rather than the State of incorporation of the issuer.

Wholly foreign transactions are excluded from the coverage of the Act. See Section 26 [70-9-826].

This section is consistent with those cases which have ruled on the issue of service charges under the 1966 Act and the 1981 Act. Section 5 [70-9-806] is a limitation on the deduction of charges based solely on dormancy and is applicable to all intangible property presumed abandoned. This section, which applies to all unclaimed property, replaces similar limitations that were specifically focused on various types of property in the 1981 Act. The limitation of a service charge to an amount that is not unconscionable is new and is drawn from Article 2, Section 302, of the Uniform Commercial Code.

This provision clarifies the burden of proof in situations where the obligation evidenced by a negotiable instrument is disputed by the holder, and is consistent with cases which have ruled on the matter. See Insurance Co. of North America v. Knight, 8 Ill.App.3d 871, 291 N.E.2d 40 (1972), app. dismissed 414 U.S. 804, 38 L.Ed.2d 40, 94 S.Ct. 165 (1973), Blue Cross of Northern Cal. v. Cory, 120 Cal. App.3d 723, 174 Cal. Rptr. 901 (1981), and Revenue Cabinet v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 702 S.W.2d 433, 435 (Ky. 1986). See also Riggs Nat'l Bank v. District of Columbia, 581 A.2d 1229 (D.C. App. 1990). It is also consistent with the cases holding that when claiming abandoned property the State steps into the shoes of the owner (see Epstein, McThenia and Forslund, "Unclaimed Property and Reporting Forms," sec. 3.02 (Matt. Bend. 1984), and Article 3-308 of the Uniform Commercial Code. Under U.C.C. Section 3-308(2), "When signatures are admitted or established, production of the instrument entitles a holder to recover on it unless the defendant establishes a defense." The reason for requiring a plaintiff to produce the instrument is "to show that the plaintiff is in fact the holder, and in order to protect the defendant from double liability." 6 Anderson, Uniform Commercial Code, sec. 3-307:4, p. 158 (3rd ed., 1993). The administrator, by proving issuance of the instrument, succeeds to all rights of the payee. Because the issuer is relieved of all liability on the instrument by paying the obligation to the State as unclaimed property, and is indemnified by the State, there is no chance that the issuer would be held liable twice, and therefore the administrator is not required to produce the instrument in order to possess the same rights as a holder in due course.

The $50 minimum provided in subsection (b)(1), (2), and (3) [(2)(b), (2)(c), and (2)(d)] represents an increase from $3.00 in the 1966 Act and $25 in the 1981 Act in order to minimize reporting expenses. Almost every State which enacted the prior Uniform Act now provides for a $25 minimum.

Before filing its report, the holder must send written notice to the apparent owner, if the owner's claim is not barred by the statute of limitations, the property has a value of $50 or more, and the holder's records do not disclose the address to be inaccurate. Other efforts to locate the owner are no longer required.

Subsection (f) [(6)] provides new flexibility to the holder and to the administrator in cases where the holder's timely compliance is not feasible. In the past, some administrators have felt themselves to be without authority to extend the filing deadlines, or to accept less than a final report. It is now made clear that an extension can be had for good cause, and the holder can limit its exposure to interest by making a partial payment.

Subsections (b) and (c) [(2) and (3)] particularize the general duty stated in subsection (a) [(1)] with respect to investment securities, including securities positions held directly and securities positions held through accounts with brokers or other intermediaries (referred to as "security entitlements" under revised Article 8 of the Uniform Commercial Code). UCC Article 8 provides that the issuer of a security, or intermediary with respect to a security entitlement, has a duty to act at the direction of the "appropriate person." Subsection (b) [(2)] provides that with respect to securities and security entitlements that have been reported as abandoned property pursuant to Section 7 [70-9-808], the administrator is an "appropriate person." Accordingly, the administrator has the same rights under UCC Article 8 as other persons who succeed by operation of law to securities or security entitlements, such as the executor or administrator of a decedent. Subsection (c) [(3)] deals with situations where the holder reporting abandoned property is itself the issuer of a certificated security, and hence does not have the original certificate to turn over to the administrator. Accordingly, subsection (b) [(2)] provides that the administrator can invoke the provisions of UCC Article 8 governing replacement certificates, without an indemnity bond.

Subsection (d) [(4)] indemnifies a person causing a replacement certificate to be issued to the administrator from any claims that the person acted wrongfully in so doing. This indemnification is desirable in that it eliminates any duty of the transferring authority to make an independent investigation into whether the listed owner of the security is in fact missing, or into other factors which might affect the administrator's right to obtain custody of the property.

This section sets forth the minimum requirements for advertisement. The administrator may publish more frequently or extensively. The Act does not establish a specific time for the publication so that the administrator can choose a time that will provide the best exposure and flexibility in scheduling the workload and personnel available.

The advertisement must contain a minimum of two items of information, one of which explains that the abandoned property has been paid into the protective custody of the administrator. Since abandoned property is delivered with the report under the revisions of this Act, this statement is necessary to explain the location of the property and to insure that inquiries are directed to the administrator.

Subsection (b) [(2)] limits the duty to advertise in recognition of the fact in the specified circumstances the value of the property is so slight as to negate the benefits of the advertising, or the names and addresses of the owners of the instruments are not maintained by the holder, or in the case of travelers checks, after 15 years the advertisement is unlikely to be productive.

When property is turned over to the State, the holder is relieved of all liability for any turnover made in good faith. Subsection (a) [(1)] sets forth a definition of good faith which inter alia allows the holder to rely on its records if they meet reasonable commercial standards of practice in the industry.

The section also permits the holder to obtain reimbursement for claims it elected to pay to owners who appeared after the property was turned over. If a State in enacting Section 12(b) [70-9-812(2)] provides for the payment of interest on property delivered to the administrator, then the holder will add such interest when paying the claim.

If after turnover, any person or another State makes a claim on the holder, the State, upon request, is required to defend the holder and provide indemnification against any liability.

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

If the security is stock or other intangible interest in a business association, the administrator is permitted to sell the security, but if the missing owner appears and makes claim for the security within three years after the administrator has sold it, the missing owner is entitled to receive the proceeds of the sale or the market value of the securities at the time the claim is made. Thus there is a genuine incentive for an administrator to hold this property for the requisite three-year period.

Subsection (b) [(2)] permits an administrator to sell securities at prevailing prices directly to the issuing companies.

This section is not intended as a direction to the administrator to sell "money," although money is included in the definition of property, unless it is a collector's specie having value greater than the face value of the money as cash.

Section 14 [70-9-814] should be read together with Section 4 [70-9-805]. Sections 4 and 14 [70-9-805 and 70-9-814] are designed to carry out the priority scheme enunciated in Texas v. New Jersey, 379 U.S. 674 (1965). In general the State in which the owner had his or her last known address is entitled to claim abandoned property. Where there is insufficient information to permit this assertion of custody, the State of the holder's domicile takes the property subject to a later claim by the State of the last known address.

Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) [(1)(a)] provides that if property was paid to the State of the holder's domicile because the last known address of the owner was unknown and it is later established by another State that the last known address of the person entitled to the property was in the other State, the State of domicile should pay the property over to the other State.

Paragraph (2) [(1)(b)] parallels Section 4, paragraph (4) [70-9-805(4)], which permits the State of corporate domicile to take if the State of the last known address does not provide for the escheat or custodial taking of the property. If the State of the last known address subsequently enacts an unclaimed property law which covers the property, the taking State must turn it over.

Paragraph (3) [(1)(c)] addresses the problem of Nellius v. Tampax, Inc., 394 A.2d 333 (Del. Ch. Ct. 1978) in which the holder's records did not reflect the fact that the record owner had sold the property to another. The court concluded, under Texas v. New Jersey, that the holder's records were controlling and that it could properly report and deliver the property to the State in which its records showed the owner to be resident. However, as provided in Texas v. New Jersey and in paragraph 4 [(1)(d)], the State of the owner's actual residence could then claim the property from the State to which it was initially reported.

Paragraph (4) [(1)(c)], paralleling Section 4(6) [70-9-805(6)], provides that property initially claimed under a "contacts" test because there was no last known address and the State of domicile had no applicable unclaimed property law may be reclaimed by the State of corporate domicile if it enacts an applicable unclaimed property law.

Subsection (c) [(3)] provides that the State that initially receives property later claimed by another State may require an indemnification agreement from the claiming State.

After property is presumed abandoned and reported to the administrator the administrator must attempt to locate the missing owner. Thereafter, if the property has been delivered to the administrator and the owner or his representative appears, the administrator must pay the claim. The owner's rights are never cut off; under this Act, the owner's rights exist in perpetuity. Although some state administrators have urged legislation that would terminate an owner's right to the property merely by the passage of time, such enactments may be unconstitutional. In Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U.S. 256, 275, 16 S. Ct. 585, 592, 40 L. Ed. 691, 699, (1896), the Supreme Court held that any procedure by which the State seeks to cut off the owner's title through escheat must include "actual notice by service of summons to all known claimants, and constructive notice by publication to all possible claimants who are unknown . . . ." Any lesser procedure appears to fall short of due process. The history of escheat, as compared with modern unclaimed property legislation, is discussed in "Unclaimed Property and Reporting Forms," Epstein, McThenia & Forslund, ch. 1 (Matt. Bend. 1984).

In any judicial action commenced to recover the property from the administrator, the claimant may proceed de novo, and the court will not be limited to a mere review of the administrator's decision.

Subsection 17(b) [70-9-817(2)] authorizes the administrator to assume custody of property prior to the time for presuming abandonment. Administrators have expressed a need for this authority to enable them to take possession of property, such as the contents of a safe deposit box repository, when the holder is terminating business but the property is not yet reportable. Additionally, other holders which have conducted business in the State and are ceasing operations might use the provisions of this section. The property must be held by the administrator until the abandonment period runs and then the property will be subject to the other provisions of the Act.

70-9-818. Destruction or disposition of property having no substantial commercial value — immunity from liability.

Official Comments

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

This section provides for the disposition of property which has no commercial value. As an example, the contents of safety deposit boxes often include such items as rent receipts, personal correspondence and lapsed insurance policies. In such cases, these contents might have some personal significance to the owner, which the administrator would take into consideration in determining for what period of time he will hold the property awaiting a claim by the owner. However, in the usual situation there will be no interest to be preserved by maintaining this property under state custody.

Under this section the administrator would be free to retain property having no commercial value. Further, the administrator could transfer it to other agencies or institutions which might have an interest in the property because of its historical value or other independent significance.

70-9-819. Periods of limitation.

Official Comments

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

Subsection (a) [(1)] is consistent with cases such as People v. Marshall Field & Co., 83 Ill. App. 3d 811, 404 N.E.2d 368 (1980), Screen Actors Guild, Inc. v. Cory, 91 Cal.App.3d 111, 154 Cal.Rptr. 77 (1979), and State v. Jefferson Lake Sulphur Co., 36 N.J. 577, 178 A.2d 329 (1962). It also abrogates another contractual condition often asserted as a defense to reporting property otherwise presumed abandoned, the failure to present the evidence of indebtedness.

Subsection (a) [(1)] is written to insure also that although the owner's claim against the holder may be barred by the statute of limitations prior to the effective date of the Act, the holder is not relieved of his obligation to pay abandoned property to the administrator. The Comment to Section 16 of the 1966 Act noted that local law must be consulted in order to ascertain whether legislation constitutionally may be enacted reviving a cause of action barred by the statute of limitations. This issue has been litigated in several States, e.g., Country Mutual Insurance Co. v. Knight, 40 Ill.2d 523, 240 N.E.2d 612 (1968); Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Cranston, 24 Cal.Rptr. 851, 374 P.2d 819 (1962); cf. Standard Oil v. New Jersey, 5 N.J. 281, 74 A.2d 565 (1950). Even though the statute of limitations has run before the effective date of the Act, the holder may be required to report and deliver the property to the State if the holder does not regularly enforce the statute. See South Carolina Tax Commission v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., 266 S.C. 34, 221 S.E.2d 522 (1975). But see State of Washington v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 103 Wash.2d 501, 694 P.2d 7, 10 (1985).

Subsection (b) [(2)] provides that an administrator must commence an action against a holder within 10 years after the time the property was first reported or specifically placed in issue. The 1995 amendment clarifies existing law and codifies the holdings of abandoned property cases that have ruled on issues of limitations. See Blue Cross of Northern California v. Cory, 174 Cal. Rptr. 901, 913, 120 Cal. App.3d 743 (App., 1981) (no statute of limitations will commence to run against the State until after the holder duly reports in compliance with the unclaimed property act); Travelers Express Co., Inc. v. Cony, 664 F.2d 763 (9th Cir. 1981) (statute of limitations commences to run only after filing of report which contains written explanation of why property is not subject to the act); Employers Insurance of Wausau v. Smith, 453 N.W.2d 856 (Wis. 1990) (filing of report essential to running of statute of limitations, since unclaimed property act depends on self-reporting); Sennet v. Insurance Co. of North America, 432 Pa. 5215, 247 A.2d 774, 777-78 (1968) (same; "INA simply has to take its stand: if it reports the holding [of funds in issue] (as a precautionary measure), the statute will run; if it does not, the Commonwealth is not precluded . . . ."); State of New Jersey v. U.S. Steel Corporation, 22 N.J. 341, 126 A.2d 168 (1956) (same); Treasurer and Rec. Gen. v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 388 Mass. 410, 446 N.E.2d 1376 (1983) (same). The provision also parallels the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C. sec. 6501(c). Since the Unclaimed Property Act is based on a theory of truthful self-reporting, a holder which conceals property, wilfully or otherwise, cannot expect the protection of the stated limitations period.

70-9-820. Requests for reports and examination of records.

Official Comments

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

This section is designed to facilitate compliance with the Act. Subsection (a) [(1)] provides for the filing of a negative report if the administrator requires such a report and will minimize disruption which would otherwise be caused to the holder if an examination of records instead were conducted by the administrator. Subsection (b) [(2)] is based on Section 30 of the 1981 Act. Aside from the requirement that the administrator conduct the examination at reasonable times and upon reasonable notice, the only limitations on the administrator's right to examine are constitutional limitations. Even though the Fourth Amendment does not extend as broadly to corporations as to individuals, Oklahoma Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 90 L.Ed. 614, 66 S.Ct. 494 (1946), inspections of commercial property may be unreasonable if they are not authorized by law or are unnecessary for the furtherance of a governmental interest. Donovan v. Dewey, 452 U.S. 594, 56 L.Ed.2d 486, 98 S.Ct. 1942 (1980). This Act is deemed to meet that standard. Also, since one of the dual purposes of this Act is the collection of revenue, reference may be made to the cases holding that it is not an unreasonable search to require taxpayers to produce their books and records. See Annot., "Constitutionality of statutory provisions for examination of records, books, or documents for taxation purposes," 103 ALR 522.

Subsection (c) [(3)] is intended to provide a useful method whereby the administrator can conduct a single examination of a dividend disbursing agent or transfer agent serving in such capacity for numerous business associations.

Subsection (f) [(6)] permits the use of estimates in instances where the holder has failed to report and deliver property that is abandoned and no longer has reasonably accessible records sufficient to prepare a specific report. Additionally, if the holder fails to maintain records of the last known address, States can assert claims based on any other records which might exist. Resort may be had to computer codes. While the holding in Texas v. New Jersey is intended to prevent multiple liability of holders, this subsection, viewed as a penalty for failure to maintain records of names and last known address, is not inconsistent with that decision. That part of subsection (f) [(6)] which permits the State to make estimates was prospective only from the date of adoption of the 1981 Act. This Act expressly states the bases on which estimates may be made. Thus, the State may use estimating techniques — where a holder has not maintained records as required by statute — based on industry averages, and may rely on inferences that may be based on statistics drawn from a broader basis than that of the holder in question who has failed to keep records. This section, together with Section 23 [70-9-823], also clarifies the administrator's authority to enter into agreements to enforce the State's custodial powers in all States.

Official Comments

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

This section does not require that the holder in the first instance obtain the address of the owner. For example, a record of the address of the purchaser or recipient of a gift certificate customarily is not obtained.

Initially, the period for which records of address must be obtained is established at 10 years from the date the property was first reportable as abandoned property. However, this section permits a State to shorten this period by rule. Because the reporting practices of holders vary, an administrator will want to consider such factors as the burden imposed on the holder in maintaining such records, the opportunity of returning the property, and the type of business of the holder. For example, in the case of property that would be reportable in the aggregate without the name and address of the apparent owner under Section 7 [70-9-808], a State might adopt a rule providing for a relatively short record retention period on condition that the holder maintain a record sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Texas v. New Jersey that there be a last known address or that the State can prove that the last known address of the creditor was within its borders.

Subsection (b) [(2)] is designed to assure that the information required for asserting a claim to travelers checks and money orders is retained by the issuers of travelers checks and money orders.

70-9-823. Interstate agreements and cooperation — joint and reciprocal actions with other states.

Official Comments

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

To avoid conflicts between the administrator's procedures and the procedures of administrators in other jurisdictions that enact the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act, the administrator, before adopting, amending or repealing rules, should advise and consult with administrators in other jurisdictions that adopt this Act substantially and take into consideration the rules of administrators in other jurisdictions that enact the Uniform Unclaimed Property Act.

Cooperation among States is essential if abandoned property programs are to be efficiently administered. In recent years several States have joined together to audit major holders. Additionally, several States have entered into agreements to act as collection agents for each other. Interstate cooperation and the development of uniform reporting forms and uniform regulations will be of assistance to holders as well as program administrators. This section encourages joint agreements and cooperation among the States. An agreement among the States might expressly relieve holders from reporting piecemeal to separate States. Instead, they might be able to file a single report of all abandoned property, wherever located, and regardless of the address of the owner.

Reciprocal agreements envisioned under subsection (c) [(3)] do not require the consent of Congress under the Compact Clause of the Constitution, Art. I, 10, cl. 3. The Supreme Court has held that the restriction of the Compact Clause is limited to combinations or agreements that tend to increase the political power of the States to such an extent that it interferes with the supremacy of the United States. United States Steel v. Multi-State Tax Commission, 434 U.S. 452 (1978). In Multi-State Tax Commission the Court upheld a tax compact, that had not been approved by Congress creating a permanent administrative body to perform audits of multi-state taxpayer operations, and at the request of a member State, to sue to enforce the audits in the courts of the member States.

This section simply authorizes an economical approach to enforcing a State's claim under Texas v. New Jersey. Each State retains discretion to bring suit or to decide against such action, remaining free to adopt its own abandoned property policies. The position of the States will not be politically improved at the expense of the federal government although the process for claiming abandoned property will be more efficient.

Action by one State for another is expressly permitted by this section. In some cases the administrator of a State may deem it wise to seek counsel in a foreign jurisdiction. There may be small claims which would not justify individual action by the claimant State in a foreign forum, but if several States join forces and retain counsel in the holder State to sue for all of them, it might be administratively justified. This section expressly permits such joint action.

70-9-824. Interest and penalties.

Official Comments

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

A major weakness of the 1966 Act was its ineffective penalty provision. Although the 1981 Act increased penalties for non-compliance, voluntary compliance with the Act continued to be a problem. In this Act, compliance failures not accompanied by willfulness are dealt with by moderate increases in the applicable penalties, and the administrator simultaneously is given authority to waive both interest and penalties where the holder has attempted in good faith to comply, or where the failure has been due to excusable neglect. Where the holder's failure is willful or fraudulent, and not in good faith, penalties are increased more substantially.

Criminal penalties, which were the sole enforcement mechanism of the 1954 Act and which were retained in the 1981 Act have been eliminated, as they were not effective and rarely, if ever, pursued.

The provision for the discretionary waiver of interest upon a showing of good cause is intended to apply to situations in which the holder has attempted to comply with the Act. Establishment of "good cause" is likely to be difficult where the holder has failed to file a report.

70-9-825. Agreement to locate property.

Official Comments

Commissioners' Comment: [See part official comments and part compiler's comments.]

This section is intended to enhance the likelihood that the owner of the abandoned property will be located by the efforts of the State, and will receive a return of the property without payment of a "finder's fee." In the past, it appears to have been the practice in many States for unclaimed property locators or heir finders to utilize the State's lists of names and addresses of missing owners to contact them and propose to find their property for them for a fee, before the State has had an opportunity to locate the missing owners. Some States have enacted legislation that prohibits examination of these lists by anyone except an apparent owner or other person having a legal interest in the property, but in many States that kind of provision may be in conflict with the State's public records laws.

Subsections (b) and (d) [(2) and (4)] apply to agreements entered into at any time. These subsections apply to all finders' and locators' contracts, regardless of when the contract is made, including agreements with an owner as a result of a holder providing to private parties, the holder's information regarding an inactive account.

This section is not intended to apply to situations such as the probating of an estate, which may incidentally include a necessity of locating unclaimed property. Agreements in such cases do not have as their principal purpose, the rendition of services to locate, deliver or recover unclaimed property. This section also does not apply to agreements for legal representation of an owner who is claiming property the identity of which is already known to the owner.

Paragraph (a) [(1)] is retained from the 1981 Act and deals with the problem of how far back a holder must check its records to determine what property not subject to the prior Act must be paid to the State under this Act. Thus, property which was not covered by any unclaimed property law prior to adoption of the 1981 Act, but was covered by that Act, continues to be covered by this Act if the obligation was incurred not more than 10 years prior to adoption of the 1981 Act and the statute of limitations is not tolled under Section 19(b) [70-9-819(2)]. For example, if a State enacts this Act effective January 1, 1996 for property not previously presumed abandoned, the holder must report it if, as of January 1, 1986, it had been unclaimed for the abandonment period. A similar provision is found in Section 11(g) of the 1966 Act.

Paragraph (b) [(2)] provides that if a State had an unclaimed property law prior to the adoption of this Act, a holder is not relieved of his duty to report and pay over the property abandoned under the Act then existing. Except as otherwise provided in Section 19(b) [70-9-819(2)], a holder who did not comply with the law in effect before the effective date of this Act is subject to the applicable provisions for enforcement and penalties which then existed and which are continued in effect for the purpose of this section.

DEFINITIONS AND KINDS OF ESTATES IN REAL PROPERTY

Part 1
Real Property Defined
Fixtures and Appurtenances

70-15-101. Real property defined.

Case Notes

Plastic Irrigation Pipe Not Considered Fixture: Plastic irrigation pipe did not meet the definition of a fixture because it was not annexed to the land, as evidenced by the fact that it was: (1) attached to riser pipes only during irrigation season and was stacked when not in use; (2) useful apart from the land; and (3) easily and readily replaceable. Schwend v. Schwend, 1999 MT 194, 295 M 384, 983 P2d 988, 56 St. Rep. 754 (1999), applying the annexation, adaptation, and intent factors of the fixture test in Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977).

Property Description of "2 Acres, More or Less" Not Ambiguous: A property agreement provided that Tract 1 be "2 acres, more or less". Although the phrase "more or less" may not be particularly precise, it is a phrase commonly understood by its plain and ordinary meaning and is not subject to two interpretations. More or less means "approximately", regardless of whether one party would prefer "less", while the other party "more". The property agreement was clear, unambiguous, and enforceable. Schwend v. Schwend, 1999 MT 194, 295 M 384, 983 P2d 988, 56 St. Rep. 754 (1999).

Tax Sale Provisions Applicable to Improvements on Tax-Exempt Land — Meaning of "Real Property" and "Real Estate": Montana's tax collection laws governing real estate tax sales apply to improvements located on tax-exempt lands. The conveyance by tax deed of appellant's log cabin for nonpayment of taxes was upheld against his assertion that the cabin, situated on Forest Service land, is not an improvement fixed to land for purposes of the Realty Transfer Act and not "real estate" for purposes of the tax sale provisions. The court traced the Legislature's circuitous route to a definition of taxable real property in support of its holding. Brown v. Hart, 213 M 517, 692 P2d 14, 41 St. Rep. 2264 (1984).

Building on Leased Real Property That Must Be Removed at End of Lease — Personal Property: A building constructed on leased real property, pursuant to a lease that required the lessee to remove the building upon termination of the lease, is personal property to which a judgment lien does not attach. Pac. Metal Co. v. NW. Bank of Helena, 205 M 323, 667 P2d 958, 40 St. Rep. 1301 (1983).

Status of Property for Taxation Purposes Not Relevant to Determination of Its Status Under Property Law: The method by which property is assessed for purposes of taxation has no bearing on whether the structure is real or personal property. Pac. Metal Co. v. NW. Bank of Helena, 205 M 323, 667 P2d 958, 40 St. Rep. 1301 (1983).

Rescission of Lease — Claim for Wrongful Retention of Fixtures Properly Dismissed: In an action for damages caused by breach of a lease, the District Court did not err in dismissing the defendants' counterclaim for wrongful retention of certain fixtures added to the property by the defendants. As a matter of law, the plaintiff cannot be unjustly enriched because a fixture, by definition, is a part of real property to be retained by the owner of the premises at the expiration of the lease. Certain fixtures may be removed but only during "the continuance of his [the tenant's] term". As no effort was made by the defendants to remove the fixtures until 9 months after vacating the premises, the defendants' counterclaim was properly rejected. Ragen v. Weston, 191 M 546, 625 P2d 557, 38 St. Rep. 456 (1981).

Crops — Ownership: When the crops were planted, work done, and harvest completed by defendant prior to a court-ordered change of possession, the crops belong to the defendant. Whitney v. Bails, 172 M 121, 560 P2d 1344 (1977).

Oil and Gas in Place — Realty: So long as petroleum and gas remain in the ground they are part of the realty and as such subject to the owner's control. Williard v. Fed. Sur. Co., 91 M 465, 8 P2d 633 (1932).

Shares of Stock in Mutual Irrigation Company: While shares of stock in a mutual irrigation company, organized for the convenience of its members in the distribution to them of water for use upon their lands in proportion to their respective interest, are personal property for the purpose of transfer, they are appurtenant to the lands held by their owners and, unless reserved, pass with the conveyance of the lands though not mentioned therein. Yellowstone Valley Co. v. Assoc. Mtg. Investors, Inc., 88 M 73, 290 P 255, 70 ALR 1002 (1930).

Change of Possession of Land With Growing Crops — Title Passes Crops: Annual crops growing upon land are not part of the land under the statutes of this state, but where the owner of the land sells it with the right of immediate possession in the purchaser and without reserving the crops thereon and the purchaser takes possession before severance, title passes to the crops as well, and this principle is applicable where the land is sold at decretal or execution sale. Kester v. Amon, 81 M 1, 261 P 288 (1927).

Annual Crops — Personal: Annual crops are usually treated as chattels personal, subject to sale or mortgage and levy of execution as are other chattels, even while still annexed to the soil, and are not included within the definition of real property. Morton v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 80 M 593, 261 P 278 (1927).

Growing Grass — Real Property: Growing grass is a part of the soil of which it is the natural growth, within meaning of this section and 70-15-103, and destruction thereof by the herding of livestock thereon constitutes a damage to the owner's real property. Kiehl v. Holliday, 77 M 451, 251 P 527 (1926).

Easements — Interest in Real Property:

A right-of-way and the right to a ditch, canal, or other structure in which water is conveyed for irrigation or other lawful purposes are easements over the land occupied by the ditch, canal, etc. An "easement" is an appurtenance to land and constitutes an interest in real property. Mannix v. Powell County, 60 M 510, 199 P 914 (1921). See also Rodda v. Best, 68 M 205, 217 P 669 (1923).

An easement for a right-of-way for cutting and hauling timber is realty under Montana law. R. M. Cobban Realty Co. v. Donlan, 51 M 58, 149 P 484 (1915).

Buildings: In the absence of anything to show an intention to the contrary, things affixed to the realty, such as buildings permanently resting upon foundations embedded in the soil, are part of the realty and pass with it. Ownership of such a structure necessarily followed ownership of the land rightfully decreed to plaintiff. Hauf v. School District, 52 M 395, 158 P 315 (1916).

Growing Timber — Realty: Growing timber is realty under Montana law. R. M. Cobban Realty Co. v. Donlan, 51 M 58, 149 P 484 (1915).

Bridges: Where a person enters upon an existing public highway and voluntarily erects a bridge, intending that it should be a part of the same and belong to the public, it becomes of necessity affixed to the land and is real property. State ex rel. Donlan v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 49 M 517, 143 P 984 (1914), followed in Kelly v. Wallace, 1998 MT 307, 292 M 129, 972 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1271 (1998).

Mining Machinery: Mining machinery, being deemed affixed to the mine, is real property. Britannia Min. Co. v. USF&G Co., 43 M 93, 115 P 46 (1911).

Case Notes

Proper Deposit of Leasehold Interest Entitling Leaseholder to Notice and Right to Redeem Property Tax Lien: Section 15-18-212 requires that the purchaser or assignee of a tax sale certificate notify all persons interested in the property, including a person with properly recorded interest in the property, that a tax deed will be issued to the purchaser unless the tax lien is redeemed prior to the expiration date of the redemption period. Under 70-21-209, an acknowledged or certified instrument is considered recorded when it is deposited with the appropriate County Clerk and Recorder. In this case, an instrument reflecting plaintiffs' interest as assignee of a vendor's interest in the contract for sale of a cabin and leasehold, which constituted real property, was properly recorded at the Lewis and Clark County Clerk and Recorder's office, so plaintiffs were entitled as an interested party to notice by certified mail pursuant to 15-18-212; however, no notice was given. Plaintiffs' right to redeem the property tax lien continued indefinitely until proper notice was given; thus, a tax deed subsequently issued by the county was void for failure to comply with the notice provisions of 15-18-212. Ditto v. Kipp, 2000 MT 162, 300 M 278, 3 P3d 647, 57 St. Rep. 679 (2000). See also Kneedler v. League Wide, Inc., 1999 MT 80, 294 M 101, 979 P2d 163 (1999).

Weston, 191 M 546, 625 P2d 557, 38 St. Rep. 456 (1981).

Test as to Fixtures: The test for determining whether a particular object has become a fixture or not is based upon annexation, adaptation, and intent. Intent is the controlling factor. Fixtures here were intended to become personal property. Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977), followed in Schwend v. Schwend, 1999 MT 194, 295 M 384, 983 P2d 988, 56 St. Rep. 754 (1999).

Crops — Ownership: When the crops were planted, work done, and harvest completed by defendant prior to a court-ordered change of possession, the crops belong to the defendant. Whitney v. Bails, 172 M 121, 560 P2d 1344 (1977).

Attachment to Leased Property: Where tenant built a small apartment attached to rented premises with the intention that it be permanent and without an agreement with the lessor that he would be allowed to remove any of the items which went into the construction and where the improvement was so attached that removal injured the premises, the property and chattels used in building the apartment became fixtures as a matter of law and lessor who removed them after tenant left the premises was not guilty of conversion. Sanders v. Butte Motor Co., 142 M 524, 385 P2d 263 (1963).

Electrical Equipment: Machines, motors, and other electrical equipment placed upon movable platform were not fixtures so as to make them real estate and subject to mechanics' lien. (Mechanics' lien provisions repealed, 1987—see construction liens, Title 71, ch. 3, part 5.) Cascade Elec. Co. v. Assoc. Creditors, Inc., 124 M 370, 224 P2d 146 (1950).

Application in General: This section is merely a rule for general guidance, concerning itself more with ultimate than with probative facts. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op, 117 M 467, 161 P2d 526 (1945).

Presumptions as to Intent: While question of whether personal property has become affixed to the land is one concerning the intention of the affixer, it is presumed that when the property is affixed it is intended to become part of the realty. Generally the manner in which the attachment is made, the adaptability of the thing attached to the use to which the realty is applied, together with the intention of the one making the attachment, determine whether the thing attached is realty or personalty. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op, 117 M 467, 161 P2d 526 (1945).

Casing in Oil Well: Casing in an oil well, like engines, buildings, machinery, and appliances placed upon land by a lessee for operating the premises for oil and gas purposes, are trade fixtures and become part of the land and the leasehold. Callender v. Crossfield Oil Synd., 84 M 263, 275 P 273 (1929), overruled on another point in Pioneer Eng'r Works, Inc. v. McConnell, 113 M 392, 130 P2d 685, 132 P2d 160 (1942).

Building: School building and fence around it reverted to grantor in absence of evidence rebutting presumption that building and fence became a part of school site and in view of clause in deed that property should revert to grantor on abandonment of site "together with all tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging". School District v. Pribyl, 82 M 295, 267 P 289 (1928).

Annual Crops: Annual crops are usually treated as chattels personal, subject to sale or mortgage and levy of execution as are other chattels, even while still annexed to the soil, and are not included within the definition of real property. Morton v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 80 M 593, 261 P 278 (1927).

When Chattels Affixed to Land Do Not Become Fixtures: Whether a thing imbedded in the soil is a fixture depends upon the intention of the party making the annexation and the use or purpose of annexation. To become a fixture the intention to make an article a permanent accession to the realty must affirmatively and plainly appear. If left in doubt, it must be deemed a chattel. If attached for a use which does not enhance the value of the land, it does not become a fixture. Butte Elec. Ry. v. Brett, 80 M 12, 257 P 478 (1927).

Growing Grass: Growing grass is a part of the soil of which it is the natural growth, within meaning of 70-15-101 and this section, and destruction thereof by the herding of livestock thereon constitutes a damage to owner's real property. Kiehl v. Holliday, 77 M 451, 251 P 527 (1926).

Fences: A fence is a fixture, and its annexation to land is governed by the law of fixtures. Schmuck v. Beck, 72 M 606, 234 P 477 (1925).

Owner of Land as Owner of Fixtures: Where one places a fence on the land of another without an agreement permitting him to do so, it belongs to the owner of the land unless he chooses to require him to remove it, the presumption, disputable in nature, being that one in possession of land is also the owner of the fixtures thereon. Schmuck v. Beck, 72 M 606, 234 P 477 (1925).

Burden on Person Claiming Building as Personalty: A building belongs to owner of the land; one claiming that it is personalty has the burden of proof, the presumption to the same effect declared by this section being a disputable one which may be overcome by evidence that the building was constructed in such a manner or under such circumstances as to preclude the idea that it was intended to become part of the realty. Shipler v. Potomac Copper Co., 69 M 86, 220 P 1097 (1923).

Fructus Naturales Distinguished From Fructus Industriales: This section, so far as it refers to roots, vines, and shrubs, is intended to include the things produced essentially by the powers of nature only, namely, fructus naturales, as distinguished from fructus industriales. Power Mercantile Co. v. Moore Mercantile Co., 55 M 401, 177 P 406 (1918).

Attachment to Realty in General: An attachment made in the manner indicated in this section and 70-15-104 raises a presumption that the one who made the attachment intended the thing affixed to become a part of the realty, and as a general rule, the manner in which the attachment is made, the adaptability of the thing attached to the use to which the realty is applied, and the intention of the one making the attachment determine whether the thing attached is realty or personalty. The relation of the parties to the property may affect the application of the rule. Mont. Elec. Co. v. N. Valley Min. Co., 51 M 266, 153 P 1017 (1915), distinguished in Lawrence v. Clepper, 263 M 45, 865 P2d 1150, 50 St. Rep. 1699 (1993). See Padden v. Murgittroyd, 54 M 1, 165 P 913 (1917).

Machinery: Where owner of mining claim, before selling it, explained to buyer that a rented electric hoist which could be removed without material injury to either claim or hoist did not belong to him but had been installed at the instance of a company which had been working the claim under an option to purchase and that he was merely holding it as security for money due him from such company, the buyer was not a bona fide purchaser but one with notice and therefore not entitled to claim the machinery as a fixture. Mont. Elec. Co. v. N. Valley Min. Co., 51 M 266, 153 P 1017 (1915).

Growing Timber: Growing timber is realty under Montana law. R. M. Cobban Realty Co. v. Donlan, 51 M 58, 149 P 484 (1915).

Bridge: A bridge is of necessity affixed to the realty and is real estate. State ex rel. Donlan v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 49 M 517, 143 P 984 (1914), followed in Kelly v. Wallace, 1998 MT 307, 292 M 129, 972 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1271 (1998).

Cover for Stovepipe Flue: A cover for a stovepipe flue, opening into the chimney from the interior of a building and removable when such flue was to be used, was not material entering into the construction of the building or a fixture, and such building was not subject to a lien therefor. Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 M 65, 60 P 594 (1900).

70-15-104. Fixtures attached to mines.

Case Notes

Mining Equipment:

Grantee under tax deed of patented lode claim became owner of a mill and machinery used in mining both patented and unpatented mining claims, as they were fixtures within meaning of this section and therefore a part of the patented claim, although located on adjacent land, since use of the mill by the former owner showed intent that it be attached. Benson & Bissell v. Wiseman, 145 M 429, 401 P2d 78 (1965).

By virtue of this section mining tools and machinery are deemed affixed to the mine and therefore constitute "machinery or fixtures for" mining claims within meaning of 71-3-501 (repealed, 1987—see provisions relating to construction liens, Title 71, ch. 3, part 5), entitling one who furnished the same or performs labor thereon to a lien. Purchase price of such tools and machinery and labor charges for repairs are lienable items. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1940).

Mining machinery, being deemed affixed to the mine, is real property. Britannia Min. Co. v. USF&G Co., 43 M 93, 115 P 46 (1911).

Dredge Deemed Fixture in Absence of Contract: A dredge used in placer mining operations is mining machinery within meaning of this section and is deemed affixed to the mine, in absence of an express agreement that it may be removed. When dredge is used on mining property for working and developing the mine, the disputable presumption arises that the dredge is part of the realty. Where personal property is affixed to the land under express agreement that it may be removed, this presumption is overcome as between the parties and those having notice of such agreement. Story Gold Dredging Co. v. Wilson, 106 M 166, 76 P2d 73 (1938).

Intention — Drawn by Deductions — Presumption: Whether machinery used in operation of a mine is realty or personalty is not determined by the secret intention of the person making the annexation but the intention deducible as a presumption of law from the character of the chattel, the manner and effect of its annexation, its adaptability to the use of the realty, the purpose to which it is put, the relation of the parties, and the policy of the law. Story Gold Dredging Co. v. Wilson, 106 M 166, 76 P2d 73 (1938).

When This Section Controlling: As to question whether dredge used in placer mining operations was a fixture, this section controlled over 70-18-102, relating to fixtures as applied to all classes and kind of tenancies, since a specific statute governs a general one to extent of any necessary repugnance between them. Story Gold Dredging Co. v. Wilson, 106 M 166, 76 P2d 73 (1938).

Oil Well Casing: Where casing used in sinking an oil well was furnished to owner of leasehold by a third person under contract that ownership of casing should remain in such person unless oil or gas in commercial quantities was encountered and operations resulted in a dry hole, the casing retained its character as personal property and did not become affixed to the land, and therefore the lien of the driller did not extend to it. Cheadle v. Bardwell, 95 M 299, 26 P2d 336 (1933).

70-15-105. Incident or appurtenance defined.

Case Notes

District Court Jurisdiction to Determine Contractual Appurtenance of Water Rights Based on Historic Use: District Courts have jurisdiction to determine appurtenance of water rights based on historic use. Although a District Court may not have jurisdiction to reallocate disputed water rights absent a contract, in this case defendant contractually sold water rights to plaintiffs, and upon disagreement over which water rights were sold, the District Court was asked to resolve the disagreement and did so by interpreting the contract, which was wholly within the court's jurisdiction and did not impose on the exclusive domain of the Water Court. Kruer v. Three Creeks Ranch of Wy., L.L.C., 2008 MT 315, 346 M 66, 194 P3d 634 (2008). See also Castillo v. Kunnemann, 197 M 190, 642 P2d 1019 (1982), Axtell v. M.S. Consulting, 1998 MT 64, 288 M 150, 955 P2d 1362 (1998), and In re Petition of Deadman's Basin Users, 2002 MT 15, 308 M 168, 40 P3d 387 (2002).

Ditches Not Necessary for Exercise of Water Right — No Ownership Interest in Ditches: A dispute arose over whether plaintiff with water rights had an ownership interest in two ditches that crossed a neighbor's property. The District Court determined that no ownership interest existed, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that ditches are easements that attach to land and that a transfer of real property also transfers a ditch right in the same manner and to the same extent as at the time that the property was transferred, but also noted that a ditch right and a water right are separate and distinct property rights and that if a water right passes as an appurtenance, the means of conveying the water also passes. In order to determine whether the ditch right was appurtenant to the water right, the court examined necessity and beneficial use. In this case, the ditches in question were not necessary for plaintiff to exercise its water rights. Testimony indicated that no one had used the ditches to irrigate plaintiff's land and that plaintiff was able to exercise its water right through two other ditches, nor did plaintiff recognize a historical ownership interest in or beneficial use of the ditches in question. In addition, because the deeds were ambiguous with respect to which ditch rights were conveyed to each parcel, a search of the chain of title would not have revealed that plaintiff had an easement in the ditches. The District Court weighed the conflicting evidence and did not err in holding that plaintiff did not have an ownership interest in the ditches. The judgment was affirmed. Wills Cattle Co. v. Shaw, 2007 MT 191, 338 M 351, 167 P3d 397 (2007), following Lincoln v. Pieper, 245 M 12, 798 P2d 132 (1990), and Ponderosa Pines Ranch, Inc. v. Hevner, 2002 MT 184, 311 M 82, 53 P3d 381 (2002).

Easement by Grant Interpreted in Favor of Grantee — Access Provided by Initial Easement Affirmed: When Watson, in conjunction with her former husband Roger, purchased a parcel of property from defendants, Roger's parents, Watson and Roger received a permanent easement across defendants' property to access the parcel, as evidenced by defendants' representation in a loan agreement that allowed the purchase of the parcel. When Watson and Roger later divorced, Watson was granted full title to the parcel, but defendants then redefined the easement and informed Watson that only part of their property could be accessed through defendants' property, so Watson sued to enforce the terms of the initial easement. The District Court granted defendants summary judgment, but on appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Applying general principles of contract law and interpreting the easement in favor of grantee Watson, the court noted that under 1-3-213, one who grants a thing is presumed to also grant whatever is essential to its use. Further, the granting document, written by and thus construed against defendants, contained a significant ambiguity by providing Watson and Roger a permanent easement across all of defendants' remaining lands while contradictorily limiting the easement to cover only part of defendants' property. Interpreting the document as a whole and considering the acceptable intrinsic evidence, the Supreme Court concluded that Watson was entitled to a permanent easement across defendants' remaining property as necessary and essential to the complete use and enjoyment of the landlocked parcel sold by defendants. Watson v. Dundas, 2006 MT 104, 332 M 164, 136 P3d 973 (2006), following Erker v. Kester, 1999 MT 231, 296 M 123, 988 P2d 1221 (1999).

Conveyance of Water Right Includes Use of Water System: When use a of water conveyance system was necessary for the plaintiffs to exercise their water rights, it was incidental to the use of and part and parcel of the realty. The easement in the water system necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the property was appurtenant to the premises conveyed. Lincoln v. Pieper, 245 M 12, 798 P2d 132, 47 St. Rep. 1803 (1990), distinguished in Flaig v. Gramm, 1999 MT 181, 295 M 297, 983 P2d 396, 56 St. Rep. 710 (1999).

School Trust Land Water Rights Owned by State: In a case involving a dispute over ownership of water rights on state school trust lands, the Supreme Court ruled that title to the surface and ground water rights on school trust lands vests in the state and that the lessee, in making appropriations on and for school trust sections, is acting on behalf of the state. It is only through state action that the lessee is on the land, and Montana law expressly provides that the lessee must be reimbursed for all capital expenditures made in putting the water to beneficial use. The state is the beneficial user of the water, and its duty as trustee of the school trust lands prohibits it from alienating any interest in the land without receiving full compensation for it or from giving up control over the water rights. Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

Water Rights Appurtenant to School Trust Lands: Unless specifically excepted in the conveyance document, water rights on school trust lands are appurtenant to those lands and pass with the conveyance of the lands. Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

Appurtenance a Fact Question: Whether or not a thing is an appurtenance under this section is a question of fact. Rose v. Rose, 201 M 86, 651 P2d 1018, 39 St. Rep. 1971 (1982).

Road Signs Advertising Noncontiguous Business: Pursuant to a divorce, wife sold husband her interest in a motel they had jointly operated for years. Four road signs, sign permits, and leasehold interests in separate lands that were not contiguous to the motel property and that were not mentioned in the documents of the sale passed to the husband as appurtenances. The signs advertised the motel, were used for the benefit of the motel, were acquired with motel money, were carried as assets on the motel's books, and an advertisement for the motel stated that the property included four road signs. Rose v. Rose, 201 M 86, 651 P2d 1018, 39 St. Rep. 1971 (1982).

Sale of Water Right With Implied Reservation of Another Water Right: Landowner owned two water rights on river, and each had a related ditch right; one was called the "McNiven right" and the other was called the "Grannis right". He sold part of his land together with part of the McNiven right and "related ditch rights". The Supreme Court held that the words "related ditch rights" in the deed's water right grant referred only to the McNiven ditch and further held that since the landowner held two water rights and related ditch rights, the conveyance of the McNiven water and ditch right impliedly reserved to landowner the Grannis water right and related ditch right. Castillo v. Kunnemann, 197 M 190, 642 P2d 1019, 39 St. Rep. 460 (1982); reversing on rehearing, Castillo v. Kunnemann, 38 St. Rep. 1618 (1981) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Water Rights Made Appurtenant by Court Decree and Beneficial Use: Where a prior District Court water rights adjudication decree determined that there was an appropriation of 240 miner's inches on a river, appurtenant to the south half of a certain section of land, and the rancher who sold part of the half section to subdivider, who then sold a parcel to coplaintiff, testified that the 20-acre parcel purchased by coplaintiff had traditionally been irrigated by water from a ditch used to carry the appropriated water to the land, and the rancher's testimony was confirmed by the son of the rancher's predecessor in interest and by a hired hand, clearly, both by decree and by beneficial use, the water and ditch rights were appurtenant to the 20-acre parcel through which the ditch ran. Further, where the rancher testified that he had used the ditch and water to irrigate land south of the 20-acre parcel, coplaintiff had purchased from the subdivider a 9.114-acre parcel south of the 20-acre parcel, the ditch ran through the 9.114-acre parcel, and evidence supported a finding that both parcels would have been irrigated at the same time, the water and ditch rights were also appurtenant to the 9.114-acre parcel. Castillo v.

Kunnemann, 38 St. Rep. 1618 (1981) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports), reversed on other grounds on rehearing, 197 M 190, 642 P2d 1019, 39 St. Rep. 460 (1982).

Appurtenant Water Right Transferred With Land: The seller of land owned stock in a water association. The water obtained from the association had been used on the land being sold. After the sale was completed, a dispute arose over whether the contract water right had been sold. The court found that, since the contract water was beneficially used in connection with the land, it is considered appurtenant to the land. Where the property is transferred without an express reservation of the appurtenant water right, it accompanies the land. Adams v. Chilcott, 182 M 511, 597 P2d 1140 (1979).

Water Rights Conveyed in Absence of Reservation: Water rights represented by the water stocks, the registered owner of which was the seller of land under contract for deed, were incidental and appurtenant to the land where water rights were beneficially used on the land. Contract for deed effectively conveyed beneficial ownership in water rights in absence of an express reservation or exception. Schwend v. Jones, 163 M 41, 515 P2d 89 (1973).

Rights Appurtenant to Divided Tract: In absence of reservation by grantor, water rights appurtenant to a divided tract are proportioned to each division, and the share received by each division is determined by the ratio of number of irrigated acres to the total number of irrigated acres irrigated by the water. Spaeth v. Emmett, 142 M 231, 383 P2d 812 (1963). See also Axtell v. M.S. Consulting, 1998 MT 64, 288 M 150, 955 P2d 1362, 55 St. Rep. 276 (1998).

Rights of Stockholders of Nonprofit Irrigation Company as Appurtenances:

Shares of reservoir company's stock, each of which entitled owner to 1/1000 part of distributable water of the corporation were but indicia of the contract for the percentage of the water which owners had a right to receive, which right might become "appurtenant" to the land served by the water, but the water and the facilities used to transport the water were not "appurtenant" to land within this section. Ackroyd v. Winston Bros. Co., 113 F2d 657 (9th Cir. 1940).

The rights of stockholders in a nonprofit irrigation company, i.e., to use the storage and distribution facilities of the corporation and to receive a pro rata share of the water, are rights which, when used on certain lands, become appurtenant thereto under this section. Brady Irrigation Co. v. Teton County, 107 M 330, 85 P2d 350 (1938).

Tacit Grant: Under the common law as well as 70-1-519 and 70-1-520, whoever grants a thing tacitly grants that without which the grant would be of no avail—the principal thing carries with it the incident. Yellowstone Valley Co. v. Assoc. Mtg. Investors, Inc., 88 M 73, 290 P 255, 70 ALR 1002 (1930), followed in Erker v. Kester, 1999 MT 231, 296 M 123, 988 P2d 1221, 56 St. Rep. 912 (1999).

Annual Crops: This section does not, strictly speaking, embrace things such as annual crops produced by industry, for they are not used with the land for its benefit, the section dealing with rights-of-way and the like, which are servitudes upon other land and easements attached to the land benefited. Power Mercantile Co. v. Moore Mercantile Co., 55 M 401, 177 P 406 (1918).

Water Right:

Where a water right was not granted for any certain purpose or for use on any particular land, it did not become an appurtenance by the terms of the deed and could not thereafter be conveyed as an appurtenance unless the grantee had given it that character by using it with and for the benefit of the land. Custer Consol. Mines Co. v. Helena, 52 M 35, 156 P 1090 (1916); Sweetland v. Olsen, 11 M 27, 27 P 339 (1891); Tucker v. Jones, 8 M 225, 19 P 571 (1888).

This section may not be interpreted to mean that a water right acquired by prior appropriation by one who has only possessory title to the land, although with the intent at the time to use the water upon such land, shall, by the mere act of using it as intended, become inseparably attached as an appurtenance and that the appropriator thereby loses his water right. Smith v. Denniff, 24 M 20, 60 P 398 (1900), distinguished in Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

A water right acquired and used for a beneficial and necessary purpose in connection with realty is an appurtenance thereto, and as such, passes with a conveyance of the land, unless expressly reserved from the grant. Smith v. Denniff, 23 M 65, 57 P 557 (1899), reversed on rehearing on other grounds in 24 M 20, 60 P 398 (1900); Carman v. Staudaker, 20 M 364, 51 P 738 (1898); Sloan v. Glancy, 19 M 70, 47 P 334 (1897); Beatty v. Murray Placer Min. Co., 15 M 314, 39 P 82 (1895); Sweetland v. Olsen, 11 M 27, 27 P 339 (1891); Tucker v. Jones, 8 M 225, 19 P 571 (1888).

Watercourse and Easement and an Appurtenance to Land: A watercourse from or across the land of another is an easement, and an appurtenance to land is in any and every case an easement. Smith v. Denniff, 24 M 20, 60 P 398 (1900), distinguished in Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

Part 2
Classification of Interests in Real Property

70-15-202. Enumeration of estates.

Case Notes

Proper Deposit of Leasehold Interest Entitling Leaseholder to Notice and Right to Redeem Property Tax Lien: Section 15-18-212 requires that the purchaser or assignee of a tax sale certificate notify all persons interested in the property, including a person with properly recorded interest in the property, that a tax deed will be issued to the purchaser unless the tax lien is redeemed prior to the expiration date of the redemption period. Under 70-21-209, an acknowledged or certified instrument is considered recorded when it is deposited with the appropriate County Clerk and Recorder. In this case, an instrument reflecting plaintiffs' interest as assignee of a vendor's interest in the contract for sale of a cabin and leasehold, which constituted real property, was properly recorded at the Lewis and Clark County Clerk and Recorder's office, so plaintiffs were entitled as an interested party to notice by certified mail pursuant to 15-18-212; however, no notice was given. Plaintiffs' right to redeem the property tax lien continued indefinitely until proper notice was given; thus, a tax deed subsequently issued by the county was void for failure to comply with the notice provisions of 15-18-212. Ditto v. Kipp, 2000 MT 162, 300 M 278, 3 P3d 647, 57 St. Rep. 679 (2000). See also Kneedler v. League Wide, Inc., 1999 MT 80, 294 M 101, 979 P2d 163 (1999).

Life Estate Created by Words "Rent-Free for the Rest of Life": In an appeal from a summary judgment decree that a life estate in an apartment of the defendant-mother was void, the Supreme Court held that the words "entitled to remain in possession thereof, rent-free, for the rest of her life" are clear and unambiguous as an indication that the mother holds a life estate as against a buyer of the apartment building. This is particularly true given that in the contract creating the life estate, provisions clearly show an intention to create such a life estate by providing for all of the details of such estate, including the matter of repairs, replacement, taxation, utilities, and other provisions. Harbeck v. Orr, 192 M 243, 627 P2d 1217, 38 St. Rep. 668 (1981).

Lease of Realty Not Real Estate:

Where person entered into possession of offices under oral agreement to pay $100 per month in advance as rent therefor and without any new agreement, such person held over for a considerable period of time, paying to landlords $100 on or before the 15th day of each month, such arrangement, under Ch. 48, L. 1931 (this section), constituted the person a "tenant from month to month". State ex rel. Needham v. Justice Court, 119 M 89, 171 P2d 351 (1946).

A lease of real property is not real estate under this section or 70-15-206, so that a contract employing a broker to secure or sell a lease need not be in writing and is not within the Statute of Frauds (28-2-903). The same rule applies to option to purchase realty. O'Neill v. Wall, 103 M 388, 62 P2d 672 (1936).

State Grazing Leases: An estate for years is an interest in land, and the alienation of an interest by lease for a number of years is a disposal of such interest. Hence, the prohibition of Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const. (Art. X, sec. 11, 1972 Mont. Const.), that none of the state lands "nor any estate or interest therein" be disposed of unless the full market value thereof be paid applies to the leasing of state grazing lands. Rider v. Cooney, 94 M 295, 23 P2d 261 (1933).

Notice Prior to Unlawful Detainer Action: Prior to amendment of this section by Ch. 48, L. 1931, a tenancy from month to month was in effect one at will and therefore the rule under which the 3-day notice required by 70-16-401 was a condition precedent to commencement of an action in unlawful detainer controlled as to tenancy from month to month. Boucher v. St. George, 88 M 162, 293 P 315 (1930).

Estates by Sufferance: It is not likely that this section has the effect of destroying estates by sufferance, as known at common law, and making them estates at will. Power Mercantile Co. v. Moore Mercantile Co., 55 M 401, 177 P 406 (1918).

Lease for Years: A lease for years is a chattel real. Wheeler v. McIntyre, 55 M 295, 175 P 892 (1918).

70-15-203. Fee simple.

Case Notes

Railway Deed — Fee Simple Title, Not Right-of-Way Easement: Defendants obtained a deed to abandoned property from the railway company when it filed for bankruptcy. Adjoining landowners now claim that the railroad held the land as an easement for railroad purposes and that the abandonment of the lands resulted in a reversion to them. However, the granting and habendum clauses of the deeds by which the railroad claimed title clearly showed the intent that the railroad was to receive title in fee simple. The deeds were general form warranty deeds of the type used in the unrestricted transfer of real property in this state. Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285, 46 St. Rep. 1287 (1989).

Fee Simple Defined: A fee-simple title signifies an estate of inheritance clear of any condition, limitation, or restriction. It stands at the head of estates as the highest in dignity and the most ample in extent. Gantt v. Harper, 82 M 393, 267 P 296 (1928).

Marketable Title: A "marketable title", "good title", and "clear title" are equivalent. They mean a title concerning which there is no fair or reasonable doubt, one which a court of equity would compel a purchaser to accept in a suit by the vendor for specific performance, namely, a fee-simple title. Gantt v. Harper, 82 M 393, 267 P 296 (1928), followed in First Mont. Title Co. v. N. Point Square Ass'n, 240 M 33, 782 P2d 376, 46 St. Rep. 1920 (1989).

Timber Grants: Where a landowner conveyed growing timber, with a right-of-way over the land for the purpose of removing it, to the buyer, "his heirs and assigns forever", without limitation or condition, a fee-simple estate in the timber passed to the grantee, and such grant was not defeated by the latter's failure to cut and remove it within a reasonable time. R. M. Cobban Realty Co. v. Donlan, 51 M 58, 149 P 484 (1915).

Case Notes

Lease of Realty Not Real Estate: A lease of real property is not real estate under this section or 70-15-202, so that a contract employing a broker to secure or sell a lease need not be in writing and is not within the Statute of Frauds (28-2-903). The same rule applies to option to purchase realty. O'Neill v. Wall, 103 M 388, 62 P2d 672 (1936).

Freeholder and Taxpayer Distinguished: A "freeholder" is one who holds an estate in real property, either of inheritance or for life (this section), while a "taxpayer" may be paying taxes on personal property alone. Warren v. Chouteau County, 82 M 115, 265 P 676 (1928).

Lease for Years: A lease for years is a chattel real, both under this section and the common law. Wheeler v. McIntyre, 55 M 295, 175 P 892 (1918).

70-15-208. Term of years — suspension of absolute ownership.

Declaration of Trust Held Not Invalid: Where under terms of declaration of a common-law trust trustees had absolute power of alienation of the property of the trust at any time in their discretion, the trust may not be declared invalid as in violation of statutes prohibiting restraints on the power of alienation (70-1-406 through 70-1-410, now repealed). Authority of Property Manager to Request Person to Leave Property — Written Authority of Property Owner Not Required: Allum caused a disturbance in a grocery store and was asked by the manager to leave. When Allum refused, he was arrested for trespass. Allum contended that the manager did not have the authority to ask Allum to leave without written authority from the property owner. The Supreme Court disagreed. The manager was authorized to make decisions regarding the property and did not need explicit written authorization from the owner in order to exercise the power of asking Allum to leave the property. CHAPTER 16
RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS INCIDENTAL TO OWNERSHIP IN REAL PROPERTY

Part 1
General Provisions

70-16-101. Rights of owner in fee — above and below surface.

Case Notes

Property Boundary Properly Established Following Accretion and Avulsion of River: The District Court found that the meander channel of the Sun River between plaintiffs' and one defendant's property moved south by accretion from where it was depicted in a 1906 government survey into a channel depicted in a 1937 aerial photograph and that the channel moved north by avulsion to its present channel in 1916. The court further concluded that the Sun River between plaintiffs' and another defendant's property also moved north by avulsion in 1948. The record amply supported the 1906 accretion that created the lots in question, at which time the property boundary moved with the water line. However, when the river avulsed to its present location in 1916, the property boundary did not move. Likewise, when the river avulsed north in 1948, the property boundary also did not move, so the District Court properly determined the boundaries between the lots after considering the avulsion and accretion of the river, and judgment was affirmed. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Crops — Ownership: When the crops were planted, work done, and harvest completed by defendant prior to a court-ordered change of possession, the crops belong to the defendant. Whitney v. Bails, 172 M 121, 560 P2d 1344 (1977).

Right to Alienate Life Estate: The right given by this section to the owner of a life estate, to use the land in the same manner as the owner of a fee simple, includes the right of alienation, which is one of the rights inherent in the ownership of the fee. Kerlee v. Smith, 46 M 19, 124 P 777 (1912).

70-16-103. Duties of life tenant.

Case Notes

Improvements: Cost of installation of sidewalk and steps and painting done at request of life tenant at her private dwelling should be paid by her and not out of corpus or estate funds. Improvements made by an executor pursuant to some ordinance or statute or improvements where the property was in an untenable condition should be charged to the corpus of the estate. In re Lindhardt's Estate, 133 M 65, 320 P2d 357 (1958).

Insurance: Fire insurance on buildings and automobile insurance taken out by executor in favor of the estate was properly chargeable against corpus rather than income. In re Lindhardt's Estate, 133 M 65, 320 P2d 357 (1958).

Repairs: Ordinary repairs on business property, such as repairs on a furnace, a new door, and a lock, should have been paid out of income since the duty to pay was on the life tenant. However, repairs normally charged off over more than one accounting period, such as new roofs, a new sidewalk, and repairing the interior in connection with business property, should be paid for by charging the initial expense to the estate funds and then allocating a portion from each year's income to be deducted and paid back into the corpus. In re Lindhardt's Estate, 133 M 65, 320 P2d 357 (1958).

Payment of Taxes: Requirement that owner of life estate pay taxes refers to entire tax on land itself. Rist v. Toole County, 117 M 426, 159 P2d 340, 162 ALR 406 (1945).

Lessee of State Land Not Granted Timber Rights — State as Proper Party in Interest as to Damages Resulting From Taking of Timber: State land lessee was improperly awarded damages for the harvesting of timber by another from the leased land. The lease granted grazing rights but made no mention of timber rights. Under this section, a tenant for years is not afforded timber rights by reason of his tenancy. As rightful owner of the land, the state is the only real party in interest as to damages arising out of the taking of timber. Edwards v. Severin, 241 M 168, 785 P2d 1022, 47 St. Rep. 169 (1990).

Ownership of Crops: Unless a tenant at will becomes a wrongdoer by holding over, he may take the annual products of the soil and may cultivate and harvest the crops growing at the end of his tenancy, which makes him at all times the owner, as against the landlord, of the crops, whether growing or severed. Power Mercantile Co. v. Moore Mercantile Co., 55 M 401, 177 P 406 (1918), distinguished in Hamilton v. Rock, 121 M 245, 191 P2d 663 (1948).

Case Notes

Characterization of Succeeding Beneficiaries as Remaindermen Not Error: In deciding that good cause did not exist to warrant division of a trust, the District Court described the succeeding beneficiaries as remaindermen. Two trust primary beneficiaries contended that the court erred in its description because the primary beneficiaries did not have life estates in the trust, to which they would succeed, but rather had a perpetual interest in the trust. The primary beneficiaries asserted that the court's misunderstanding of the nature of the succeeding beneficiaries' interests granted greater protection to the succeeding beneficiaries than was granted by the trust itself. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the primary beneficiaries' interest in the trust was not perpetual because the trust was designed to terminate upon the death of the last primary beneficiary, at which time the corpus would be distributed to the beneficiaries who succeeded to the primary beneficiaries' interests or to their assigns. It was understandable that the District Court would use the analogy of remaindermen to describe the succeeding beneficiaries, and the Supreme Court found no error in the analogy. In re Stevens Revocable Trust, 2005 MT 106, 327 M 39, 112 P3d 972 (2005).

Unlawful Detainer by Tenant in Common — Amendment of Pleading Properly Denied: Where the plaintiff and her sister leased farmland they owned as tenants in common to the defendant for a 6-year period and the sister conveyed her interest in the property to the defendant shortly before the expiration of the lease, the court did not err, in an action by the plaintiff brought in 1974 for an accounting of rents and profits from the defendant, in refusing to allow the plaintiff to plead and prove an unlawful detainer against the defendant. Leave of court should not be granted to allow amendments that present theories totally inapplicable to the case. As a tenant in common is an owner of an undivided interest in the property, a claim of unlawful detainer may not be asserted against a cotenant, but only against a tenant for a term less than life. A cotenant is allowed to possess and use commonly held property, and an action will lie for waste but not unpermitted use. Fry v. Heble, 191 M 272, 623 P2d 963, 38 St. Rep. 228 (1981).

2005 Amendment: Chapter 239 near middle of introductory clause after "house" substituted "town" for "village"; inserted (1) regarding the amount of damages due if the trespass was casual and inadvertent or committed under the belief that the land belonged to the trespasser or if the wood was taken by the authority of state or local government officers or employees for the purposes of a highway; in (2) after "damages" substituted "incurred if the trespass was willful, wanton, or malicious" for "which may be assessed therefor in a civil action in any court having jurisdiction"; and deleted former (2) that read: "(2) Nothing in subsection (1) authorizes the recovery of more than the just value of the timber taken from uncultivated woodland for the repair of a public highway or bridge upon the land or adjoining it"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

Case Notes

Damages for Casual or Involuntary Timber Trespass — Proposed Instruction as to Measure of Damages Properly Refused: The plaintiffs brought an action to recover for damages caused when one of the defendant's employees inadvertently cut timber on the plaintiffs' property without permission. The defendant admitted liability, so the only issue at trial was the amount of damages. The District Court gave the plaintiffs' proposed instruction stating that there are two separate elements of damage, the damage to the land and the damage for the removal of the timber. The District Court refused to give the plaintiffs' second instruction as to damages. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion and that the court correctly instructed the jury as to the measure of damages for injury to real property. When there was no pending issue of fact, it was not error for the court to refuse the plaintiffs' proposed instruction on treble damages. (See 2005 amendment.) Hartle v. Nelson, 2000 MT 356, 303 M 264, 15 P3d 484, 57 St. Rep. 1494 (2000).

Lessee of State Land Not Granted Timber Rights — State as Proper Party in Interest as to Damages Resulting From Taking of Timber: State land lessee was improperly awarded damages for the harvesting of timber by another from the leased land. The lease granted grazing rights but made no mention of timber rights. Under 70-16-104, a tenant for years is not afforded timber rights by reason of his tenancy. As rightful owner of the land, the state is the only real party in interest as to damages arising out of the taking of timber. Edwards v. Severin, 241 M 168, 785 P2d 1022, 47 St. Rep. 169 (1990).

Treble Damages — Factual Question: The determination of whether treble damages should be awarded hinged on the trial court's findings under 70-16-108 (now repealed) as to whether the treble damages provision was excused under the facts of this case, since 70-16-107 was held to be inapplicable (see 2005 amendment). Mtn. View Cemetery v. Granger, 175 M 351, 574 P2d 254 (1978), followed in Hartle v. Nelson, 2000 MT 356, 303 M 264, 15 P3d 484, 57 St. Rep. 1494 (2000).

Malice Required: Treble damages for the cutting of timber on plaintiff's land and its conversion by defendant are not recoverable under this section in an action for willful and malicious trespass, in the absence of proof of malice, wantonness, or evil design. McDonald v. Mont. Wood Co., 14 M 88, 35 P 668 (1894), distinguished in Tripp v. Silver Dyke Min. Co., 70 M 120, 224 P 272 (1924). McDonald was overruled in Hartle v. Nelson, 2000 MT 356, 303 M 264, 15 P3d 484, 57 St. Rep. 1494 (2000).

Remedies: This section provides no new remedy for the trespasses it specifies. The proceedings to redress those trespasses are the same as the proceedings to redress any other private trespass. Its only effect is the giving of additional pecuniary relief. Morse v. Swan, 2 M 306 (1875).

Part 2
Adjoining Landowners and Boundaries — Fences

Part Case Notes

Natural and Artificial Boundaries Prevail: In this action to quiet title, the boundary line between the parties' properties, based upon a resurvey that located the original corner monuments, was correctly determined. The general rule is that courses and distances must yield to natural and artificial monuments. Bollinger v. Hollingsworth, 227 M 454, 739 P2d 962, 44 St. Rep. 1228 (1987).

70-16-201. Owner of land bounded by water.

Case Notes

Ownership of Property Between River Low-Water Line and High-Water Line — Applicability of Meander Lines to Property Ownership: Two neighbors claimed ownership of an 11.14-acre parcel between the high-water line and the low-water line on the bank of the Jefferson River. The District Court determined that a meander line defined that boundary of plaintiff's property, so plaintiff owned the land. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that a surveyor uses a meander line in a property description to show that a navigable river serves as a property boundary and that if a meander line does not appear in the description, the boundary is fixed and does not alter with the river's shifting bank. Meander lines are not run to define the boundaries of a tract, but rather to define the sinuosities of the banks of a river or lake; therefore, the title of a grantee is not limited to a meander line, but the waters themselves constitute the real boundary. The rule applies to both government and private surveys and also applies to nonnavigable bodies of water, except that ownership then extends to the middle of the stream, not just to the low-water line. Additionally, this section provides that the property between the high-water line and the low-water line belongs to the party owning property to the high-water line unless a grant specifically indicates otherwise. In the present case, the description of plaintiff's property defined the river bank as the property boundary three times, so absent a contrary indication in the deeds and plats, the plaintiff was correctly determined to be the owner of the disputed property, and the District Court was affirmed. Given this ruling, the Supreme Court declined to consider, as irrelevant, extrinsic evidence regarding which party had paid taxes on the property and what the original intent was in establishing a boundary for subdivision purposes. Andersen v. Monforton, 2005 MT 310, 329 M 460, 125 P3d 614 (2005), following RR Co. v. Schurmeir, 74 US 272 (1868), and U.S. v. Boynton, 53 F2d 297 (9th Cir. 1931).

Property Boundary Properly Established Following Accretion and Avulsion of River: The District Court found that the meander channel of the Sun River between plaintiffs' and one defendant's property moved south by accretion from where it was depicted in a 1906 government survey into a channel depicted in a 1937 aerial photograph and that the channel moved north by avulsion to its present channel in 1916. The court further concluded that the Sun River between plaintiffs' and another defendant's property also moved north by avulsion in 1948. The record amply supported the 1906 accretion that created the lots in question, at which time the property boundary moved with the water line. However, when the river avulsed to its present location in 1916, the property boundary did not move. Likewise, when the river avulsed north in 1948, the property boundary also did not move, so the District Court properly determined the boundaries between the lots after considering the avulsion and accretion of the river, and judgment was affirmed. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Missouri River Islands Connected to Shore by Accretion — Ownership by State: The ownership of two tracts of land that were discernible Missouri River islands prior to attaching to adjoining lands was properly claimed by the state. Migration of the Missouri was not avulsion, which creates an identifiable piece of land through a sudden change in the river channel, but rather accretion, which is the deposit of sediment on one bank along the waterline due to the gradual and imperceptible change in the river course over a period of time. The property boundary line shifts with the waterline. Dept. of State Lands v. Armstrong, 251 M 235, 824 P2d 255, 49 St. Rep. 10 (1992), distinguishing McCafferty v. Young, 144 M 385, 397 P2d 96 (1964).

Access Right of Riparian Owner Not Destroyed by Changing Water Level: A riparian owner has a right of access to the water, and his access cannot be destroyed by the changing of the water level by gradual recession. He has the right to preserve his contact with the water by appropriating the accretions of the land that form along the shore and are exposed by reliction. Land formed by accretion or reliction becomes part of the shore, and the riparian owner acquires title to the water. He has a share in the land left exposed by the receding of the lake. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Division of Relicted Exposed Shoreline — General Principle: The general principle that governs how a relicted exposed shoreline is divided between lot owners on a lake is that any division must be equitable and proportional so far as to give each owner a share of the land to be divided relative to his portion of the original shoreline. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Public Recreational Use Rights Statute — Constitutionality: Following Curran and Hildreth decisions, which held that the public trust doctrine provides the public with a constitutional right to use the bed and banks of navigable streams up to the high-water mark despite a landowner's fee title, the Legislature enacted a statute providing public recreational use of streams. Plaintiff filed suit requesting the court to declare the recreational use statute an unconstitutional taking of private property without just compensation. Plaintiff then appealed after the trial court upheld the statute's constitutionality and awarded the state summary judgment. The Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional 23-2-302(2)(d), (2)(e), and (2)(f), which provided the public a right to hunt big game, build duck blinds and boat moorages, and camp overnight so long as not within sight of an occupied dwelling or within 500 yards of an occupied dwelling, whichever is less. The court further held as unconstitutional 23-2-311(3)(e), which required a landowner to pay costs of constructing a portage route around artificial barriers. The public has a right of use of the bed and banks up to the high-water mark but only such use as is necessary to utilization of the water itself. Any use of the bed and banks must be of minimal impact. Galt v. St., 225 M 142, 731 P2d 912, 44 St. Rep. 103 (1987), followed in Bitterroot River Protective Assoc., Inc. v. Bitterroot Conserv. Dist., 2008 MT 377, 346 M 507, 198 P3d 219 (2008). See also Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Public Right to Use Beaverhead River for Recreational Purposes: Following the decision in Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984), the Supreme Court held that: (1) the Beaverhead River is navigable for recreational purposes and the public has a right to use its bed and banks up to the ordinary high-water mark with limited right to portage across private property in order to bypass barriers in the water; (2) determination of navigability for title is not necessary; (3) the public does not have the right to trespass over private property in order to reach the state-owned waters; and (4) plaintiff's action did not constitute inverse condemnation because public use of waters, rather than title, was determined. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Hildreth, 211 M 29, 684 P2d 1088, 41 St. Rep. 1192 (1984).

Determination of Public's Right to Use Dearborn River — Standing of Coalition of Citizens: In action for determination of the public's right to use the Dearborn River, whether the Montana Coalition for Stream Access, Inc., had standing to bring suit was immaterial because the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks were also plaintiffs. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Determining Public's Right to Use Dearborn River — Indispensable Parties: Stream access coalition, the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation), and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks sued landowner along the Dearborn River, seeking a determination of the public's right to use the river. The District Court did not err for failure to dismiss the plaintiffs' claims for failure to join indispensable parties. When litigation seeks vindication of a public right, those who may be adversely affected by a decision do not thereby become indispensable parties. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Navigability for Title Purposes — Federal Test — Dearborn River Navigable: Federal law controlled the issue of whether the Dearborn River was, at the time Montana became a state, navigable for the purpose of determining title to its bed. Under federal law, rivers are navigable in law if they are navigable in fact, and they are navigable in fact if they were used or capable of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce over which trade and travel were or could be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on the water at the time of the state's admission to the Union. Navigability in fact can be determined by using the log-floating test. That test was satisfied by evidence that in 1887, 2 years before Montana became a state, the Dearborn was used to float about 100,000 railroad ties and that in 1888 or 1889, one or two log drives a year were floated down the river, one of them containing 700,000 board feet. Title to the riverbed was thus in the federal government when Montana became a state in 1889 and was transferred to the State upon its admission to the Union. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Navigability for Title Purposes — Summary Judgment — Dearborn River: The District Court properly granted the coalition for stream access and two state departments summary judgment on the issue of navigability of the Dearborn River in 1889 for title purposes. The affidavits and depositions of plaintiffs' two competent historians were admissible because the historians were qualified experts who provided evidence of the history of the river, their affidavits and depositions disclosed circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness, and the facts and data they relied on were of a type reasonably relied on by experts in their field; the facts and data did not themselves have to be admissible. The affidavits of defendant landowner's witnesses were worthless, were not admissible, and did not create any genuine issue of material fact concerning the navigability of the river at the time Montana became a state in 1889. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Public Recreational Use of Dearborn River — No Inverse Condemnation: Landowner along Dearborn River was sued by parties seeking a determination of the public's right to use the river for recreational uses. Landowner counterclaimed for inverse condemnation, basing the counterclaim on his claim to ownership of the riverbed. The Supreme Court held that the question of title to the bed was irrelevant to determining navigability for use by the public; that landowner had no claim to the waters; that since there was no claim to the waters, nothing was taken and thus there was no ground for an inverse condemnation claim; and that, consequently, the District Court did not err in dismissing the counterclaim. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Public Recreational Use Rights on Dearborn River — Limits: Navigability for public use is governed by state law and is separate from the question of navigability under federal law for title purposes. The question is whether waters owned by the State under Art. IX, sec. 3(3), Mont. Const., are susceptible to recreational use by the public. The capability of use of the waters for recreational purposes determines the availability of the waters for recreational use by the public. Whether or not a private party owns the bed beneath the waters is irrelevant. The constitution and the Public Trust Doctrine bar a private party from interfering with the public's right to use of the surface of the waters owned by the State, and any surface waters that are capable of recreational use may be so used by the public without regard to streambed ownership or navigability for nonrecreational purposes. The public's recreational use right extends to the point of the high-water marks. The public does not have the right to cross over private property to reach waters upon which they have a recreational use right, though they may portage around barriers in the water in the least intrusive way possible, avoiding damage to any private property holder's rights. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Title to and Public Recreation on Dearborn River — Ex Post Facto, Contract Clause, and Irrevocable Privileged Considerations: The Supreme Court held that the State, not the landowner along the Dearborn River, held title to the bed of the river under the federal test of navigability (at the time Montana became a state) for purposes of determining title to the riverbed. The court also held that landowner had no right to exclude the public from recreational use of the waters of the Dearborn. Because of these holdings, landowner's questions relating to ex post facto laws, violation of the contract clause of the constitution, and irrevocable rights and privileges were not germane to the case. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Title to and Public Use of Dearborn River — Federal Commerce Clause Navigability Immaterial: In action for determination of the public's right to use the Dearborn River, whether Montana has adopted the log-floating test of commercial navigability and whether the Dearborn is navigable under the federal commercial use test were immaterial because the question was one of recreational use or navigability, not commercial navigability. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Title to and Public Use of Dearborn River — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Found: Landowner along the Dearborn River claimed the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over action for determination of the public's right to use the river, basing his claim on the presumption that he held title to the riverbed and that the State had no power to strip him of that title under the guise of determining navigability of the waters over the riverbed. The claim lacked merit because the State holds title to the riverbed and the water flowing over it, so that there was no question of the District Court's subject matter jurisdiction. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Avulsive Change: Where stream channel, intended to serve as boundary, moved one-quarter mile in less than 100 years, such movement was "perceptible" and therefore avulsive. McCafferty v. Young, 144 M 385, 397 P2d 96 (1964).

Accretions by Dumping: Where lots abutted on river and additional land was formed through dumping by the city, such additional land belonged to the lot owners since their ownership extended to the middle of the stream. Such ownership was not cut off by fact that an alley ran across such land. Missoula v. Bakke, 121 M 534, 198 P2d 769 (1948).

Large Excess of Land Left Between Shore and Meander Line When Surveyed — Public Domain: Where shown in condemnation action by United States that lands in question were in place when survey was made and large body of unsurveyed land in controversy lay between meander line and low-water mark of Missouri River, such lands (and accretions thereto) remained and continued to be public domain. Where river subsequently changed its channel when ice broke up in spring by cutting across an oxbow loop, the abandoned bed belonged to the state under 70-1-202. U.S. v. Eldredge, 33 F. Supp. 337 (D.C. Mont. 1940).

Meander Lines: Meander lines run in surveying public lands bordering upon navigable bodies of water are run for the purpose of ascertaining the quantity of land for which the government requires payment. They are not boundary lines and title of the grantee is not limited to such lines but extends to the edge of the lake or stream at low-water mark, the water itself constituting the real boundary. Faucett v. Dewey Lumber Co., 82 M 250, 266 P 646 (1928), followed in Andersen v. Monforton, 2005 MT 310, 329 M 460, 125 P3d 614 (2005).

Pleading in Eminent Domain: A complaint in a condemnation suit which described the land by metes and bounds on three sides and on the fourth merely designated a navigable river as the boundary, without stating that by the latter description the high or low watermark was meant, was sufficient to meet the requirements of this section. Interstate Power Co. v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 52 M 509, 159 P 408 (1916).

Ejectment by Riparian Owner: The boundary of land on a nontidal navigable river, whenever another intent is not expressed, extends to the ordinary low-water mark, and ejectment will lie at the suit of a riparian owner on a navigable stream to recover the possession of land between high- and low-water mark from one who is in possession thereof not claiming rights as a navigator or fisherman. Gibson v. Kelly, 15 M 417, 39 P 517 (1895).

Attorney General's Opinions

Access to Rivers and Streams Via County Road Right-of-Way and Bridges: Given that the public has the right to use public highways in any manner and for any purpose consistent with or reasonably incidental to public travel, this right includes the use of public rights-of-way created by county roads to gain access to rivers and streams. Using a county road right-of-way as an access point to a river or stream right-of-way is consistent with and reasonably incidental to the public's right to travel on county roads. Further, a bridge and its abutments, as part of a public highway, offer the same access to rivers and streams for recreational use as the highway to which they are attached. However, the public's right of access is not unlimited and is subject to the following limitations: (1) the recreating public must stay within the county road and bridge right-of-way, which is assumed to be 60 feet unless otherwise stated by petition or dedication; (2) access may be limited by the reasonable exercise of a governing body's police power to control the use of roads for purposes such as safety and parking; and (3) use of a public highway may be limited by the manner in which it was created, such as a road created by prescriptive easement, which is limited both in size and usage to the original use during the prescriptive period and may include access for hunting, fishing, and recreation. 48 A.G. Op. 13 (2000).

Case Notes

Boundary Not Established by Fence When True Line Known: A fence does not establish a boundary line when it does not conform to the true line, even if the property owners thought it was the true line. Once a true boundary is determined, the parties must conform to the true line. Smithers v. Hagerman, 244 M 182, 797 P2d 177, 47 St. Rep. 1483 (1990).

Natural and Artificial Boundaries Prevail: In this action to quiet title, the boundary line between the parties' properties, based upon a resurvey that located the original corner monuments, was correctly determined. The general rule is that courses and distances must yield to natural and artificial monuments. Bollinger v. Hollingsworth, 227 M 454, 739 P2d 962, 44 St. Rep. 1228 (1987).

Requirements of Doctrine of Agreed Boundary Not Fulfilled: In 1920, a tenant of Christie's predecessor in interest built a fence which served as the boundary between two adjoining parcels now owned by Christie and Papke. In 1976, Christie had the property surveyed and learned that the fence had been improperly placed and that part of his property had been fenced out. Christie destroyed the 1920 fence and built a new one on the actual boundary line. Papke then destroyed that fence and built another where the 1920 fence had been. Under the doctrine of agreed boundary, Papke brought an action to quiet title in him to the portion in dispute. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's ruling that Papke had not established a claim under the agreed boundary doctrine because in order to establish an agreed boundary line, the evidence must show more than mere acquiescence and occupancy for the statutory period. The evidence must also show that there was uncertainty in the location of the line and that the coterminous owners fixed the line by express or implied agreement. The court ruled that Christie's long acquiescence in the existence of the 1920 fence did not create an implied agreement establishing a boundary. Christie v. Papke, 201 M 200, 657 P2d 88, 39 St. Rep. 2054 (1982), followed in Smithers v. Hagerman, 244 M 182, 797 P2d 177, 47 St. Rep. 1483 (1990).

Division Fence:

A party wishing to build a fence on a boundary line may do so without the consent of the other party, although the other party, when he decides to inclose his land, is obligated to pay his share of the cost of erecting and maintaining the fence. Montgomery v. Gehring, 145 M 278, 400 P2d 403 (1965).

Under this section, coterminous landowners are mutually bound equally to maintain a division fence. Each must contribute his share of the land, material, and labor for its erection and maintenance. Schmuck v. Beck, 72 M 606, 234 P 477 (1925).

When one adjoining landowner neglects or refuses to erect his portion of a division fence and the other erects the whole thereof with the knowledge of the owner of the adjoining land and, while intending to erect it on the line, by mistake erects it on the land of the other, he may on discovery of his mistake remove the fence without subjecting himself to an action for trespass or for material. Schmuck v. Beck, 72 M 606, 234 P 477 (1925).

Where two properties are divided by a fence which both owners suppose to be on the line, such fence is a division fence, as between them, until the true line is ascertained, when they must conform to the true line. Schmuck v. Beck, 72 M 606, 234 P 477 (1925), distinguished in Thibault v. Flynn, 133 M 461, 325 P2d 914 (1958).

A division fence erected on a boundary line agreed upon between adjoining properties is properly erected. Hoar v. Hennessy, 29 M 253, 74 P 452 (1903).

This section contemplates that the fence shall lie one-half on the land of each owner, each contributing his share to its erection and maintenance and the ground upon which it stands, and thus the fence may stand on the land of each without any agreement. Hoar v. Hennessy, 29 M 253, 74 P 452 (1903).

Construction Without Agreement: In boundary dispute, fence constructed by defendant as a stock barrier, without any agreement to fix boundary line, was not the true line as against line established by plaintiffs' surveyor. Tillinger v. Frisbie, 132 M 583, 318 P2d 1079 (1957), distinguished in Thibault v. Flynn, 133 M 461, 325 P2d 914 (1958).

70-16-206. Partition fences required — adjoining lands previously enclosed.

Case Notes

Effect of Natural Barriers: Trial court's allowing plaintiff to fence land 15 feet on other side of boundary line because of natural obstacles was erroneous, since where a stream, bluff, or other obstacle is encountered, the fence should be either discontinued or moved to the very edge of land around the obstacle, in fairness to the interests of both parties. Montgomery v. Gehring, 145 M 278, 400 P2d 403 (1965).

Removal of Line Fence:

Absent agreement, a line fence may be removed by either owner only after 6 months' notice to the other. Thompson v. Mattuschek, 134 M 500, 333 P2d 1022 (1959).

In action to restrain trespass by livestock and to recover for partial loss of a growing barley crop then being trampled and grazed down by livestock after defendant had removed a long-standing section line fence bounding one side of a field which plaintiff had just planted, complaint alleging malicious removal of fence was sufficient to state cause of action for trespass of cattle upon plaintiff's property although he did not allege a secure inclosure of the barley field but did so testify. Thompson v. Mattuschek, 134 M 500, 333 P2d 1022 (1959).

City Playground Injury — City Liable if Willful or Wanton Misconduct Shown: Based on agreement of the parties, the Supreme Court assumed, without deciding, that playing in a city park constituted a "recreational purpose" under the recreational use statute. The issue of whether the city committed willful or wanton misconduct for failure to maintain a park and the playground area was remanded to the District Court. Gatlin-Johnson v. Miles City, 2012 MT 302, 367 Mont. 414, 291 P.3d 1129.

Applicability — Recreational Purpose Defined: Plaintiffs, surviving parents of a child killed accidentally during a field trip arranged by the child's school to the Lee Metcalf National Wildlife Refuge, argued that the purpose of the trip was educational, not recreational, and therefore 70-16-302 does not operate to relieve the defendant landowner of liability. The federal District Court held the statute is applicable in any case where the entry is made for what could reasonably be regarded by the general public as a recreational purpose regardless of some different purpose in the mind of a particular user. Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 596, L. 2003, provided: "WHEREAS, the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation presently authorizes the public to use state school trust land through individual recreational use licenses; and

WHEREAS, the primary recreational uses of state school trust land are hunting and fishing; and

WHEREAS, the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks wish to provide a more efficient system for authorizing public recreational use for hunting, fishing, and trapping on state trust land and concurrently provide greater benefit to the institutional beneficiaries of the trust; and

WHEREAS, the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks has the discretionary authority in section 87-1-209, MCA, to enter into an agreement to compensate state trust land beneficiaries for the use and impacts associated with hunting, fishing, and trapping on legally accessible state trust land as defined by department of natural resources and conservation rule; and

WHEREAS, the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks needs additional revenue to offset the cost of an agreement with the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation to compensate state trust land beneficiaries for the use and impacts associated with hunting, fishing, and trapping on legally accessible state trust land; and

WHEREAS, the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks have reached an agreement that, given the legislative authority, they intend to enter into an agreement for the recreational use of school trust land parcels for hunting, fishing, and trapping purposes."

Severability: Section 11, Ch. 596, L. 2003, was a severability clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 303 near beginning of first sentence of (1) substituted "a person who uses property, including property owned or leased by a public entity, for recreational purposes" for "a person who makes recreational use of any property in the possession or under the control of another", after "permission" deleted "and without giving a valuable consideration therefor", after "landowner" deleted "his agent, or his tenant", and near end, after "purpose", inserted "if the person does not give a valuable consideration to the landowner in exchange for the recreational use of the property", in second sentence, in two places after "landowner", deleted "his agent, or his tenant", and inserted last sentence defining consideration as excluding the state land recreational use license fee; inserted (2) defining landowner; inserted (3) defining property; and made minor changes in style.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 209 substituted (1) outlining landowner, agent, or tenant liabilities for recreational use of property for former section that read: "A landowner or tenant who permits, by act or implication, any person to enter upon any property in the possession or under the control of such landowner or tenant for any recreational purpose without accepting a valuable consideration therefor does not by granting such permission extend any assurance that such property is safe for any purpose or confer upon such a person the status of invitee or licensee to whom any duty of care is owed, and such landowner or tenant shall not be liable to such person for any injury to person or property resulting from any act or omission of such landowner or tenant unless such act or omission constitutes willful or wanton misconduct."

Chapter 440 inserted (2) delineating liabilities of Department in operating snowmobile areas.

Landowner Liability — Preamble: The preamble to Ch. 209, L. 1987, provided: "WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court in Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., [218] Mont. [132], 706 P.2d 491 (1985), replaced the traditional invitee, licensee, and trespasser standards for measuring landowner liability with a single standard of reasonable care; and

WHEREAS, this single standard adopted by the Montana Supreme Court conflicts with the policy of restricted landowner liability established by the Legislature in sections 23-2-321 and 70-16-302, MCA."

Application of Montana Negligence Law to Snowmobile Accident on Federal Forest Service Trail: This case involved a Federal Tort Claims Act action brought by a snowmobiler who was severely injured on a U.S. Forest Service signed and maintained trail by members of the injured person's party who were following him. The Ninth Circuit Court certified to the Montana Supreme Court a question on the appropriate standard of care and received the Montana Supreme Court's response in Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, 2007 MT 293, 339 M 519, 171 P3d 715 (2007). The Ninth Circuit Court held that the actions of the Forest Service in signing the snowmobile trail involved in the action did not rise to the type of policy decisions that are not subject to the Federal Tort Claims Act. Applying the Montana negligence standards and foreseeability of risk from the response, the Ninth Circuit Court held that the negligence elements were applied correctly relating to the accident. Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, 514 F3d 989 (2008).

Gross Negligence Standard of Care in Snowmobile Liability Law Violative of Equal Protection — Ordinary Standard of Care Applicable to Snowmobile Liability: Musselman was severely injured in a snowmobile accident on U.S. Forest Service land, and Musselman's guardian sued the Forest Service under the Federal Tort Claims Act. The Forest Service argued that its decision not to mark the trail was discretionary under federal law and that Montana's snowmobile liability statutes relieved the Forest Service from a duty to warn of the hazardous trail because a snowmobile area operator had no duty under 23-2-653(3) to eliminate, alter, control, or lessen the risk inherent in the sport of snowmobiling. The federal District Court rejected both affirmative defenses and concluded that neither the gross negligence standard of liability in 23-2-653 nor the willful or wanton conduct standard of liability in this section applied, but rather that the ordinary care standard of liability in 27-1-701 applied, and apportioned liability between the Forest Service and the snowmobilers. The case was appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court, which affirmed in all respects except the determinative question of which standard of care applied. Three questions were certified to the Montana Supreme Court for resolution, including whether the gross negligence standard of care in 23-2-653 was constitutional and, if not, whether the willful or wanton conduct standard of liability in this section or the ordinary care standard of liability in 27-1-701 applied. The Supreme Court concluded that the same rationale applied to skiers in Brewer v. Ski-Lift, Inc., 234 M 109, 762 P2d 226 (1988), also applied to snowmobile area operators. The gross negligence standard of care in 23-2-653 is overbroad, extends beyond its stated purpose, fails to pass rational basis review, and violates the equal protection clause in Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const. The remainder of the snowmobile area operator law was left intact. The general recreational use willful or wanton conduct standard of liability in this section was held inapplicable. Rather, the ordinary care standard of liability in 27-1-701 governed the Forest Service's actions in this case. Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, Forest Serv., 2007 MT 293, 339 M 519, 171 P3d 715 (2007).

State Entitled to Immunity for Attack by Indigenous Wild Animal on State Lands — Grizzly Bear Considered Condition of Property: Hilston was killed by grizzly bears while hunting elk on state land in a wildlife management area. Hilston's personal representative sued the state for negligence in the operation, control, leasing, maintenance, and management of grizzly bears, natural resources, land, and people in the wildlife management area. The District Court held that the state was entitled to judgment as a matter of law under this section. On appeal, plaintiff asserted that this section applies only to defects in property and that grizzly management in the wildlife area is not a condition of the property for which immunity is granted. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the rule of law has developed that landowners cannot be held liable for the acts of wild animals on their property unless a landowner has reduced the wild animals to possession or control or introduced a nonindigenous animal onto the property. Grizzly bears are wild animals existing in the wildlife management area and as such are a condition of the property for purposes of this section, so the state owed no duty to protect Hilston from the bear attack. Summary judgment for the state was proper. Estate of Hilston v. St., 2007 MT 124, 337 M 302, 160 P3d 507 (2007).

Sufficient Evidence of City's Willful or Wanton Misconduct to Preclude Summary Judgment — Negligence Claim Against City Barred by Recreational Use Statute: Plaintiff was injured on June 20, 2001, after falling through a damaged plank on the Polson city dock, and filed suit against the city for negligently maintaining the premises and for failing to warn of the unsafe condition. The District Court granted summary judgment for the city on grounds that plaintiff failed to present evidence in support of the claim that the city was aware of the defective plank before June 20 or that the city acted willfully or wantonly. The court also concluded that plaintiff's negligence claim was precluded by this section, the recreational use statute. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the facts, when considered in a light most favorable to plaintiff, were sufficient to raise a genuine issue as to whether the city's failure to timely repair the damaged plank or warn plaintiff of the danger constituted willful or wanton misconduct, precluding summary judgment and warranting a trial on the issue. However, the Supreme Court agreed that the recreational use statute barred plaintiff's negligence claim. Jobe v. Polson, 2004 MT 183, 322 M 157, 94 P3d 743 (2004).

Failure to Give Notice of Constitutional Challenge to Landowner's Liability Law — Consideration of Constitutional Challenge Precluded: Plaintiff was injured on a sledding hill at a city park. Plaintiff contended that legislation that provided immunity to landowners was defective because the title did not mention that liability was also extended to governmental units, including municipalities. However, plaintiff failed to give notice to the Supreme Court or to the Attorney General, pursuant to former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), that an action in which neither the state nor a state agency or employee was a party was being challenged for constitutionality. The municipality was not a state agency, so the rule applied, and absent plaintiff's compliance with the notice requirements, the Supreme Court declined to address the constitutional issue. Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004).

Sledding in City Park Considered Recreational Purpose for Which City Immune From Liability: Plaintiff was injured on a sledding hill at a city park. The trial court held that the city was immune from liability pursuant to 70-16-302. Citing Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000), plaintiff contended that because city parks are freely available to the public, it was unnecessary for the law to encourage availability by limiting a city's tort liability. The Supreme Court disagreed and distinguished Dobrocke, holding that the use of city parks is discretionary, unlike the use of city streets and boulevards that was at issue in Dobrocke, so the legislative rationale behind this section to encourage the availability of recreational areas applied. Winter sports, such as sledding, are explicitly listed in the statute as a recreational purpose, so summary judgment for the city was affirmed. Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004).

No Requirement That Private Property Be Available for Public Use Before Landowner Liability Shield Applies — Landowner Immune From Suit Absent Consideration or Evidence of Misconduct: Saari went inner tube sledding with a church group on a hill at a ski resort after the resort was closed for the day. The group paid no fees to use the hill and did not rent or purchase equipment from the resort operator. During that evening, Saari lost control and crashed in a creek bed, suffering injuries which subsequently caused Saari's death. Saari's estate sued the resort operator on six negligence counts, including survival action, wrongful death, negligence, premises liability, attractive nuisance, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court held that this section precluded liability by the operator because there was no duty of care owed to Saari and granted summary judgment to the operator on all counts. The estate appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. By its terms, this section provides for landowner liability when a recreational user gives valuable consideration to the landowner in exchange for using the property or when the landowner acts with willful or wanton misconduct. While conceding that Saari paid no consideration for use of the ski hill, the estate nevertheless argued that the operator generally benefited from after-hours sledders, which constituted consideration. However, no legal authority was advanced for the proposition that economic benefits received at a different point in time constituted valuable consideration given by Saari on the night in question, and these speculative statements did not give rise to a genuine issue of material fact. Moreover, the operator's failure to prevent or supervise after-hours sledding did not constitute willful or wanton misconduct. An absence of evidence cannot establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Finally, the estate cited Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158 (1992), for the proposition that a question of fact existed regarding whether the property was open to the public. Under Simchuk, if the land upon which an injury occurs is not available for public use, the landowner does not enjoy the limited liability afforded by this section. However, a public use requirement would essentially negate the "without permission" language of the statute and exceed the parameters of the statute, and because the statute contains no express language that property be open for public use before the liability shield applies, the Supreme Court overruled Simchuk to that extent. Summary judgment on all counts was proper. Saari v. Winter Sports, Inc., 2003 MT 31, 314 M 212, 64 P3d 1038 (2003).

Summary Judgment Based on Recreational Use Statute Inappropriate: Plaintiff was injured after tripping on a fence wire while walking her dog at night in an unmaintained grassy area on city right-of-way next to a city street. The District Court allowed the city to assert an affirmative defense based on this section, which restricts the liability of a landowner when a person is injured while using the landowner's property for recreational purposes. Because plaintiff submitted no facts, arguments, or evidence to rebut the inference that she was on city property for recreational purposes, the District Court ruled that the city was immune from liability pursuant to the recreational use statute. Notwithstanding that plaintiff was precluded from arguing on appeal what was not raised at trial, the Supreme Court nevertheless considered the argument as part of its de novo review and disagreed that the city was entitled to judgment as a matter of law or that summary judgment was appropriate in this case. The court noted that although walking may in some circumstances be considered a recreational purpose, walking to and from one's home in a residential area of a city may not. Rather than a recreational purpose, walking to and from one's home is an everyday, ordinary, and expected use of city property by one of its citizens, and the District Court erred in applying the recreational use statute in these circumstances when granting summary judgment. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000).

Landowner Derivation of Economic Benefit as Voiding Liability Limitation: A private tennis/basketball court was not open to the public, and a valuable consideration was paid by members of a home owner's association for its use. The economic benefit derived by the association placed the property beyond the scope of this section, the recreational use statute, the clear intent of which is to grant a landowner relief from liability to any person gratuitously present for a recreational purpose. The valuable consideration need not flow directly from the injured party to the landowner in order to retain tort liability; the consideration need only be paid by someone to create access to the property for the ultimate user. (See 1995 amendment.) Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992).

Limited Liability Inapplicable if Land Not Available for Public Use: This section applies only to land made available for public use. If the land on which an injury occurs is not available for public use, the landowner does not enjoy the protection of limited liability. Therefore, limited liability does not extend to an injury that occurs at a private resort on a private tennis court. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992), overruled in Saari v. Winter Sports, Inc., 2003 MT 31, 314 M 212, 64 P3d 1038 (2003).

Applicability — Recreational Purpose Defined: Plaintiffs, surviving parents of a child killed accidentally during a field trip arranged by the child's school to the Lee Metcalf National Wildlife Refuge, argued that the purpose of the trip was educational, not recreational, and therefore this section does not operate to relieve the defendant landowner of liability. The federal District Court held the statute is applicable in any case where the entry is made for what could reasonably be regarded by the general public as a recreational purpose regardless of some different purpose in the mind of a particular user. Fisher v. U.S., 534 F. Supp. 514, 39 St. Rep. 518 (D.C. Mont. 1982).

Government Licensee: Notwithstanding that the agreement between power company and U.S. government used word "licensee", power company qualified as "landowner or tenant", as used in this section, since legal effect of instrument was to create lease. Therefore, power company could properly use this section as an affirmative defense in personal injury action. State ex rel. Tucker v. District Court, 155 M 202, 468 P2d 773 (1970).

Property: In action for personal injuries resulting from fall from private train being operated on defendant's property, trial court properly overruled plaintiff's motion to strike affirmative defense based on this section on ground that this section applies only to injuries caused by real estate, since under 1-1-205, "property", as used in this section, includes both real and personal property. (See 1995 amendment.) State ex rel. Tucker v. District Court, 155 M 202, 468 P2d 773 (1970).

CHAPTER 17
SERVITUDES, EASEMENTS, AND COVENANTS RUNNING WITH THE LAND

Chapter Case Notes

Commission Order to Remove Partially Constructed Barn Not Unreasonable — Negative Easement Analysis Inapplicable: A planning and zoning commission determined that a partially constructed barn that was outside the designated building site violated applicable zoning regulations and covenants and must be removed. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the commission's decision did not constitute an abuse of discretion since it was not so lacking in fact and foundation as to be clearly unreasonable. Moreover, the Supreme Court declined to apply the negative easement analysis in Conway v. Miller, 2010 MT 103, 356 Mont. 231, 232 P.3d 390, reasoning that the express language of the sales documents, the zoning regulations, and the covenants was sufficient justification for the commission's action. Botz v. Bridger Canyon Planning & Zoning Comm'n, 2012 MT 262, 367 Mont. 47, 289 P.3d 180.

Building Restriction Line on Subdivision Plat Creating Negative Easement Precluding Building in Restricted Portion of Lot: Defendant constructed a garage that was located on both sides of a building restriction line marked on a subdivision plat. Plaintiffs sought removal of the portion of the garage that crossed the building restriction line. Although defendant was aware of the building restriction line when purchasing the subdivision property, defendant contended that an easement was not created because the deed failed to have express language of the grantor's request to create an easement and because the deed did not identify the dominant and servient tenement or give the servient tenement knowledge of the building restriction line's use and necessity. The District Court found that defendant was aware of the building restriction by virtue of the recorded plat and a special exception to the title policy obtained upon purchase of the property, and defendant was ordered to remove the garage. Defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The description of the building restriction line on the subdivision plat clearly created a negative easement in plaintiffs' favor, restricting any building on a portion of defendant's lot, so the District Court did not err in prohibiting defendant from building in that area. Plaintiffs' easement was thus enforceable and removal of the garage was proper. Conway v. Miller, 2010 MT 103, 356 Mont. 231, 232 P.3d 390, following Halverson v. Turner, 268 Mont. 168, 885 P.2d 1285 (1994), and Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 Mont. 52, 993 P.2d 688, and distinguishing Blazer v. Wall, 2008 MT 145, 343 Mont. 173, 183 P.3d 84.

Sufficient Evidence to Support Public Access to Land Via Old County Road: Plaintiff sued to quiet title to any interest in a property that once constituted an old county road right-of-way and that had fallen into disuse. The District Court held that the public, including the state, had access to a particular section of land via the right-of-way, which was never formally abandoned. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court's ruling was supported by an 1893 petition for the roadway, a 1902 USGS map, a 1915 railroad map, a 1938 aerial photograph, testimony by the state's expert witness, and a viewing of the property by the District Court Judge. The Supreme Court declined to reweigh the evidence, and despite conflicting evidence, the evidence before the District Court was substantial and credible and supported the District Court's ruling. Only A Mile, LLP v. St., 2010 MT 99, 356 Mont. 213, 233 P.3d 320.

Elements of Implied Easement by Necessity Established — Easement Properly Granted — Interference Claim Properly Dismissed: Plaintiffs sought an easement by necessity across defendants' property. The District Court held that an easement by necessity existed and defined the scope of the easement, and both parties appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. There was sufficient clear and convincing evidence of both unity of ownership and strict necessity to establish an easement by necessity. Additionally, nothing in the history or condition of the property at the time of severance supported a finding that the extent of the implied easement by necessity across the servient estate should be unlimited, so plaintiffs were entitled to cross defendants' land to reach a public road. However, plaintiffs' claim that defendants interfered with the easement failed. The essential acts that gave rise to the easement by necessity arose in the 1930s, but plaintiffs' right to the easement was not established until 2007, so defendants could not have wrongfully interfered with the easement. Ashby v. Maechling, 2010 MT 80, 356 Mont. 68, 229 P.3d 1210. See also Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 Mont. 56, 968 P.2d 1135, Watson v. Lack of Express Utility Easements Not Condition Adversely Affecting Title: The buyer of condominium units refused to close on the sale because the sale agreement did not expressly state the existence of utility easements for each parcel. The District Court determined that the lack of express utility easements was not a condition that adversely affected title and held that the buyer breached the contract by refusing to close the sale. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The entire property was part of the sale, including all units and appurtenances. If the buyer wanted each unit to have a stated right to access the utility areas, the buyer could affirmatively grant that right to each unit after acquiring the property. Also, the buyer could have required the express establishment of the easements in a written addendum to the contract to be a condition precedent to closing, but the buyer did not do so. The buyer failed to establish that the absence of individual unit easements was an adverse condition of title that allowed the buyer to refuse to close the sale. Apple Park, LLC v. Apple Park Condominiums, LLC, 2008 MT 284, 345 M 359, 192 P3d 232 (2008).

Prescriptive Easement Established for One of Two Exits on Loop Road — Other Exit Considered Abandoned: Renner accessed his property by crossing Nemitz's property in two different places in order to form a loop driveway at Renner's house. The west easement was not at issue, but both the existence and location of an approximately 100-foot easement over the east side of the loop was contested. A series of interactions between the parties eventually led to Nemitz building a fence across the east side of the loop and Renner filing a claim to establish an easement over the east side of the loop. At trial, both parties presented testimony regarding use of the east side loop, including testimony regarding two possible exits on the loop. The District Court did not distinguish between the two exits, but found a prescriptive easement for the entire east side loop, held that the easement was not abandoned and that Nemitz's activities did not extinguish the easement, and granted Renner an easement for both exits of the east side loop, ordering all obstructions removed. Nemitz appealed. The District Court found clear and convincing evidence that a prescriptive easement existed for the east side loop based on testimony of its use from 1948 to 1974, and after reviewing the record, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's findings of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the easement. However, it was not clear from the testimony regarding use between 1948 and 1974 whether both exits met the requirements of a prescriptive easement, and that lack of specificity indicated that it was error for the District Court to find a prescriptive easement for both exits, but the error was harmless based on evidence regarding use from 1975 to 1995. Renner's predecessor in interest during that period continued to use the loop as in prior years and never sought permission and so could not be characterized as having abandoned the east loop easement. Testimony was undisputed that the left exit was used until 1995, but the right exit was not used past 1982, and testimony of Renner's predecessor in interest established that use of the right exit was intended to be subordinate to Nemitz's use, so it was error for the District Court to find that the right exit was not abandoned. The Supreme Court noted that extinguishment did not apply to the left exit because only 3 years passed between the time Renner acquired the property and when the claim was filed. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed the easement on the left exit and the order requiring removal of the fence across that exit, but reversed the part of the order requiring removal of the fence across the abandoned right exit. Renner v. Nemitz, 2001 MT 202, 306 M 292, 33 P3d 255 (2001), distinguishing Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 501, 668 P2d 1029 (1983).

Prescriptive Easement — "Clear and Convincing" Evidence Burden Adopted: Overruling Downing v. Grover, 237 M 172, 772 P2d 850 (1989), and earlier decisions requiring that the elements of a prescriptive easement be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, the Supreme Court held that the proper burden of proof is that each element of a prescriptive easement claim be proved by clear and convincing evidence. Wareing v. Schreckendgust, 280 M 196, 930 P2d 37, 53 St. Rep. 1362 (1996), followed in Renner v. Nemitz, 2001 MT 202, 306 M 292, 33 P3d 255 (2001), Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004), Combs-DeMaio Living Trust v. Kilby Butte Colony, Inc., 2005 MT 71, 326 M 334, 109 P3d 252 (2005), and Watson v. Dundas, 2006 MT 104, 332 M 164, 136 P3d 973 (2006). See also Steiger v. Brown, 2007 MT 29, 336 M 29, 152 P3d 705 (2007), and Baston v. Baston, 2010 MT 207, 357 Mont. 470, 240 P.3d 643.

Prescriptive Easement — No Proof of Permissive Use: The District Court's finding that a prescriptive easement had been established was proper where testimony of claimant's witnesses indicated open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the road and the landowner offered no evidence to establish permissive use other than his uncorroborated assertions. Thomas v. Barnum, 211 M 137, 684 P2d 1106, 41 St. Rep. 1266 (1984).

Part 1
Servitudes — Easements

Part Case Notes

Use of Public Road Created by Prescriptive Use Extends to All Reasonably Foreseeable Uses: Once a public road is established by prescriptive use, the use of that road is not limited to the adverse usage through which the road was acquired, but rather extends to all reasonably foreseeable uses, including foot travel. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Width of Public Right-of-Way Established by Prescription — Portion of Right-of-Way Necessary to Maintain County Road for Public Use — Not Reserved to County: Plaintiff association sued the county because property owners had erected fences along the county road to the ends of a bridge, thereby preventing the public from using the right-of-way access to the river. The parties stipulated that the right-of-way for this portion of the road had been established by prescriptive use. The plaintiff argued that the public's right-of-way extended not only to the road, but to portions along the road necessary to maintain it. The District Court disagreed and ruled that only the county had an easement that exceeded the fences for the purpose of maintaining and repairing the road. The plaintiff appealed and the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the width of a public road right-of-way established by prescriptive easement includes the areas necessary to support and maintain the road and that those areas are not reserved for the county. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the matter to the District Court to determine the actual width of the right-of-way in accordance with its guidelines. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Accrual of Adverse Use Prohibited When Property Owned by Government: Because a private party cannot obtain a prescriptive easement against the federal government, a private party's adverse use of property did not begin to run until the federal government conveyed title to the property to a private entity. Burcalow Family, LLC v. Corral Bar, Inc., 2013 MT 345, 372 Mont. 498, 313 P.3d 182.

Broad Chain of Title Concept Adopted: Recognizing that there are two lines of authority — the broad approach and narrow approach — on the question of whether a servitude created by a common grantor in the deed to the benefited parcel is in the chain of title of the burdened parcel, the Supreme Court adopted the broad approach and concluded that a prospective purchaser is on constructive notice not only of conveyances to the prior owners of the parcel, but also of conveyances from the prior owners of the parcel during each of their respective periods of ownership. Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154.

Permission to Use Dock Granted by Prior Owner — Whether Permission Carries Over to Subsequent Owners to Be Evaluated on Case-by-Case Basis — No Prescriptive Easement: In urging the Supreme Court to find that they had established an easement by prescription to a dock owned by the plaintiff, the defendants urged the court to follow the rule outlined in Han Farms, Inc. v. Molitor, 2003 MT 153, 316 Mont. 249, 70 P.3d 1238, which declared that one owner's grant of permission does not continue by default to the next owner. After reviewing significant case law regarding the transferability of permission for use, the court declined to adopt the defendants' argument and overruled the proposition in Han Farms that permission can never carry over from one owner to another after the sale of the servient property. Rather, the court reiterated that based on a thorough reading of its permissive use cases, the court will always consider the nature of the initial permission and attendant circumstances to analyze whether permission exists. Pedersen v. Ziehl, 2013 MT 306, 372 Mont. 223, 311 P.3d 765.

Easement by Reservation — Creation by Reference — Location Description on Plat Sufficient to Establish Burden Imposed by Easement With Reasonable Certainty: The Supreme Court held that an easement by reservation was created when the deed conveying title referred to the plat on file with the County Clerk and Recorder. While the plat did not provide a metes-and-bounds description of the easement's location, the court determined that the plat identified the dominant and servient tenements, the intended use or necessity for the easement, and a description of the easement's location sufficient to establish with reasonable certainty the course of the easement across the property. Yorlum Properties, Ltd. v. Lincoln County, 2013 MT 298, 372 Mont. 159, 311 P.3d 748.

No Express Easement to Use Adjoining Property — Insufficient Description in Restrictive Covenants: Several homeowners on Big Sky Lake near Missoula alleged the existence of an express easement for unrestricted use of four roads or trails on property owned by the defendants. The homeowners relied primarily on restrictive covenants as the source of the easement, but the covenants granted only an easement for ingress and egress and use of a perimeter road around the lake. The District Court found no evidence that the homeowners had an easement for unobstructed use of roads on the defendants' property, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Thayer v. Hollinger, 2013 MT 52, 369 Mont. 181, 296 P.3d 1183.

Prescriptive Easement Determined by Use During Prescriptive Period: During easement litigation concerning Boadle Bridge, the original bridge burned down and was rebuilt by the defendant with privately owned materials. The Supreme Court found that there was a public prescriptive easement burdening the defendant's land that was not limited to the bridge's physical structure. In 2011, the defendant removed the bridge, asserting that it was his private property, and built a new bridge accessing a private road. The plaintiffs claimed that the defendant had destroyed the bridge in violation of the Supreme Court's decision. The District Court dismissed the case, ruling that the public's easement to a specific bridge included only the one that burned down, although the public retained the right to use any future bridge at the same site. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that although the defendant may own the bridge, a prescriptive easement is not determined by ownership of the property but by use during the prescriptive period. Therefore, the defendant could not remove the bridge or interfere in the public access to it. Pub. Land/Water Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Jones, 2013 MT 31, 368 Mont. 390, 300 P.3d 675.

Express Easement Allowed When Dominant Tenement Not Contiguous to Servient Tenement: An express easement may be appurtenant to noncontiguous property if both tenements are clearly defined and it was the parties' intent that the easement be appurtenant. Davis v. Hall, 2012 MT 125, 365 Mont. 216, 280 P.3d 261.

Implied Easement by Necessity — Negated by Eminent Domain Power: In the context of federal checkerboard land grants to railroads, the claimant of an implied easement by necessity traced common ownership of the dominant and servient parcels to the federal government, and the necessity for the easement arose when the parcels were severed from the federal government's common ownership, thus satisfying the unity of ownership requirement. However, the easement failed because the United States' power of eminent domain negated the "strict necessity" requirement, and the claimant failed to produce evidence regarding the government's intent to reserve an easement and its inability to condemn an easement. Yellowstone River, LLC v. Meriwether Land Fund I, LLC, 2011 MT 263, 362 Mont. 273, 264 P.3d 1065.

Unreasonable Interference With Ditch Easement: In a ditch easement dispute, the District Court allowed the defendant's culvert and rock bridge to remain in the plaintiff's irrigation ditch. Applying 70-17-112, under which an owner of the ditch easement has the right to enter on the servient tenement to maintain the ditch, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the defendant, by constructing permanent encroachments, had unreasonably interfered with the plaintiff's ditch easement. Musselshell Ranch Co. v. Seidel-Joukova, 2011 MT 217, 362 Mont. 1, 261 P.3d 570.

Servient Estate Not to Unilaterally Change Location of Right-of-Way — Changes in Easement Ordered Altered to Accommodate Historical Use: The plaintiffs had an easement over a road that subsequently was declared a public road. Developers later purchased a portion of the dominant estate and reconfigured the road to convert an "S" curve into two right angles. The changes to the road made it impossible for the plaintiffs to drive their oversized equipment on the road as they had historically. The District Court ordered the servient estate to increase the radii of the turns in the road to allow the plaintiffs to use the road for their oversized equipment without having to go off the roadway or cross lanes. Gibson v. Paramount Homes, LLC, 2011 MT 112, 360 Mont. 421, 253 P.3d 903.

Elements of Implied Easement by Necessity Established — Easement Properly Granted — Interference Claim Properly Dismissed: Plaintiffs sought an easement by necessity across defendants' property. The District Court held that an easement by necessity existed and defined the scope of the easement, and both parties appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. There was sufficient clear and convincing evidence of both unity of ownership and strict necessity to establish an easement by necessity. Additionally, nothing in the history or condition of the property at the time of severance supported a finding that the extent of the implied easement by necessity across the servient estate should be unlimited, so plaintiffs were entitled to cross defendants' land to reach a public road. However, plaintiffs' claim that defendants interfered with the easement failed. The essential acts that gave rise to the easement by necessity arose in the 1930s, but plaintiffs' right to the easement was not established until 2007, so defendants could not have wrongfully interfered with the easement. Ashby v. Maechling, 2010 MT 80, 356 Mont. 68, 229 P.3d 1210. See also Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 Mont. 56, 968 P.2d 1135, Watson v. Dundas, 2006 MT 104, 332 Mont. 164, 136 P.3d 973, and Wolf v. Owens, 2007 MT 302, 340 Mont. 74, 172 P.3d 124.

No Improper Reliance on Extrinsic Evidence in Finding of Valid and Enforceable Express 60-Foot Easement for Subdivision: Defendant acquired certain property after an express easement across the property was created by the former owner. Defendant refused to allow the building of an access road across the property, contending that the easement agreement was invalid on several grounds. The District Court examined the agreement and concluded that the easement was valid and enforceable and granted summary judgment for plaintiffs. On appeal, defendant asserted that the District Court erroneously relied on facts outside the agreement, making summary judgment inappropriate, but the Supreme Court affirmed. For purposes of interpreting a writing granting an interest in real property, evidence of the surrounding circumstances, including the situation of the property and the context of the parties' agreement, may be shown so that the judge is placed in the position of those whose language the judge is to interpret. However, to comply with the statute of frauds and the recording system, the writing itself must ultimately stand on its own and meet the formal requirements for granting a property interest. In this case, the District Court was allowed to consider various facts not contained in the easement agreement for purposes of understanding the situation, but the court's analysis of the easement's validity apparently was limited to the face of the agreement, so the court did not erroneously rely on extrinsic facts. The easement agreement satisfied the formal requirements for expressly granting an easement and created a valid 60-foot emergency public access and utility easement that was enforceable against defendant. Additionally, the District Court properly concluded that because there was no dominant tenement, the easement was in gross and could be used by members of the public to travel between the subdivision and the public highway for emergency purposes and to provide utility services. There being no questions of material fact, summary judgment was proper. Broadwater Dev., LLC v. Nelson, 2009 MT 317, 352 M 401, 219 P3d 492 (2009), distinguishing Blazer v. Wall, 2008 MT 145, 343 M 173, 183 P3d 84 (2008). See also Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982 (1985).

Sandstone Not Considered Mineral With Respect to Mineral Reservation in Lease — Summary Judgment Proper: A deed conveying property to Craig reserved to Hart the rights, leases, and royalties to minerals on the property. After the sale, Craig mined and sold sandstone from a quarry on the property. Based on the reservation, Hart sued for the money Craig collected from the sale of the sandstone. The District Court granted summary judgment to Craig, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. Sandstone is not considered an exceptionally rare or valuable mineral simply because it can be sold commercially. Therefore, sandstone was not considered to be a mineral included in the general reservation of mineral rights. Hart v. Craig, 2009 MT 283, 352 M 209, 216 P3d 197 (2009). See also Farley v. Booth Bros. Land & Livestock Co., 270 M 1, 890 P2d 377 (1995).

No Reserved Easement to Off-Survey Property Absent Language in Deed Expressly Reserving Easement: Blazer asserted that an easement was reserved across Wall's property that allowed access to Blazer's off-survey property. The District Court agreed and ordered Wall to remove encroachments in the easement. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. An express easement arises when a property owner conveys property that includes language in the conveyance reserving the right to use some part of the transferred land as a right-of-way or when the instrument of conveyance to a recorded plat or certificate of survey adequately describes an easement. Additionally, an easement by reservation may be established only when the dominant and servient estates are split from single ownership, and express depiction of an easement on a referenced plat or certificate of survey is not sufficient, in and of itself, to create an easement for the benefit of a stranger to the deed. In this case, there was no express language in the transaction documents reserving an easement to an adjoining parcel or to Blazer's off-survey property, so no easement for Blazer was created. The District Court was reversed. Blazer v. Wall, 2008 MT 145, 343 M 173, 183 P3d 84 (2008), following Bache v. Owens, 267 M 279, 883 P2d 817 (1994), Halverson v. Turner, 268 M 168, 885 P2d 1285 (1994), Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247 (1996), and Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688 (2000). See also Davis v. Hall, 2012 MT 125, 365 Mont. 216, 280 P.3d 261, in which the Supreme Court distinguished and followed Blazer, concluding that if a referenced plat or certificate of survey is the only document describing a purported easement then the document must stand on its own, but if a referenced plat or certificate of survey is used to confirm or amplify another document's description of a purported easement, the documents should be read together.

No Express Federal Reservation of Public Road Pursuant to Land Patent — Easement by Reference Reversed: The District Court held that the federal government expressly reserved a public road across patented mining claims by referring in an 1896 federal land patent to a mineral survey that depicted a road labeled "ROAD". Citing Leo Sheep Co. v. U.S., 440 US 668 (1979), the Supreme Court disagreed. Plaintiff cited no authority for the proposition that a reference in a federal land patent to a mineral survey that depicts a road labeled "ROAD" qualified as an express reservation under federal law. Rather, the inference prompted by the presence of certain other express reservations in the patent and the absence of an express reservation for a particular right-of-way was that no right-of-way was reserved. The intent to create an easement must be clearly and unmistakably communicated on the referenced plat or certificate of survey, using labeling or other express language, and an easement may not be inferred or implied from an unlabeled or inadequately described swath of land or other depiction appearing on a certificate of survey. Additionally, the Supreme Court has recognized the creation of privately held easements only by reference and has never applied the doctrine to create a public road, and the court declined to do so in this case. Nothing in the field notes or in the patent evidenced an intent by the federal government to reserve a public road across a patented mining claim, and the District Court erred in finding that the road traversing the mining claim was a public road pursuant to an express easement by reservation created in the mining survey and referenced in the conveying documents of the mining claim. The District Court was reversed. Our Lady of the Rockies, Inc. v. Peterson, 2008 MT 110, 342 M 393, 181 P3d 631 (2008).

Deed Outside Chain of Title — No Easement Absent Notice That Property Servient to Access Stated in Deed: Nelson's deed for a subdivision lot stated that Nelson would have a roadway easement for access to another lot bordered by Flathead Lake. That lot was subsequently purchased by Barlow. Barlow's deed contained no reference to an easement or reference to Nelson's deed stating that Nelson had a roadway easement to access Barlow's lot. When Barlow began building a cabin on his lot, Nelson sued to enjoin construction, alleging that Nelson's deed entitled him to cross Barlow's lot to access Flathead Lake. The District Court granted Barlow's motion for judgment on the pleadings and dismissed Nelson's claim, so Nelson appealed. The Supreme Court first noted that the language in Nelson's deed was ambiguous and concluded that the District Court erred in holding otherwise. However, the District Court correctly noted that Barlow was not a party to Nelson's deed, and because no similar access provision existed in Barlow's deed, Barlow was not bound by Nelson's deed. Nelson's deed was outside Barlow's chain of title. Even though Nelson's deed was recorded several years prior to Barlow's purchase, that fact was insufficient to impose an easement on Barlow's lot. Barlow was not required to examine the chain of title to Nelson's land to discover an alleged easement across the Barlow property for the benefit of Nelson, and the purported grant of lake access in Nelson's deed did not put Barlow on notice that his property was servient to an easement. The District Court was affirmed. Nelson v. Barlow, 2008 MT 68, 342 M 93, 179 P3d 529 (2008), overruled in part in Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154. See also Rigney v. Swingley, 112 M 104, 113 P2d 344 (1941), and Goeres v. Lindey's, Inc., 190 M 172, 619 P2d 1194 (1980).

Failure to Establish Uninterrupted Possession to Qualify as Extinguished Easement — Summary Judgment Proper: A deed of restriction reserved easements on all existing roads within a subdivision for the scenic views and enjoyment of the property and for the reasonable general use of all subdivision property owners to access public lands. In 1984, defendants bought three subdivision tracts and promptly erected a locking gate across the road that intersected their property. Plaintiff subdivision association requested that defendants remove the gate because it was interfering with property owners' access to public lands. However, defendants refused and threatened legal action, so the association took no immediate action. The association eventually filed a complaint in 2000, accusing defendants of violating the deed of restriction by interfering with the easement. Defendants contended that the association had waived or abandoned any easement by not using the road for over 17 years. The District Court disagreed and granted summary judgment to the association. Defendants appealed on grounds that summary judgment was improper because a material fact existed as to whether the easement had been extinguished, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The association established the existence of a valid recorded easement that encumbered defendants' land, and defendants failed to show that their use of the road was continuous and uninterrupted for 5 years. In fact, the record was replete with admissions that association members continued to use the road, interrupting defendants' attempted adverse possession of the easement. Additionally, defendants testified that the gate was not locked all the time, that they lived outside the state part of the year, during which time they were unable to enforce their claim of right, and that the association had graded and maintained the road during the time in question. Thus, defendants' own testimony contradicted their claim of abandonment and adverse possession. The District Court did not err in finding that defendants' claims failed to establish a genuine issue of material fact that would preclude summary judgment. Meadow Lake Estates Homeowners Ass'n v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 41, 341 M 345, 178 P3d 81 (2008).

No Easement by Necessity Absent Showing of Strict Necessity to Access Property: Plaintiff claimed an implied easement by necessity to a road that burdened two properties adjoining that of plaintiff. The District Court applied the criteria in Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135 (1998), for establishing an easement by necessity: (1) unity of ownership; and (2) strict necessity at the time that the tracts are severed. The court held that plaintiff failed to establish unity of ownership and held that no easement by necessity existed. On appeal, plaintiff argued that there was unity of ownership based on original ownership of the tracts by the federal government in 1906 and that when the government granted odd-numbered sections of land to the railroad, the government reserved an implied easement over the odd-numbered sections in order to reach the even-numbered sections, citing Leo Sheep Co. v. U.S., 440 US 668 (1979). The Supreme Court questioned citation of Leo Sheep because that case explicitly held that the doctrine of implied easement by necessity did not apply in that case and that the federal government could not claim an easement by necessity. Nevertheless, even if it was agreed that unity of ownership existed at one time through federal ownership, plaintiff failed to satisfy the second prong of the Hoyem Trust test, in that plaintiff could not prove that strict necessity to access existed in 1906 because no one lived on the property when the tracts were severed, so there was no necessity to reach the property. The District Court was affirmed. Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2007 MT 347, 340 M 294, 174 P3d 481 (2007). The Hoyem Trust criteria for determining the existence of an implied easement by necessity were also applied in McKay v. Wilderness Dev., LLC, 2009 MT 410, 353 M 471, 221 P3d 1184 (2009).

Private Use of Access Road Not Unexplained — Remand for Findings on Whether Private Use Constituted Prescriptive Easement: The District Court found that private use of an access road was both periodic and unexplained, and the court declined to analyze that use any further. The Supreme Court disagreed that use of the road was unexplained. Two long-time residents testified that persons previously lived on property accessed by that road and that the road was maintained by the early residents and used by them to access the property. Because the use was explained, the question was whether that use satisfied the elements of a prescriptive easement, and the case was remanded for further findings and conclusions. Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2007 MT 347, 340 M 294, 174 P3d 481 (2007).

Sporadic, Infrequent Public Use of Road — Insufficient Evidence of Public Prescriptive Easement or Easement by Grant or Reservation: Citing Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990), plaintiff contended that public use of an access road for logging, cattle grazing, hay harvesting, recreation, and search and rescue operations established a public prescriptive easement or an easement by grant or reservation. The Supreme Court noted that public use of the road was sporadic, infrequent, and of limited duration and thus the use did not meet the requirement in Granite County that the public followed a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly for the prescribed statutory period together with an assumption of control adverse to the owner. Plaintiff's claim of a public prescriptive easement was properly denied. Because no public easement existed, an easement by grant or reservation likewise did not exist. Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2007 MT 347, 340 M 294, 174 P3d 481 (2007).

On remand, the District Court determined that the prescriptive easement was abandoned, and Leisz appealed. The Supreme Court noted that abandonment must be proven with words or acts that indicate a clear intent to abandon and that mere nonuse does not establish abandonment. In this case, Leisz's predecessors took no actions demonstrating a manifestation not to resume beneficial use of the easement or an intent to relinquish possession of the easement, but rather they simply stopped using the easement in favor of a different access. Therefore, the District Court erred in finding abandonment, and that decision was reversed and judgment was entered for Leisz allowing Leisz a prescriptive easement. Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2010 MT 105, 356 Mont. 259, 232 P.3d 419.

Subdivision Lot Limited to Residential Use — Nonresidential Structure on Lot Without Accompanying Residence Violative of Covenant: When a restrictive covenant limits a subdivision lot's use to residential use, a nonresidential structure that is placed on the lot without an accompanying residential dwelling on the same lot violates the covenant, even if the structure is used in conjunction with a residential dwelling on an adjoining lot. Micklon v. Dudley, 2007 MT 265, 339 M 373, 170 P3d 960 (2007), following Hillcrest Homeowners Ass'n v. Wiley, 239 M 54, 778 P2d 421 (1989), and Tipton v. Bennett, 281 M 379, 934 P2d 203 (1997).

Easement Transferred With Transfer of Portion of Dominant Estate — Subdivision of Dominant Tenement Not Considered Increased Burden on Servient Tenement: The District Court found that the creation of a tract and the subsequent sale to Dabney constituted a transfer of a portion of the dominant estate and that the transfer conveyed all easements attached to the property to Dabney, so Dabney had a prescriptive easement to use a road across Leichtfuss's property to access the Dabney property. The court also concluded that Leichtfuss's parcels were not impermissibly burdened by Dabney's use of the road. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a life tenant or lessee generally cannot impose upon land a burden that passes to a remainderman or reversioner, the termination of a dominant estate held in less than fee simple does not automatically extinguish an appurtenant easement. Rather, it is the intent or expectations of the parties to the servitude that determine its duration. In this case, there was no evidence that the parties intended to abandon Dabney's parcel, so Dabney's use of the road was within the scope of the original easement on the parcel, and the easement was apportioned according to the division of the dominant tenement. In addition, Leichtfuss's contention that the apportionment increased the burden on the servient tenement also failed. "Subdivision and conveying away of portions of a dominant estate does not, in and of itself, mean that an additional burden is imposed upon the servient estate." Dabney's use of the parcel was consistent with the predecessor's historical use, and this was not a case in which the easement was suddenly being used to serve additional land or residences or in which the character of the easement's use was changed, so no increased burden to Leichtfuss's parcel was created. Extent of Public Easement Not Limited to Contested Portion on Defendant's Property — Prescriptive Easement Properly Found as Matter of Law: A part of Boadle Road that crossed a portion of defendant's property had been chained and closed by defendant's predecessor in interest in 1999. Plaintiff land access association sought to have the road declared a public road and have defendant enjoined from prohibiting public access. The trial court found that Boadle Road was in existence since the early 1900s and that open public use without landowner permission continued unabated until the road was closed in 1999. Defendant contended that because the litigated portion of the road began and ended on his property, the road essentially went nowhere and thus it was pointless for the trial court to find a public prescriptive easement. The Supreme Court disagreed. Nothing supported defendant's contention that an easement cannot begin and end on the servient landowner's estate. The portion of the road on defendant's property was part of a much longer public road, and there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that the public was entitled to a prescriptive easement over the portion of the road in dispute. Mere Denial of Public Nature of Road Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Public Prescriptive Easement Affirmed: The District Court found that the elements of a prescriptive easement over a road on defendants' property were satisfied and granted summary judgment to plaintiff county. Defendants contended that disputed issues of fact existed regarding proof of a prescriptive easement, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The county proved that use of the road was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for the statutorily required period. The only evidence in support of defendants' position was a conclusory hearsay statement claiming that the previous owners had indicated that the road was not public. Defendants' mere denial of the public nature of the road was insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to withstand summary judgment. Powell County v. 5 Rockin' MS Angus Ranch, Inc., 2004 MT 337, 324 M 204, 102 P3d 1210 (2004), following Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002).

Finding of Gap Between Easements Not Clearly Erroneous — Remediation and Injunctive Relief Proper: In attempting to exercise an easement to some trust property, defendants breached plaintiffs' fence line and plowed about 70 to 80 feet of new road across plaintiffs' property to connect a 1950 road on the trust property to defendants' newly relocated easement. Plaintiffs sued, contending that there was a mismatch between the terminus of the 1950 road and defendants' newly surveyed and relocated easement. Faced with conflicting testimony from two professional surveyors, the District Court Judge conducted an on-the-ground inspection of the property, concluding that in the process of relocating the original easement running along defendants' property line, defendants created a gap of 70 to 80 feet between the old road and the new road and breached the gap by crossing plaintiffs' property. Defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court found no clear error in the District Court's findings and affirmed. The District Court was at liberty to give the expert testimony whatever weight that the court considered to be justified. Substantial credible evidence supported the finding that a large gap existed and that defendants connected the roadways by plowing across plaintiffs' land without regard to plaintiffs' property rights. The Supreme Court also affirmed the District Court's grant of plaintiffs' request to enjoin defendants from using the connecting road, its order to defendants to reinstall plaintiffs' fence line and gates and to resurface and restore plaintiffs' property, and its holding of defendants in contempt for failing to obey the mandates of the preliminary injunction. Koeppen v. Bolich, 2003 MT 313, 318 M 240, 79 P3d 1100 (2003).

Damages for Wrongful Interference With Easement — Remand for Calculation of Applicable Expenses: Although there was no indication how the figure was arrived at, the District Court awarded plaintiff $75,000 in damages for defendant's wrongful interference with plaintiff's easement, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court noted that plaintiff unnecessarily paid for private access across a neighboring ranch, for which defendant was not liable, and that plaintiff submitted claims for road plowing, maintenance, insurance, and spraying of noxious weeds even though plaintiff would have incurred some of those costs even if plaintiff had used the road across defendant's property. Thus, because there was no discussion of how the $75,000 figure was arrived at, and to the extent that the trial court awarded damages that plaintiff would have incurred no matter which access was used, the trial court erred, and the case was remanded for a determination of actual costs. Brimstone Min., Inc. v. Glaus, 2003 MT 236, 317 M 236, 77 P3d 175 (2003).

No Public Prescriptive Use of Mining Road Never Declared Public Road — Prescriptive Easement Established and Not Extinguished by Reverse Adverse Possession: Owners of a road used since 1936 for mining access claimed a public prescriptive use. The road was never formally declared a public road or used for the statutorily required period of time sufficient to establish a prescriptive easement. Thus, the existence of a public prescriptive easement depended on the exploratory use that took place when the mine was not in full operation, recreational use by the public, and county road maintenance. However, even taken together, this evidence did not rise to the level of public prescriptive use. The District Court did not err in finding that no public prescriptive easement existed over the road. However, while the evidence did not qualify as a public easement, it did qualify as a private easement in plaintiff's favor. Virtually unrestricted use of the road between 1936 and 1961 met the requirements of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, uninterrupted use for the required statutory period. Further, defendant's act of locking a gate across the road and providing plaintiff a key and access with permission was not a distinct and positive assertion unequivocally hostile and adverse to plaintiff sufficient to extinguish plaintiff's easement by reverse adverse possession. Brimstone Min., Inc. v. Glaus, 2003 MT 236, 317 M 236, 77 P3d 175 (2003). See also Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990).

Burden of Rebutting Claim of Prescriptive Easement by Showing Permissive Use: There was no dispute that plaintiff's use of a road was open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and uninterrupted, but the parties did dispute whether use of the road was hostile. The District Court held that the use was hostile and granted plaintiff a prescriptive easement. On appeal, defendant contended that her predecessor in interest gave permission to plaintiff's predecessor in interest to use the road and cited Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025 (1983), for the proposition that if use of a road begins as a permissive use, it cannot ripen into a prescriptive right unless there is a distinct and positive assertion of a hostile right to the owner. Defendant pointed out that plaintiff did nothing to make a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to defendant. The Supreme Court noted that under Rettig v. Kallevig, 282 M 189, 936 P2d 807 (1997), permissive use is not transferable and distinguished Morrison because in that case, there was ample evidence that the use of the road was permissive. The court then cited Wareing v. Schreckendgust, 280 M 196, 930 P2d 37 (1996), for the rule that once a claimant has established the elements of a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises and the burden shifts to the owner affected by the claim to establish that the claimant's use was permissive. Thus, the burden was not on plaintiff to show that use of the road was hostile, but rather on defendant to show that the use was permissive. Defendant did not meet the burden, and the District Court's conclusion that a prescriptive easement existed across defendant's land was affirmed. Han Farms, Inc. v. Molitor, 2003 MT 153, 316 M 249, 70 P3d 1238 (2003), overruled, to the extent that Han Farms held that permissive use is never transferable, by Pedersen v. Ziehl, 2013 MT 306, 372 Mont. 223, 311 P.3d 765. See also Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2012 MT 264, 367 Mont. 67, 289 P.3d 156, and Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Failure to Prove Unity of Ownership — No Implied Easement by Necessity: As a general rule, creation of an implied easement by necessity requires that the easement be granted over the grantor's land and never over the land of a third party or a stranger to the title. Here, the easement claimed by plaintiffs ran across property not owned by plaintiffs' grantor at the time of the grant, so plaintiffs were unable to prove unity of ownership necessary to establish an implied easement by necessity. Kullick v. Skyline Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2003 MT 137, 316 M 146, 69 P3d 225 (2003), following Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590 (1984), and followed in Yellowstone River, LLC v. Meriwether Land Fund I, LLC, 2011 MT 263, 362 Mont. 273, 264 P.3d 1065.

Conflicting Evidence Regarding Prescriptive Easement for Ditch Maintenance — District Court Affirmed: Plaintiff alleged that defendant's access to plaintiff's property for ditch maintenance must be limited to the historic use of the ditch bank. The District Court was presented with conflicting evidence regarding how open defendant's use of plaintiff's property was and determined that plaintiff knew or should have known that defendant was accessing the ditch by various routes across plaintiff's property and that the access was not permissive. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that defendant had a prescriptive easement, and that finding was not disturbed on appeal. Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

No Establishment of Public Road by Common-Law Dedication When Use of Road Permissive: Two elements are required to establish a common-law dedication of a roadway: (1) an offer by the owner evidencing an intention to dedicate the roadway; and (2) an acceptance by the public. The intent of an offer to dedicate must be clear, satisfactory, and unequivocal, and evidence of mere permissive use does not prove an intention to dedicate. In this case, plaintiffs failed to clearly and unequivocally demonstrate defendants' intention to dedicate a private road to the public. A 1916 petition for the opening of a school and a 1948 petition to establish a road did not establish that the owners intended to dedicate the road to the public; rather, use of the road was shown to be permissive, so no common-law dedication was established. Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002), following Descheemaeker v. Anderson, 131 M 322, 310 P2d 587 (1957), and Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 M 379, 962 P2d 583 (1998).

Use of Private Road Permissive by Neighborly Accommodation — Public Prescriptive Easement Not Established: Plaintiffs sought an easement of record from defendants regarding the rural road crossing plaintiffs' property, but defendants refused. Plaintiffs then sought a declaratory judgment that the road was a public road established by prescriptive use, asserting that the road was a public thoroughfare established by common-law dedication as evidenced by a 1916 petition for the opening of a school and a 1948 petition to establish a road. The District Court found that the 1916 and 1948 petitions did not establish an offer evidencing an intention to dedicate the road to the public and that use of the road was instead permissive through neighborly accommodation. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. All elements of a prescriptive easement must be proved by clear and convincing evidence because one who has legal title should not be forced to give up what is rightfully theirs without the opportunity to know that the title is in jeopardy and to fight for it. Once a claimant establishes the elements of a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises, and the burden shifts to the landowner to establish that the use was permissive. If permissive use is shown, no easement can be acquired because the theory of prescriptive easement is based on adverse use. Use of a neighbor's land based upon mere neighborly accommodation or courtesy is not adverse and cannot ripen into a prescriptive easement. Rather, in addition to use, generally some circumstance or act tending to indicate that the use was not merely permissive is required. The presence of gates or other obstructions, to be opened and closed by parties passing over the land, has always been considered strong evidence in support of a mere license to the public to pass over the designated way. The facts here showed that use of the road was permissive and at the pleasure of the landowners, so no public prescriptive easement existed. Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002). See also Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), Hitshew v. Aerial Photographs Establishing Presence of Open and Visible Road on Property Before and After Purchase — Summary Judgment Regarding Easement Proper: Defendant purchased a lot in plaintiff's subdivision. Plaintiff's declaration of easements and rights-of-way granted and reserved easements across and in favor of all lots in the subdivision, but did not specify the location of any particular easement. Defendant blocked the road running across her property, and plaintiff sought monetary, injunctive, and declaratory relief. The District Court granted plaintiff a preliminary injunction prohibiting defendant from interfering with the road. Plaintiff then moved for partial summary judgment, arguing that plaintiff had an easement on the road by express reservation, by implication, and by prescription, supporting the motion with affidavits and aerial photographs taken 6 years before and 6 years after defendant purchased the property, indicating that the road was open and obvious. The District Court granted partial summary judgment, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. When an easement is reserved without designating a location and a road exists at the time of the reservation, then a court will treat the road as an easement that the parties anticipated and the parties are presumed to contract with reference to the condition of the property at the time of sale if the marks are open and visible. The aerial photographs established the absence of a genuine issue of material fact regarding the existence of the road in its present location prior to defendant's purchase of the property, and defendant denied but offered no proof that the road was not open and visible. The photographs were not susceptible to cross-examination because the credibility of the affiant who testified regarding the veracity of the photographs was not crucial to the decision of material fact. Plaintiff demonstrated the presence of the easement, and partial summary judgment on that issue was proper. Ponderosa Pines Ranch, Inc. v. Hevner, 2002 MT 184, 311 M 82, 53 P3d 381 (2002). Potential Access Rights Merged With Deeds and Extinguished — Applicability of Contract Law Doctrine of Merger: Prior to Gehring's consent to sell 360 acres to APS Corporation (APS) in 1970, they entered an agreement that included a provision on access rights, whereby Gehring purported to grant future purchasers access to other land owned by Gehring for certain recreational purposes. After being told by the Gehring Ranch Corporation that they would not be allowed access to Gehring's land for recreation, the successors in interest to APS sought to enforce the agreement, alleging that they had been improperly excluded from the land and that the agreement created an easement over Gehring's land. The District Court granted summary judgment for the Gehring Ranch Corporation, noting that the agreement did not identify Gehring's other lands upon which an easement was purportedly created. The court also held that any agreement prior to execution of the deeds was merged with the deeds and that because the deeds transferring title did not provide for access, any access rights promised in the agreement were lost. The decision was appealed, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The clause in the agreement was part of a larger agreement to transfer property in the future, and Gehring did not intend to create an easement, but at most intended to provide for potential access privileges if certain conditions, such as creation of a property owners' association and adoption of rules governing the use of the recreational privileges, were met. The Supreme Court cited Urquhart v. Teller, 1998 MT 119, 288 M 497, 958 P2d 714 (1998), in applying the contract law doctrine of merger, holding that the deeds contained all the rights of the parties and that because no access privileges were mentioned in the deeds, any potential access rights referred to in the agreement merged with the deeds and were lost. Richman v. Gehring Ranch Corp., 2001 MT 293, 307 M 443, 37 P3d 732 (2001).

Reverse Adverse Possession — Public Prescriptive Easement Extinguished by Relocation of Road and Public Acquiescence With Locked Gates for Thirty Years: Dome Mountain Ranch's predecessor in interest relocated a road in 1965 and installed locked gates and no trespassing signs. Public access was limited to occasional, seasonal recreational use by permission or when the gates were unlocked, until Park County officially declared the road a county road in 1994. Dome Mountain Ranch claimed that the 5-year statutory period of reverse adverse possession concluded in 1970, so it was not required to show a clear intent by the county to abandon the road in proving its claim of reverse adverse possession. Title to a public road may not be obtained by adverse possession, and there must be a clear showing of intent to abandon a county road. Mere nonuse, even for extended periods of time, is generally insufficient in itself to indicate an intent to abandon. Likewise, mere nonuse or lack of maintenance by the county is not sufficient to indicate an intent to abandon, absent notice and a public hearing. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right in a prescriptive easement must not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. Seasonal recreational use, use by neighbors visiting neighbors, and use by persons cutting Christmas trees and gathering firewood are generally not sufficient to establish use by the public over a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly. In this case, the Supreme Court agreed with Dome Mountain Ranch that reverse adverse possession applied. The relocation of the road, coupled with the public's acquiescence with locked gates for almost 30 years, extinguished the county's public prescriptive easement, if one ever existed. Dome Mtn. Ranch, LLC v. Park County, 2001 MT 289, 307 M 420, 37 P3d 710 (2001), following Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), and McCauley v. Easement by Reservation — Showing of Intent to Create Easement in Favor of Stranger to Deed Required: The Loomises contended that an easement by reservation to their property was created by two clauses within an original contract for deed when the Kolbs sold some adjoining property to the Luraskis. The language in the contract for deed purported to reserve a right-of-way and easement over and across the west 30 feet of the Luraski property for the purpose of establishing a public road and an easement for utilities. The District Court concluded that the disputed easement was outside the Loomises' chain of title, making them strangers to the deed, because the express reservation was from the Kolbs to the Luraskis and the Loomises were not parties. The Supreme Court agreed. An easement by reservation in favor of a stranger to a deed can be created only by clearly showing the grantor's intent to do so. In this case, testimony and evidence established that the Kolbs intended to preserve the option for means of access to other property only in the event that property was purchased, but the optional property was never purchased and the road was never constructed. The Supreme Court also disagreed with the Loomises' contention that no one should be considered a stranger to the deed because the reservation was for a public road. No rights are granted to the public prior to a road's actual creation and dedication. The court found it unlikely that a prudent landowner would reserve an easement for the benefit of the public at large, and the burden was on the Loomises, as strangers to the deed, to show the Kolbs' intent to reserve an easement for the Loomises' benefit. The fact that the Kolbs subsequently amended the original certificate of survey to eliminate the disputed easement was further proof that no easement reservation was created for the Loomises. Subsequent acts of the parties that tend to show the construction that they themselves placed upon the writing are also important in determining intent if intent is not clearly expressed in the deed. No easement by reservation was created in favor of the Loomises as a matter of law, and the District Court did not err in so holding. Loomis v. Luraski, 2001 MT 223, 306 M 478, 36 P3d 862 (2001).

No Easement by Necessity Absent Showing of Lack of Practical Access to Public Road: The Loomises contended that evidence at trial was sufficient to support a finding of an easement by necessity over a disputed easement on the Luraskis' property. Easement by necessity arises only in very special circumstances—when an owner of land conveys a parcel that has no outlet to a highway except over the remaining lands of the grantor or over the lands of strangers. The District Court found that the Loomises failed to establish an easement by necessity because they had access to their property by means other than a disputed easement and because they failed to prove strict necessity. Strict necessity, together with unity of ownership, is one of two elements of an easement by necessity and is defined by a lack of practical access to a public road for ingress and egress. The Loomises' own expert testified that a road could be constructed at a cost of up to $12,000 on the Loomises' undisputed 60-foot legal easement, which ran to the property up a steep hill and could be connected to a public road. The Supreme Court affirmed. There was no evidence that the cost of constructing the road was disproportionate to the value of the land itself. Failure to prove strict necessity negated a conclusion that an easement by necessity existed. Loomis v. Luraski, 2001 MT 223, 306 M 478, 36 P3d 862 (2001), following Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590 (1984).

Determination That Servient Estate Burdened by Expansion of Easement Based on Credible Evidence — Correct Case Law Properly Applied: Hardy contended that the District Court had insufficient evidence to define the scope of Hardy's easement and to find that Hardy burdened the servient estate by trying to improve an access road for subdivision purposes and that the court failed to apply the correct case law in making its determination. The Supreme Court disagreed on both issues. The District Court had substantial credible evidence upon which to find that Hardy changed the use of the access road to the detriment of the servient owners, who were burdened by Hardy's unreasonable and vexatious use of the easement to the extent that some equitable remedy was required to preserve their right of use and enjoyment and to maintain the status quo. Circumstances dictated that the District Court tailor a precise and restrictive remedy, and the court did so. Further, in arriving at its conclusion, the court properly applied the correct case law in looking beyond the plain language of the unrestricted easement to define the scope and breadth of the servitude. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in enjoining Hardy from any activity other than using the easement for temporary secondary access in the event that his primary access became impaired, based on the conclusion that Hardy was incapable of responsibly exercising his nonpossessory rights associated with repairing and maintaining the easement burdening plaintiffs' property. However, to avoid a potential issue for future dispute, the Supreme Court did remand for a clarification of the injunction for the limited purpose of determining responsibility for the maintenance and repair on the entire easement road. Public Highway Established Pursuant to 1895 Law — Mere Nonuse by County Not Considered Abandonment —- Inapplicability of Prescriptive Easement and Reverse Adverse Possession: The District Court found that the Tucker Gulch Road was clearly defined and in use by the public for at least 27 years prior to enactment of sec. 2600, The Codes and Statutes of Montana (1895), which declared all highways and roads then used by the public as public highways. However, the court went on to hold that it was not a petitioned county road and that there was a prescriptive easement by the public over the road that had been lost through abandonment and by reverse adverse possession when a new road was relocated near the old one. The District Court properly found that Tucker Gulch Road was a public highway; however, mere nonuse or lack of maintenance by the county was insufficient to indicate a clear intent to abandon the road without notice and a public hearing. Moreover, the county's failure to respond to several quiet title actions in which the county was not served and the county's adoption of a resolution naming the road did not indicate an intent to abandon. Abandonment cannot be established by mere implication. The Supreme Court cited Baertsch v. Lewis & Clark County, 256 M 114, 845 P2d 106 (1992), for the general rule that title to a public road may not be obtained by adverse possession. The Supreme Court also cited Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990), and affirmed the District Court's finding that there was not a public prescriptive easement along the relocated new road because most of the nonpermissive use of the new road was by occasional recreationists. The District Court's conclusion that creation of the easement was not specific and that the easements were designed for the access of the owners for activities associated with residential living was in error, however, absent evidence in the access agreement or survey establishing such a restriction. Thus, the grant of unrestricted access to landowners who had owned a mine adjoining the property in question was not in error. McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794, 57 St. Rep. 855 (2000), distinguishing Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), and followed in Lee v. Musselshell County, 2004 MT 64, 320 M 294, 87 P3d 423 (2004).

Bridle Path Easement — Express Easement by Reservation Versus Implied Easement — Extrinsic Evidence Regarding Parties' Intent Inadmissible: Purchasers in a subdivision had language in their deeds creating an express easement for a bridle path in the subdivision. The bridle path was never built, and over the years, the easement was obstructed by improvements on the lots of several subdivision residents. Eventually, the subdivision association attempted to extinguish the easement at a meeting of the board of directors. Some residents asked the District Court to establish the validity of the easement and to restrain obstruction of the easement, and their request was granted by partial summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted the difference between an implied easement, which is a creature of equity dependent on the intent of the parties, and an express easement by reservation, which is a creature of the documents of conveyance and the record. An express easement by reservation arises when the purchaser's deed refers to the plat where the easement is clearly depicted and labeled. In this case, the intent of the parties to create a bridle path easement was manifested through the language in the deeds and the plat, so under 28-2-905, extrinsic evidence regarding the intent of the parties was inadmissible. Further, the subdivision association was given oversight of the easement, but not ownership of it, and so lacked authority to extinguish the easement. The lower court's finding that a valid bridle path easement existed was affirmed. Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000), following Missoula v. Mix, 123 M 365, 214 P2d 212 (1950), Bache v. Owens, 267 M 279, 883 P2d 817 (1994), Halverson v. Turner, 268 M 168, 885 P2d 1285 (1994), and Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Public Use for Statutory Period Coupled With Assumption of Adverse Control — Public Prescriptive Easement Established: An easement by prescription is created by operation of law through open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use for 5 years. Following the same criteria, applied to public prescriptive easements in Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990), the Supreme Court noted that to establish the existence of a public road by prescription, it must be shown that the public followed a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly for the prescribed statutory period, together with an assumption of control adverse to the owner. To be open and notorious, the use of a claimed right must give the landowner actual knowledge of the claimed right or be of such a character as to raise a presumption of notice. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right may not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. To be adverse, the use or assumption of control of a claimed right must be exercised under a claim of right and not as a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the landowner. Regular maintenance of a roadway by the party asserting a prescriptive easement is evidence of adverse rather than permissive use. Because a public prescriptive easement is "public", the element of exclusivity is not required in establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement. In the present case, the county presented sufficient evidence establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement on German Gulch Road, including a history of open public use and county maintenance of the road, an absence of evidence that the public ever abandoned use of the road, and the fact that plaintiff never erected gates, barriers, or signs on the road to create the impression of permissive use or established permissive use through neighborly accommodation. Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996).

Establishment of Public Highway Under United States Revised Statutes Section 2477 — Use Alone Insufficient Under State Law — State Declaration of Existence of Public Highways Inapplicable: The Richters brought an action in District Court to condemn an easement across the land of a neighbor that surrounded their property on three sides, claiming that a public highway had been established, pursuant to United States Revised Statutes section 2477 (R.S. 2477), across public land before that land ultimately passed to their neighbor. The Supreme Court reviewed the purpose of R.S. 2477, as described in Butte v. Mikosowitz, 39 M 350, 102 P 593 (1909), and noted that it had earlier held in St. v. Nolan, 58 M 167, 191 P 150 (1920), that R.S. 2477, later codified as 43 U.S.C. 932, was only an offer by the United States to convey land but that state law determined how that offer was accepted and, in that case, held that at that time there were four ways in which a public highway could be established under Montana law. The Supreme Court then reviewed the history of the Montana statutes governing how the R.S. 2477 offer was accepted by the state and pointed out that in 1895, section 2603 of the Political Code of Montana was adopted providing that use alone was insufficient to establish a public road over private land, although section 2603 was amended in 1913 to delete the prohibition against creating a public highway by use alone. Therefore, between 1895 and 1913, a public road could be established by use only if public authorities with jurisdiction over the property on which the road was claimed took an act tantamount to a declaration that a particular road was a public road. Because the Richters presented no evidence that the County Commissioners with jurisdiction over the road that they claimed to exist upon their neighbor's property had taken any action to declare that road to be a public highway, the Supreme Court held that as a matter of law, the Richters' evidence of use alone was insufficient to establish a public right-of-way upon that land between 1903 and 1907. The Supreme Court also held that section 2600, Political Code of Montana, enacted in 1895, declaring that highways used by the public are public highways, did not create a public highway across what became their neighbor's property because that statute applied only to existing uses at the time of the statute's enactment and Richters' evidence did not demonstrate any use of the road until 1902. Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 M 379, 962 P2d 583, 55 St. Rep. 663 (1998). See also McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794, 57 St. Rep. 855 (2000), and Watson v. Dundas, 2006 MT 104, 332 M 164, 136 P3d 973 (2006).

Evidence Insufficient to Prove Common-Law Dedication of Public Right-of-Way Across Private Property: The Richters brought an action in District Court to condemn an easement across the land of a neighbor that surrounded their property on three sides, claiming that a public highway had been established across what became their neighbor's land after the United States had sold the property to its first private owner. The Supreme Court noted that it had previously held in Kaufman v. Butte, 48 M 400, 138 P 770 (1914), that Montana law required that both an offer by the owner of the land evidencing the owner's intent to dedicate the land for a public right-of-way and an acceptance of that offer by the public had to be demonstrated to prove a common-law easement. Distinguishing McKey v. Hyde Park, 134 US 84 (1890), the Supreme Court held that because the Richters presented no evidence that the first private owner of the land took any action demonstrating an intent to dedicate a public right-of-way across her property, the Richters failed to prove the existence of that right-of-way. Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 M 379, 962 P2d 583, 55 St. Rep. 663 (1998).

Reservation of Easement Held Sufficient — Wild Rivers and Ruana Distinguished: The Andersons, as the buyers, entered into a buy-sell agreement with the Rankins, as the sellers, that stated that the Rankins were "keeping an easement 30' Wide" across the property sold to the Andersons. Later, the Andersons entered into a contract for deed with the Rankins that attached an Exhibit "A". Exhibit "A" stated that the property was purchased "[s]ubject however, to reservation of an easement of right of way with ingress and egress" by the Rankins and then described the easement. A notice of purchasers' interest was later signed by both parties and recorded with the county with the same Exhibit "A" attached. Still later, a warranty deed was filed that stated that the property acquired by the Andersons was subject to the easement reserved by the Rankins. At the same time, the Andersons recorded a homestead exemption that reserved the 30-foot easement for the Rankins. Subsequently, the Rankins sold property to the Reichles through a buy-sell agreement and warranty deed, both of which noted that the Reichles would be able to use the Anderson-Rankin 30-foot easement as a public road for access to the Reichles' property. After the Reichles notified the Andersons that the Reichles intended to fence off the easement and graze llamas, the Rankins notified the Reichles' attorney that the Reichles would not be allowed any further use of the easement. The Reichles brought a declaratory judgment action against the Andersons and the Rankins for enforcement of the right-of-way easement. The Supreme Court, distinguishing the "subject to" language at issue in Wild Rivers Adventures, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees, 248 M 397, 812 P2d 344 (1991), and Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247 (1996), held that the language of Exhibit "A" with its "reservation" of an easement was sufficient to reserve that easement when the Rankins' property was conveyed to the Andersons and that the Rankins could later convey that easement to the Reichles. Reichle v. Anderson, 284 M 384, 943 P2d 1324, 54 St. Rep. 930 (1997).

Restriction for "Residential Use" Defined — Conditional Satisfaction of Covenant Reversed — Estoppel Inapplicable to Second Plaintiff: Tipton agreed to sell property to the Bennetts and executed a warranty deed with a covenant that provided that the property "shall be used strictly for residential purposes and no business, trade or manufacture of any sort or nature shall be conducted thereon". The real estate agent informed Tipton that the Bennetts intended to build first a garage and then, later, a house on the property. The Bennetts built a building with a ground floor area of 3,200 square feet and with a height of 21 feet. Tipton and another neighbor, Wetherall, sued to enforce the restrictive covenant. The Bennetts argued that the building was used only for personal storage and that Tipton had been warned of the Bennetts' intent to construct the building and was therefore estopped from enforcing the covenant. The District Court held that the building violates the covenant unless the Bennetts constructed a dwelling on the property within 1 year. Citing Hillcrest Homeowners Ass'n v. Wiley, 239 M 54, 778 P2d 421 (1989), the Supreme Court held that "residential purposes" excluded the storage building and upheld the District Court on the issue of whether the building violated the covenant. However, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court as to the District Court's requirement that the Bennetts construct a dwelling on the property within 1 year, holding that the building was inconsistent with use for "residential purposes" with or without a house on the property. The Supreme Court noted that it would have arrived at the same conclusion whether or not the issue of estoppel was fully addressed because the second plaintiff, Wetherall, was not informed of the Bennetts' plans to construct a garage and therefore could not be estopped from bringing the action. Tipton v. Bennett, 281 M 379, 934 P2d 203, 54 St. Rep. 229 (1997), followed in Micklon v. Dudley, 2007 MT 265, 339 M 373, 170 P3d 960 (2007).

Abandonment of State Highway — Statements by State Field Supervisor Contemporaneous With Removal of Asphalt Held Not Evidence of Official Act by State Evidencing Clear Intent to Abandon Easement — Asphalt Alone Not "Highway": DeVoe brought a declaratory judgment action against the state, claiming that the removal of asphalt from a curving intersection and statements by a supervisor of a crew removing the old roadway evidenced an intent by the state to abandon its easement granted in 1937. DeVoe argued that statements by James Williams, the state's field project manager in charge of removal of the asphalt from the section of highway on the state's easement claimed by DeVoe to have been abandoned, showed that the state intended to abandon the easement. The Supreme Court held that the statements by Williams, to the effect that the state might give up the easement, were evidence of an intent to abandon but did not constitute evidence of an official act by the state indicating a clear intent to abandon the 1937 easement. The Supreme Court also noted that a "highway" is defined as including the highway right-of-way and that, for this reason, removal of asphalt does not constitute removal of the highway. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly granted summary judgment against DeVoe because the District Court properly found that the easement was still subject to highway-related uses. DeVoe v. St., 281 M 356, 935 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 207 (1997).

Summary Judgment Proper: In the first appeal of this case to the Supreme Court, the court held that the buy-sell agreement, warranty deed, contract for deed, and certificate of survey created a valid easement for the plaintiffs. On remand, the District Court granted the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment. On a second appeal, the Supreme Court rejected the defendant's arguments based on specific performance, breach of contract, estoppel, fraud and deceit, and quiet title and held that the District Court did not err when it denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment and granted summary judgment in favor of the plaintiffs. Bache v. Owens, 280 M 106, 929 P2d 217, 53 St. Rep. 1320 (1996).

Road Not County Road by Prescription — Insufficient Evidence of Adverse Public Use and County Maintenance: Leffingwell Ranch and Peckenpaugh Ranches brought a declaratory judgment action against Elk Park Ranch to determine whether Miles Creek Road was a county road. The evidence at trial consisted of testimony that showed that Park County had plowed the road occasionally as a favor to local ranchers and had repaired a bridge, but had ceased plowing and maintenance in 1968. The evidence also showed that previous owners of the Elk Park Ranch had sought permission for use of Miles Creek Road from others who maintained gates across the road. Citing Descheemaeker v. Anderson, 131 M 322, 310 P2d 587 (1957), the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court, holding that there was insufficient adverse use by the public and insufficient exercise of control by the county for the county to gain a public easement by prescription. Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996), distinguished in Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999).

Easement by Necessity Found Across Condominium Property: Big Sky Camper Village, Inc., filed a declaration that submitted Tract I-A to the Unit Ownership Act and allowed Big Sky

Camper Village, Inc., to expand the number of condominium units in its development within 10 years. Hidden Village, Inc. (HVI), the successor in interest of Big Sky Camper Village, sought to construct improvements on property adjacent to the Big Sky Hidden Village Condominium, but the owners' association, Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Association, brought an action to prevent development without its permission, claiming that the roads sought to be used by HVI were private property and could not be used without permission of the Association. Relying upon Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590 (1984), and Smith v. Moran, 215 M 31, 693 P2d 1246 (1985), the Supreme Court found that HVI had satisfied the two prerequisites of necessity and unity of title for creation of an easement by implication in that the roads were necessary for it to develop the property and all of the lands were originally owned by HVI's predecessor. Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Hidden Village, Inc., 276 M 268, 915 P2d 845, 53 St. Rep. 379 (1996), followed in Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135, 55 St. Rep. 1230 (1998).

No Easement Granted or Reserved When Easement Not Shown on Certificate of Survey or Other Document — "Subject to" Language Not Creating Easement: In 1977, Henslers conveyed property to Reely and Ashmore to the south of a section line, retaining property to the north of the section line. In the same year, Reely and Ashmore conveyed the property to Hidden Valley Ranches (HVR). Both 1977 conveyances included language noting that the conveyance was "subject to" an access easement, called North Hidden Valley Road, along an east/west section line. The conveyance to HVR also noted that it was "subject to" an easement shown in certificate of survey (COS) 1316, but the certificate showed no such easement. In 1978, HVR conveyed part of the property to Reely, noting that the sale was made "according to" an easement shown on COS 1503, which clearly showed a 60-foot-wide utility and access easement along the section boundary. None of these conveyances showed or described an easement in property north of the section line. In 1990, Henslers conveyed property to Ruana and Bielby north of the section line. Ruana and Bielby claimed an access easement, called Blue Sky Lane, extending at a right angle from North Hidden Valley Road to their property. Relying upon Wild River Adventures, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees, 248 M 397, 812 P2d 344 (1991), Bache v. Owens, 267 M 279, 883 P2d 817 (1994), and Halverson v. Turner, 268 M 168, 885 P2d 1285 (1994), the Supreme Court held that the "subject to" language in the 1977 Hensler and Reely-Ashmore conveyances did not create an easement and that because no easement was shown in COS 1316, the 1977 Reely-Ashmore conveyance was ineffective to grant or reserve an easement by reference to a COS as well. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the 1990 Hensler conveyance to Ruana and Bielby was ineffective to grant an easement along North Hidden Valley Road. Likewise, no easement was granted or reserved to Ruana and Bielby for the purposes of Blue Sky Lane because no document in their chain of title showed or described such a grant or reservation. Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247, 53 St. Rep. 216 (1996), followed in Blazer v. Wall, 2008 MT 145, 343 M 173, 183 P3d 84 (2008).

Easement by Grant Upheld on Basis of Stipulation and Circumstantial Evidence: Tanners and others purchased property on Flathead Lake. Tanners and the others obtained access to their property by driving on roads located on Daly's property to the north. When Daly erected a fence across the roads and blocked access to their property, Tanners and the others brought suit, alleging that they had purchased with their properties an easement by grant for the use of the roads. The Supreme Court held that inasmuch as Daly had stipulated to the admissibility of the chain of title documents without foundation testimony and had not objected to introduction of the exhibits at trial, Daly could not now refute the authenticity of the deeds of Tanners' predecessors by arguing that the deeds bore no signatures or notary seal. The Supreme Court also noted that Daly testified that she knew of the roads at the time that she purchased her property and could therefore not claim to be a bona fide purchaser without notice. The Supreme Court also held that even though there was no direct evidence that the present roads were the ones referred to in the 1932 deed, there was circumstantial evidence in the form of testimony from two elderly witnesses that the same roads existed in the mid-1930s and were well traveled at that time, and Daly's attorney had admitted in correspondence that road A existed in 1932. Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

Scoria Not Mineral With Respect to Mineral Reservation in Lease — Payments for Surface Damage From Removing Scoria Pass With Land: Farley argued that under a lease to Booth reserving mineral rights, Farley was entitled to receive the payments from Western Energy Company to compensate for surface damages incurred in removing scoria from the land. The Supreme Court held that scoria was used in road building, but it was not of a rare and exceptional quality that would make it a mineral with respect to the mineral reservation clause in a lease. Farley also argued that the payments for surface damage in removing the scoria were royalty payments and as such personal property that did not pass to Booth when Booth purchased the surface rights to the property. The Supreme Court held that regardless of whether a royalty interest is personal or real property was of no significance because the royalty was appurtenant to the land and passed to Booth upon purchase of the surface. Farley v. Booth Bros. Land & Livestock Co., 270 M 1, 890 P2d 377, 52 St. Rep. 46 (1995).

Presumption of Adverse Use Established Through Preliminary Requirements for Prescriptive Right: After a claimant has established the preliminary requirements for a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises. The burden then shifts to the owner of the land on which the prescriptive easement is claimed to establish permissive use or license. If an owner establishes that the use is permissive, no easement can be acquired. In the present case, no genuine issue of material fact existed with regard to defendant's open, notorious, continuous, uninterrupted, and exclusive use of a road access for the statutory period; thus, the presumption of adverse use was applicable. Plaintiff failed to raise material facts regarding whether the use was permissive, including questions of permission or license, control of access by use of a gate, and neighborly accommodation. Defendant was therefore entitled to summary judgment based on adverse use as a matter of law. Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724, 51 St. Rep. 1459 (1994), distinguishing Pub. Conveyance Referencing Certificate of Survey Creates Express Easement Running With Land: Dahlia Halverson recorded a certificate of survey (COS) showing a 30-foot easement for a road upon her property in favor of adjoining property. Later, she conveyed the property subject to the easement by quitclaim deed to Shirley Turner and included a land description and a reference to the previously recorded COS. Her successor in interest claimed that the Turner property was subject to the easement originally created in the COS. Relying upon Benson v. Pyfer, 240 M 175, 783 P2d 923 (1989), and Bache v. Owens, 267 M 279, 883 P2d 817, 51 St. Rep. 1001 (1994), the Supreme Court held that the reference in the quitclaim deed to the previously filed COS that noted the creation of the easement was sufficient to create in the Turner property an express easement running with the land that was not personal to Dahlia Halverson and was therefore available to her successor in interest. Halverson v. Turner, 268 M 168, 885 P2d 1285, 51 St. Rep. 1233 (1994), followed in Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247, 53 St. Rep. 216 (1996), and Pearson v. Prescriptive Easement Not Established by Unexplained Use: The lower court awarded the plaintiff a prescriptive easement based upon the unexplained use of the road by the plaintiff and the plaintiff's predecessors. The Supreme Court recognized that the lower court had based its decision on dicta found in certain earlier decisions but ruled that a prescriptive easement may be established only by proving open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use. Warnack v. Coneen Family Trust, 266 M 203, 879 P2d 715, 51 St. Rep. 739 (1994), overruling in part Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91 (1962), and followed in Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2007 MT 347, 340 M 294, 174 P3d 481 (2007).

Former Curative Statute Inapplicable When Road Not Laid Out by Public or Dedicated or Abandoned to Public: Former 32-103, R.C.M. (repealed 1965 but in effect when a private road was established) read: "All highways, roads, lanes, streets, alleys, courts, places and bridges laid out or erected by the public or now traveled or used by the public, or if laid out or erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public, or made such by the partition of real property, are public highways." The District Court inappropriately applied this curative statute in declaring that the road was converted from a public easement into a county road because the road was never laid out or erected by the public or dedicated or abandoned to the public or made such by partition, nor was there ever a public prescriptive easement established through public use. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 794 (1993).

Abandonment of Water Right by Nonuse Distinguished From Abandonment of Easement or Ditch Right: After hearing, the Water Court determined that three water rights held by appellants Pitsch had been abandoned because of nonuse over approximately 40 years. The Supreme Court held that the Water Court did not err in holding that the case was not governed by E.E. Eggebrecht, Inc. v. Waters, 217 M 291, 704 P2d 422 (1985), and that there was no conflict between Eggebrecht and 79 Ranch, Inc. v. Pitsch, 204 M 426, 666 P2d 215 (1983). Eggebrecht concerns the abandonment of easements by grant, more analogous to a ditch right by grant than a water right, while 79 Ranch concerns abandonment of a water right. There is no reason why Montana law on abandonment of those interests should be identical. In re Adjudication of Musselshell River Rights, 255 M 43, 840 P2d 577, 49 St. Rep. 866 (1992).

No Implied Warranty of Habitability or Use Found: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of implied warranties in failing to originally construct and later repair construction defects in fireplaces in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky, Montana, in accordance with applicable fire and building codes. The plaintiffs based their claim of implied warranty on case law that found an implied warranty of habitability and on cases that held that subdivision plats create an implied covenant between developers and subsequent purchasers to use space in the manner designated in the plat. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, dismissing Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly found that no implied warranties existed. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990).

Railway Deed — Fee Simple Title, Not Right-of-Way Easement: Defendants obtained a deed to abandoned property from the railway company when it filed for bankruptcy. Adjoining landowners now claim that the railroad held the land as an easement for railroad purposes and that the abandonment of the lands resulted in a reversion to them. However, the granting and habendum clauses of the deeds by which the railroad claimed title clearly showed the intent that the railroad was to receive title in fee simple. The deeds were general form warranty deeds of the type used in the unrestricted transfer of real property in this state. Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285, 46 St. Rep. 1287 (1989).

Equitable Easement — No Basis for Finding: The plaintiff purchased lakefront property with knowledge that the defendants' summer cabin encroached on the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff sued to quiet title and have the defendants' cabin removed. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants and found that the defendants had an equitable easement to keep the building on the land. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that no formerly recognized common equitable theories for the creation of easements support the District Court's finding and that the development of a new doctrine of "relative hardship" is inappropriate on a motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for trial. Penland v. Derby, 220 M 257, 714 P2d 158, 43 St. Rep. 342 (1986).

Use of Plats to Induce Purchasers: In order to sell lots, a subdivider prepared and recorded subdivision plat maps that designated common areas and roadways. The purchase and sale contracts did not state who would construct roads or common areas. The issue of whether purchasers of lots have any legally enforceable right to have roads constructed depends not on their designation in the plats but on the subdivider's use of the plats in inducing purchasers. The instruments in question do not comprise a promise, express or implied, to construct roads. The purchasers did acquire an easement for the designated use. The case was remanded to determine factual issues relating to the use of the plats in inducing purchasers. Magers v. Shining Mtns., 219 M 366, 711 P2d 1375, 43 St. Rep. 16 (1986).

Intent — Necessary to Abandon Easement: Defendant had a reservoir right-of-way under 43 U.S.C. §§946 through 949. The reservoir site was used as a reservoir from 1910 until 1938, when the dam creating the reservoir washed out. Defendant rebuilt the dam in 1976, and the resulting reservoir flooded portions of plaintiff's field in times of heavy runoff. Plaintiff brought a quiet title action. The District Court found that the reservoir right-of-way had been abandoned. The Supreme Court found that the reservoir right-of-way was properly characterized as an easement. The rule in Montana is that in order to constitute an abandonment, an intent to abandon is necessary. The court held that mere nonuse of an easement by grant, no matter how long, does not constitute an abandonment. The question of whether 38 years of nonuse constituted forfeiture of the right-of-way could only be raised by the grantor, the United States. The District Court was reversed. Eggebrecht, Inc. v. Waters, 217 M 291, 704 P2d 422, 42 St. Rep. 1205 (1985).

Creation of Easement: An easement may be created by grant, reservation, exception, or covenant, by implication or by prescription. Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982, 42 St. Rep. 863 (1985), followed in Ducham v. Tuma, 265 M 436, 877 P2d 1002, 51 St. Rep. 595 (1994).

Easement Distinguished From License: Appellant's written grant to respondents of a right-of-way across appellant's land was an easement and not a license because she did not reserve to herself the right to terminate the grant while respondents resided on the property. Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982, 42 St. Rep. 863 (1985).

Prescriptive Easement — Use to Be Adverse: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement existed across defendants' land. The evidence presented established that several of the defendants' neighbors used the road across defendants' land but also testified that defendants had consented to the use. Evidence was also presented that there were gates across the road posted with "No Trespassing" signs. This kind of use is not adverse and does not create a public prescriptive easement. Madison County v. Elford, 203 M 293, 661 P2d 1266, 40 St. Rep. 457 (1983).

Custom and Gates — Prescriptive Easement Defeated: Plaintiff attempted to establish western access to his land by means of a prescriptive easement. The District Court found use of the route permissive, thereby defeating a prescriptive easement. Evidence was introduced to show it was customary in homesteading days to allow the neighbors access across another's land. Permission was automatic if the individual closed the gates and respected the property. Several gates were established and maintained across the access. The evidence of local custom coupled with the existence of gates clearly supported the trial court's conclusion that use of the western access was always permissive. Rathbun v. Robson, 203 M 319, 661 P2d 850, 40 St. Rep. 475 (1983), followed in Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Finding of Way of Necessity Properly Denied: Jenkins sold a parcel of land to the defendant's predecessor in interest. The land was surrounded by other property, including state and railroad lands, and there was no access to it. The plaintiffs subsequently purchased property immediately behind the defendant's land. The District Court did not err in finding that no way of necessity in favor of the plaintiffs existed across the defendants' land. In order for a way of necessity to exist, the way must: (1) have existed prior to or at the time of the severance of the sold land; and (2) run over land, granted or reserved by the same grantor, over which there was access to a public road. In this case a third party, the state of Montana, owns land over which the way is alleged to run and, additionally, there was no access to or from a public road at the time of the conveyance. The prerequisites for a way of necessity did not exist. Schmid v. McDowell, 199 M 233, 649 P2d 431, 39 St. Rep. 1313 (1982), followed in Rathbun v. Robson, 203 M 319, 661 P2d 850, 40 St. Rep. 475 (1983), Peters v. Johnson, 203 M 120, 661 P2d 24, 40 St. Rep. 336 (1983), Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Recognition of Implied Negative Easements Under Limited Circumstances Only: Appellant appealed from a permanent injunction restraining it from making commercial use of its property. A number of land transactions in the title chain preceded appellant's purchase of its parcel. The issue on appeal was whether or not the parcel was subject to a restriction against commercial use set forth in the 1948 deed. Because of the way various transactions in the chain of title were handled, any restriction on appellant's land would have to be an implied one. The reviewing court stated that equitable principles control the application of implied restrictions on land use. Additionally, recognition of any implied negative easements as to a particular lot was to be considered with extreme caution since such an action results in depriving a person of the use of his property by imposing a servitude through mere implication. An implied restriction on land use should be enforced only as an equitable servitude against a transferee who takes with knowledge of its terms and under circumstances that would make enforcement of the restriction equitable. In this case, there was no evidence that the appellant or its predecessor was ever informed in a deed, contract, or brochure or by representations of the seller that the lots were subject to a restriction against commercial use. No evidence was presented that the restriction was ever placed on the original subdivision. The reviewing court refused to find an implied use restriction and lifted the injunction. Goeres v. Lindey's, Inc., 190 M 172, 619 P2d 1194, 37 St. Rep. 1846 (1980), followed in Flaig v. Gramm, 1999 MT 181, 295 M 297, 983 P2d 396, 56 St. Rep. 710 (1999), and Pennington v. Flaherty, 2013 MT 160, 370 Mont. 388, 303 P.3d 274.

Establishment of Prescriptive Easement by the Public — Road Across Private Land: Plaintiffs owned land through which a road ran. The public used that road in a continuous and uninterrupted way for over 25 years without objection by the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs sought unsuccessfully to close the road to public use. The plaintiffs' assertion of error in this case concerned only the last element for establishing a prescriptive easement, the exercise of control adverse to the owner. Adverse control is presumed when all other elements have been proved.

The undisputed facts supported rather than rebutted this presumption. For example, most members of the public never asked for permission to use the road, and the county graded and maintained the road and laid gravel on the road without the plaintiffs' permission. McClurg v. Flathead County Comm'rs, 188 M 20, 610 P2d 1153 (1980), distinguished in Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996), and followed in Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999).

Elements Required to Prove Prescriptive Easement: To establish a prescriptive easement, the owner of the purported dominant tenement must establish open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and unmolested use of the servient tenement for the full statutory period of 5 years required to acquire title by adverse possession. Garrett v. Jackson 183 M 505, 600 P2d 1177 (1979), followed in Stamm v. Kehrer, 222 M 167, 720 P2d 1194, 43 St. Rep. 1143 (1986).

GENERAL

Easement by Reservation — Creation by Reference — Location Description on Plat Sufficient to Establish Burden Imposed by Easement With Reasonable Certainty: The Supreme Court held that an easement by reservation was created when the deed conveying title referred to the plat on file with the County Clerk and Recorder. While the plat did not provide a metes-and-bounds description of the easement's location, the court determined that the plat identified the dominant and servient tenements, the intended use or necessity for the easement, and a description of the easement's location sufficient to establish with reasonable certainty the course of the easement across the property. Yorlum Properties, Ltd. v. Lincoln County, 2013 MT 298, 372 Mont. 159, 311 P.3d 748.

No Express Easement to Use Adjoining Property — Insufficient Description in Restrictive Covenants: Several homeowners on Big Sky Lake near Missoula alleged the existence of an express easement for unrestricted use of four roads or trails on property owned by the defendants. The homeowners relied primarily on restrictive covenants as the source of the easement, but the covenants granted only an easement for ingress and egress and use of a perimeter road around the lake. The District Court found no evidence that the homeowners had an easement for unobstructed use of roads on the defendants' property, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Thayer v. Hollinger, 2013 MT 52, 369 Mont. 181, 296 P.3d 1183.

Express Easement Allowed When Dominant Tenement Not Contiguous to Servient Tenement: An express easement may be appurtenant to noncontiguous property if both tenements are clearly defined and it was the parties' intent that the easement be appurtenant. Davis v. Hall, 2012 MT 125, 365 Mont. 216, 280 P.3d 261.

Implied Easement by Necessity — Negated by Eminent Domain Power: In the context of federal checkerboard land grants to railroads, the claimant of an implied easement by necessity traced common ownership of the dominant and servient parcels to the federal government, and the necessity for the easement arose when the parcels were severed from the federal government's common ownership, thus satisfying the unity of ownership requirement. However, the easement failed because the United States' power of eminent domain negated the "strict necessity" requirement, and the claimant failed to produce evidence regarding the government's intent to reserve an easement and its inability to condemn an easement. Yellowstone River, LLC v. Meriwether Land Fund I, LLC, 2011 MT 263, 362 Mont. 273, 264 P.3d 1065.

No Improper Reliance on Extrinsic Evidence in Finding of Valid and Enforceable Express 60-Foot Easement for Subdivision: Defendant acquired certain property after an express easement across the property was created by the former owner. Defendant refused to allow the building of an access road across the property, contending that the easement agreement was invalid on several grounds. The District Court examined the agreement and concluded that the easement was valid and enforceable and granted summary judgment for plaintiffs. On appeal, defendant asserted that the District Court erroneously relied on facts outside the agreement, making summary judgment inappropriate, but the Supreme Court affirmed. For purposes of interpreting a writing granting an interest in real property, evidence of the surrounding circumstances, including the situation of the property and the context of the parties' agreement, may be shown so that the judge is placed in the position of those whose language the judge is to interpret. However, to comply with the statute of frauds and the recording system, the writing itself must ultimately stand on its own and meet the formal requirements for granting a property interest. In this case, the District Court was allowed to consider various facts not contained in the easement agreement for purposes of understanding the situation, but the court's analysis of the easement's validity apparently was limited to the face of the agreement, so the court did not erroneously rely on extrinsic facts. The easement agreement satisfied the formal requirements for expressly granting an easement and created a valid 60-foot emergency public access and utility easement that was enforceable against defendant. Additionally, the District Court properly concluded that because there was no dominant tenement, the easement was in gross and could be used by members of the public to travel between the subdivision and the public highway for emergency purposes and to provide utility services. There being no questions of material fact, summary judgment was proper. Broadwater Dev., LLC v. Nelson, 2009 MT 317, 352 M 401, 219 P3d 492 (2009), distinguishing Blazer v. Wall, 2008 MT 145, 343 M 173, 183 P3d 84 (2008). See also Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982 (1985).

Finding of Gap Between Easements Not Clearly Erroneous — Remediation and Injunctive Relief Proper: In attempting to exercise an easement to some trust property, defendants breached plaintiffs' fence line and plowed about 70 to 80 feet of new road across plaintiffs' property to connect a 1950 road on the trust property to defendants' newly relocated easement. Plaintiffs sued, contending that there was a mismatch between the terminus of the 1950 road and defendants' newly surveyed and relocated easement. Faced with conflicting testimony from two professional surveyors, the District Court Judge conducted an on-the-ground inspection of the property, concluding that in the process of relocating the original easement running along defendants' property line, defendants created a gap of 70 to 80 feet between the old road and the new road and breached the gap by crossing plaintiffs' property. Defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court found no clear error in the District Court's findings and affirmed. The District Court was at liberty to give the expert testimony whatever weight that the court considered to be justified. Substantial credible evidence supported the finding that a large gap existed and that defendants connected the roadways by plowing across plaintiffs' land without regard to plaintiffs' property rights. The Supreme Court also affirmed the District Court's grant of plaintiffs' request to enjoin defendants from using the connecting road, its order to defendants to reinstall plaintiffs' fence line and gates and to resurface and restore plaintiffs' property, and its holding of defendants in contempt for failing to obey the mandates of the preliminary injunction. Koeppen v. Bolich, 2003 MT 313, 318 M 240, 79 P3d 1100 (2003).

Easement by Reservation — Showing of Intent to Create Easement in Favor of Stranger to Deed Required: The Loomises contended that an easement by reservation to their property was created by two clauses within an original contract for deed when the Kolbs sold some adjoining property to the Luraskis. The language in the contract for deed purported to reserve a right-of-way and easement over and across the west 30 feet of the Luraski property for the purpose of establishing a public road and an easement for utilities. The District Court concluded that the disputed easement was outside the Loomises' chain of title, making them strangers to the deed, because the express reservation was from the Kolbs to the Luraskis and the Loomises were not parties. The Supreme Court agreed. An easement by reservation in favor of a stranger to a deed can be created only by clearly showing the grantor's intent to do so. In this case, testimony and evidence established that the Kolbs intended to preserve the option for means of access to other property only in the event that property was purchased, but the optional property was never purchased and the road was never constructed. The Supreme Court also disagreed with the Loomises' contention that no one should be considered a stranger to the deed because the reservation was for a public road. No rights are granted to the public prior to a road's actual creation and dedication. The court found it unlikely that a prudent landowner would reserve an easement for the benefit of the public at large, and the burden was on the Loomises, as strangers to the deed, to show the Kolbs' intent to reserve an easement for the Loomises' benefit. The fact that the Kolbs subsequently amended the original certificate of survey to eliminate the disputed easement was further proof that no easement reservation was created for the Loomises. Subsequent acts of the parties that tend to show the construction that they themselves placed upon the writing are also important in determining intent if intent is not clearly expressed in the deed. No easement by reservation was created in favor of the Loomises as a matter of law, and the District Court did not err in so holding. Loomis v. Luraski, 2001 MT 223, 306 M 478, 36 P3d 862 (2001).

No Easement by Necessity Absent Showing of Lack of Practical Access to Public Road: The Loomises contended that evidence at trial was sufficient to support a finding of an easement by necessity over a disputed easement on the Luraskis' property. Easement by necessity arises only in very special circumstances—when an owner of land conveys a parcel that has no outlet to a highway except over the remaining lands of the grantor or over the lands of strangers. The District Court found that the Loomises failed to establish an easement by necessity because they had access to their property by means other than a disputed easement and because they failed to prove strict necessity. Strict necessity, together with unity of ownership, is one of two elements of an easement by necessity and is defined by a lack of practical access to a public road for ingress and egress. The Loomises' own expert testified that a road could be constructed at a cost of up to $12,000 on the Loomises' undisputed 60-foot legal easement, which ran to the property up a steep hill and could be connected to a public road. The Supreme Court affirmed. There was no evidence that the cost of constructing the road was disproportionate to the value of the land itself. Failure to prove strict necessity negated a conclusion that an easement by necessity existed. Loomis v. Luraski, 2001 MT 223, 306 M 478, 36 P3d 862 (2001), following Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590 (1984).

Determination That Servient Estate Burdened by Expansion of Easement Based on Credible Evidence — Correct Case Law Properly Applied: Hardy contended that the District Court had insufficient evidence to define the scope of Hardy's easement and to find that Hardy burdened the servient estate by trying to improve an access road for subdivision purposes and that the court failed to apply the correct case law in making its determination. The Supreme Court disagreed on both issues. The District Court had substantial credible evidence upon which to find that Hardy changed the use of the access road to the detriment of the servient owners, who were burdened by Hardy's unreasonable and vexatious use of the easement to the extent that some equitable remedy was required to preserve their right of use and enjoyment and to maintain the status quo. Circumstances dictated that the District Court tailor a precise and restrictive remedy, and the court did so. Further, in arriving at its conclusion, the court properly applied the correct case law in looking beyond the plain language of the unrestricted easement to define the scope and breadth of the servitude. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in enjoining Hardy from any activity other than using the easement for temporary secondary access in the event that his primary access became impaired, based on the conclusion that Hardy was incapable of responsibly exercising his nonpossessory rights associated with repairing and maintaining the easement burdening plaintiffs' property. However, to avoid a potential issue for future dispute, the Supreme Court did remand for a clarification of the injunction for the limited purpose of determining responsibility for the maintenance and repair on the entire easement road. Guthrie v. Hardy, 2001 MT 122, 305 M 367, 28 P3d 467 (2001). See also Laden v. Atkeson, 112 M 302, 116 P2d 881 (1941), and Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751 (1996).

Obstruction of Easement Properly Enjoined: Burleson filed an action to enjoin defendant from refusing access to an easement across defendant's property, and the District Court granted summary judgment to Burleson, permanently enjoining defendant from obstructing the easement. Defendant appealed, making various overlapping arguments attacking the creation of the easement, contending that the easement did not pass to subsequent purchasers, that the easement was somehow extinguished, and that defendant was not provided notice of the easement. The Supreme Court addressed each argument, noting that an easement is a nonpossessory interest in land creating a right of one person to use the land of another for a specific purpose or a servitude imposed as a burden upon the land and that an easement cannot be created, granted, or transferred except by operation of law, by an instrument in writing, or by prescription. In this case, an easement by reservation was created by the original documents and attached to the property when the dominant tenement was partitioned or subdivided. Summer access roads were clearly defined rights-of-way constituting easements that were attached to the remaining parcels in the subdivision and passed to subsequent purchasers, such as Burleson. Defendant's argument regarding lack of notice failed because each purchaser of land in the subdivision was notified of the easement through specific language in the contracts, deeds, and title insurance and defendant had actual notice of the easement when inspecting the property prior to purchase. The documents were sufficiently clear to indicate that the summer access roads, despite their designation, were intended to be available to subdivision owners for full-time access to their property. Defendant also presented no evidence to satisfy the necessary elements of extinguishment or abandonment. The owner of the servitude and the servient tenement were not the same person; there was no unity of ownership; the servient tenement was not destroyed; there was no evidence that the owner of the servitude performed or assented to an act that was incompatible with the nature of the easement; and the necessary elements of extinguishment through adverse possession were neither alleged nor satisfied. On the basis of the record, the District Court was affirmed. Burleson v. Kinsey-Cartwright, 2000 MT 278, 302 M 141, 13 P3d 384, 57 St. Rep. 1162 (2000), distinguished in Roland v. Davis, 2013 MT 148, 370 Mont. 327, 302 P.3d 91.

Bridle Path Easement — Express Easement by Reservation Versus Implied Easement — Extrinsic Evidence Regarding Parties' Intent Inadmissible: Purchasers in a subdivision had language in their deeds creating an express easement for a bridle path in the subdivision. The bridle path was never built, and over the years, the easement was obstructed by improvements on the lots of several subdivision residents. Eventually, the subdivision association attempted to extinguish the easement at a meeting of the board of directors. Some residents asked the District Court to establish the validity of the easement and to restrain obstruction of the easement, and their request was granted by partial summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted the difference between an implied easement, which is a creature of equity dependent on the intent of the parties, and an express easement by reservation, which is a creature of the documents of conveyance and the record. An express easement by reservation arises when the purchaser's deed refers to the plat where the easement is clearly depicted and labeled. In this case, the intent of the parties to create a bridle path easement was manifested through the language in the deeds and the plat, so under 28-2-905, extrinsic evidence regarding the intent of the parties was inadmissible. Further, the subdivision association was given oversight of the easement, but not ownership of it, and so lacked authority to extinguish the easement. The lower court's finding that a valid bridle path easement existed was affirmed. Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000), following Missoula v. Mix, 123 M 365, 214 P2d 212 (1950), Bache v. Owens, 267 M 279, 883 P2d 817 (1994), Halverson v. Turner, 268 M 168, 885 P2d 1285 (1994), and Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Parker, 282 M 387, 938 P2d 641, 54 St. Rep. 399 (1997), and distinguishing White v. Landerdahl, 191 M 554, 625 P2d 1145, 38 St. Rep. 412 (1981).

Easement by Reservation — Written Documents — All Easements Considered Conveyed: An easement by reservation must arise from the written documents of conveyance. Deeds that reference plats are considered to convey all easements that are established by the recording of the plat. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Parker, 282 M 387, 938 P2d 641, 54 St. Rep. 399 (1997), following Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247 (1996), and followed in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000). See also Yorlum Properties, Ltd. v. Lincoln County, 2013 MT 298, 372 Mont. 159, 311 P.3d 748.

Easement of Necessity — Strict Definition: Necessity must be strictly defined by the lack of means of ingress and egress. When at the time of severing unity of title of two parcels of land there was access across open prairie to the remainder, then no easement of necessity ever existed with respect to the road access through the severed parcel. Wagner v. Olenik, 234 M 135, 761 P2d 822, 45 St. Rep. 1790 (1988). See also Kelly v. Burlington N. RR Co., 279 M 238, 927 P2d 4, 53 St. Rep. 1132 (1996), in which an easement was granted on the basis that easement of necessity existed at the time that unity of ownership was severed.

Limited Commercial Use Restriction on Parking Lot: The Supreme Court determined that there was a commercial use restriction on a Bridger Bowl ski area parking lot. Appellants argued that the restriction acted to prohibit use of the parking lot by customers who bought beer and wine on other Bridger Bowl lands. The court noted that the primary purpose of the parking lot was to provide parking for skiers using the ski hill, that the land was conveyed to respondents for that purpose, and that the parking lot was not being used primarily by commercial business patrons. The court refused to construe the fact that skiers using the lot might incidentally buy beer or wine in ski area chalets as violative of the commercial use restriction on the parking lot. Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

Merger of Prior Agreement Into Deed — No Presumption of Surrender of Covenants: Appellants contended that since there was no express language in deeds recorded in 1972 that the parties intended to merge the restrictive provisions of a 1971 agreement into the deeds, the commercial use restrictions in the 1971 agreement still applied, regardless of being left out of the deeds. The Supreme Court, recalling its decision in Story v. Montforton, 112 M 24, 113 P2d 507 (1941), noted that "whether or not there has been a merger depends on the intention of the parties". The court applied this principle in Thisted v. Country Club Tower Corp., 146 M 87, 405 P2d 432 (1965), quoting Reid v. Sykes, 27 Ohio St. 285: ". . . evidence of that intention may exist in or out of the deed. There is no presumption that a party, in giving or accepting a deed, intends to give up the covenants of which the deed is not a performance or satisfaction." In the present case, the court found strong evidence that the deeds contained all of the restrictions on the lands that were intended by the parties and that the contract had merged in the deeds. Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

Creation of Easement: An easement may be created by grant, reservation, exception, or covenant, by implication or by prescription. Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982, 42 St. Rep. 863 (1985), followed in Ducham v. Tuma, 265 M 436, 877 P2d 1002, 51 St. Rep. 595 (1994).

Easement Distinguished From License: Appellant's written grant to respondents of a right-of-way across appellant's land was an easement and not a license because she did not reserve to herself the right to terminate the grant while respondents resided on the property. Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982, 42 St. Rep. 863 (1985).

Distinction Between Servitudes and Easements: While a servitude may by definition be an easement, not all servitudes are easements since not all servitudes are attached to the land as appurtenances. Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136, 40 St. Rep. 1005 (1983).

No Interest Acquired in Property by Possessory Use Without Payment of Taxes: In 1978, Burlingames acquired a parcel of land adjoining Marjerrisons' land. A survey of Burlingames' property indicated that Marjerrisons' fence enclosed 5 acres of Burlingames' property. Since 1935, Marjerrisons had used the 5-acre parcel, along with their property, for cattle grazing, agriculture, and timber harvesting. Burlingames filed an action to quiet title. The District Court ruled that Burlingames possessed title to the 5-acre parcel but that Marjerrisons had acquired prescriptive easements for grazing, agricultural, and timber harvesting purposes. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, stating that since an easement is a nonpossessory interest and Marjerrisons had complete possession of the parcel for the statutory period, the only interest they could have acquired was full title. Treating Marjerrisons' claim as one for adverse possession, the court then ruled that although their use was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for a 5-year period, they had not paid property taxes on the disputed parcel as required by 70-19-411, and thus have acquired no interest in the property. Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136, 40 St. Rep. 1005 (1983).

Implied Easements — When Found — Effect of Contract: The plaintiffs sold a parcel of land to the defendants after a series of negotiations. No easement was specified through that parcel to the plaintiffs' adjoining parcel, and no other access existed to that second parcel. The Supreme Court found no implied easement, noting that the trial court would have been rewriting the contract had it found an implied easement. The trial court cited eight offers and counteroffers regarding an easement in this land sale and noted that there was a final decision between the parties that there would be no easement across the defendants' land. A court may not create as a matter of law an implied easement when the facts indicate the parties did not intend that an easement be created. Implied easements rest upon the intent of the parties gathered from the evidence. The record contained insufficient evidence to support an implied easement but contained substantial evidence to support the trial court's findings, conclusions, and judgment. White v. Landerdahl, 191 M 554, 625 P2d 1145, 38 St. Rep. 412 (1981), distinguished in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000), with regard to the applicability of an implied easement, which is a creature of equity dependent on the intent of the parties, versus an expressed easement by reservation, which is a creature of the documents of conveyance and the record.

Roadway — An Interest in Real Property: The District Court did not err in granting the remedy of specific performance under 27-1-411 for breach of an agreement to establish a roadway in a specified route because the right to a roadway granted in a written instrument is an interest in real property under 70-17-101, and money damages under 27-1-419 are presumed to be an inadequate remedy for breach of an agreement to transfer real property. Silva v. McGuinness, 189 M 252, 615 P2d 879 (1980).

Purported Conveyance of Easement — Waiver: When a buy-sell agreement indicated that the transfer of property included an easement to use a swimming pool located on an adjacent lot and appellant was made aware of a possible defect in the easement prior to the closing of the transaction, the appellant waived any defect in title when he subsequently closed the transaction and was precluded from recovering from the former owner and the real estate broker on a contract or fraud theory. Van Ettinger v. Pappin, 180 M 1, 588 P2d 988 (1978).

Suit Over Alleged Defect in Easement — Indispensable Parties: When appellants sued the party from whom they had purchased land and his real estate broker on the grounds of breach of contract and fraud for an alleged defect in an easement allowing appellants the use of a swimming pool located on adjacent land, appellants should have first litigated the existence of the easement and joined the owners of the purported servient estate, who were indispensable parties. Van Ettinger v. Pappin, 180 M 1, 588 P2d 988 (1978).

Public Easement: A general clause in a deed stating that the grant is subject to easement for roads and ditches as now established and located upon or across premises does not reserve an easement to the general public. Wilson v. Chestnut, 164 M 484, 525 P2d 24 (1974).

Secondary Easements: Landowners who acquired an easement by prescription for maintenance of waterline and diversion system on adjoining property had right, under doctrine of secondary easement, to fence the diversion works to protect it from livestock and pollution. O'Connor v. Brodie, 153 M 129, 454 P2d 920 (1969).

Ditch Right-of-Way:

In an action for a ditch easement, where defendant showed no actual right to the easement, the District Court erred in granting it merely because in doing so the damage done to plaintiff's property would be less than that done to the property of the defendant should the easement be denied. Colarchik v. Watkins, 144 M 17, 393 P2d 786 (1964).

A ditch right is an easement under subsection (11) of this section. Hughes v. King, 142 M 227, 383 P2d 816 (1963).

A right-of-way and the right to a ditch, canal, or other structure in which water is conveyed for irrigation or other lawful purposes are easements over the land occupied by the ditch, canal, etc. An "easement" is an appurtenance to land and constitutes an interest in real property. Mannix v. Powell County, 60 M 510, 199 P 914 (1921).

Restrictive Covenant in Deed — Easement Created: Restrictive covenant forbidding sale of liquor on premises conveyed created a negative easement under this section, appurtenant to other lands of grantor as the dominant tenement. This easement was not destroyed by tax sale and issuance of tax deed conveying the servient tenement, and the grantor could enforce the easement by obtaining an injunction against sale of liquor on the servient premises. NW. Improvement Co. v. Lowry, 104 M 289, 66 P2d 792, 110 ALR 605 (1937).

Timber Right-of-Way: An easement for a right-of-way for cutting and hauling timber is realty. R. M. Cobban Realty Co. v. Donlan, 51 M 58, 149 P 484 (1915).

Appurtenance as Easement: An appurtenance to land is in any and every case an easement. Smith v. Denniff, 24 M 20, 60 P 398 (1900), distinguished in Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

PRESCRIPTIVE EASEMENT

Use of Public Road Created by Prescriptive Use Extends to All Reasonably Foreseeable Uses: Once a public road is established by prescriptive use, the use of that road is not limited to the adverse usage through which the road was acquired, but rather extends to all reasonably foreseeable uses, including foot travel. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Width of Public Right-of-Way Established by Prescription — Portion of Right-of-Way Necessary to Maintain County Road for Public Use — Not Reserved to County: Plaintiff association sued the county because property owners had erected fences along the county road to the ends of a bridge, thereby preventing the public from using the right-of-way access to the river. The parties stipulated that the right-of-way for this portion of the road had been established by prescriptive use. The plaintiff argued that the public's right-of-way extended not only to the road, but to portions along the road necessary to maintain it. The District Court disagreed and ruled that only the county had an easement that exceeded the fences for the purpose of maintaining and repairing the road. The plaintiff appealed and the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the width of a public road right-of-way established by prescriptive easement includes the areas necessary to support and maintain the road and that those areas are not reserved for the county. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the matter to the District Court to determine the actual width of the right-of-way in accordance with its guidelines. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Permission to Use Dock Granted by Prior Owner — Whether Permission Carries Over to Subsequent Owners to Be Evaluated on Case-by-Case Basis — No Prescriptive Easement: In urging the Supreme Court to find that they had established an easement by prescription to a dock owned by the plaintiff, the defendants urged the court to follow the rule outlined in Han Farms, Inc. v. Molitor, 2003 MT 153, 316 Mont. 249, 70 P.3d 1238, which declared that one owner's grant of permission does not continue by default to the next owner. After reviewing significant case law regarding the transferability of permission for use, the court declined to adopt the defendants' argument and overruled the proposition in Han Farms that permission can never carry over from one owner to another after the sale of the servient property. Rather, the court reiterated that based on a thorough reading of its permissive use cases, the court will always consider the nature of the initial permission and attendant circumstances to analyze whether permission exists. Pedersen v. Ziehl, 2013 MT 306, 372 Mont. 223, 311 P.3d 765.

Mere Denial of Public Nature of Road Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Public Prescriptive Easement Affirmed: The District Court found that the elements of a prescriptive easement over a road on defendants' property were satisfied and granted summary judgment to plaintiff county. Defendants contended that disputed issues of fact existed regarding proof of a prescriptive easement, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The county proved that use of the road was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for the statutorily required period. The only evidence in support of defendants' position was a conclusory hearsay statement claiming that the previous owners had indicated that the road was not public. Defendants' mere denial of the public nature of the road was insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to withstand summary judgment. Powell County v. 5 Rockin' MS Angus Ranch, Inc., 2004 MT 337, 324 M 204, 102 P3d 1210 (2004), following Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002).

Incorrect Finding of Prescriptive Easement for Road and Residence — Moving of Residence Not Required: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement had been established for a road that strayed into an adjoining parcel and for a residence, the corner of which also extended into the adjoining parcel. The Supreme Court found the record full of contradictory assertions and findings, but noted that because the actual location of the road was concealed from the owner by way of maps and misrepresentations as to its true location, the record did not come close to establishing the elements of hostility or open and notorious use by clear and convincing evidence to establish a prescriptive easement for the road. Further, the owner of the residence conceded that the corner of the foundation and eaves encroached onto the adjoining parcel. Never having paid taxes on the land in question, the owner could not prevail on a claim of adverse possession to obtain title to the ground under the encroachment, so a finding of a prescriptive easement for the residence was also in error. However, because the property owner indicated at trial and in appeal briefs that he was willing to work something out regarding the encroachment, the Supreme Court concluded that to require removal of the encroachment would be extreme and declined to order that the residence be moved from its foundation. Gelderloos v. Duke, 2004 MT 94, 321 M 1, 88 P3d 814 (2004).

Failure to Prove Unity of Ownership — No Implied Easement by Necessity: As a general rule, creation of an implied easement by necessity requires that the easement be granted over the grantor's land and never over the land of a third party or a stranger to the title. Here, the easement claimed by plaintiffs ran across property not owned by plaintiffs' grantor at the time of the grant, so plaintiffs were unable to prove unity of ownership necessary to establish an implied easement by necessity. Kullick v. Skyline Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2003 MT 137, 316 M 146, 69 P3d 225 (2003), following Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590 (1984), and followed in Yellowstone River, LLC v. Meriwether Land Fund I, LLC, 2011 MT 263, 362 Mont. 273, 264 P.3d 1065. See also Hughes v. Hughes, 2013 MT 176, 370 Mont. 499, 305 P.3d 772, providing that a prescriptive easement existed.

Conflicting Evidence Regarding Prescriptive Easement for Ditch Maintenance — District Court Affirmed: Plaintiff alleged that defendant's access to plaintiff's property for ditch maintenance must be limited to the historic use of the ditch bank. The District Court was presented with conflicting evidence regarding how open defendant's use of plaintiff's property was and determined that plaintiff knew or should have known that defendant was accessing the ditch by various routes across plaintiff's property and that the access was not permissive. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that defendant had a prescriptive easement, and that finding was not disturbed on appeal. Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

Use of Private Road Permissive by Neighborly Accommodation — Public Prescriptive Easement Not Established: Plaintiffs sought an easement of record from defendants regarding the rural road crossing plaintiffs' property, but defendants refused. Plaintiffs then sought a declaratory judgment that the road was a public road established by prescriptive use, asserting that the road was a public thoroughfare established by common-law dedication as evidenced by a 1916 petition for the opening of a school and a 1948 petition to establish a road. The District Court found that the 1916 and 1948 petitions did not establish an offer evidencing an intention to dedicate the road to the public and that use of the road was instead permissive through neighborly accommodation. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. All elements of a prescriptive easement must be proved by clear and convincing evidence because one who has legal title should not be forced to give up what is rightfully theirs without the opportunity to know that the title is in jeopardy and to fight for it. Once a claimant establishes the elements of a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises, and the burden shifts to the landowner to establish that the use was permissive. If permissive use is shown, no easement can be acquired because the theory of prescriptive easement is based on adverse use. Use of a neighbor's land based upon mere neighborly accommodation or courtesy is not adverse and cannot ripen into a prescriptive easement. Rather, in addition to use, generally some circumstance or act tending to indicate that the use was not merely permissive is required. The presence of gates or other obstructions, to be opened and closed by parties passing over the land, has always been considered strong evidence in support of a mere license to the public to pass over the designated way. The facts here showed that use of the road was permissive and at the pleasure of the landowners, so no public prescriptive easement existed. Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002). See also Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650 (1999), and Pedersen v. Ziehl, 2013 MT 306, 372 Mont. 223, 311 P.3d 765.

Public Use for Statutory Period Coupled With Assumption of Adverse Control — Public Prescriptive Easement Established: An easement by prescription is created by operation of law through open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use for 5 years. Following the same criteria, applied to public prescriptive easements in Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990), the Supreme Court noted that to establish the existence of a public road by prescription, it must be shown that the public followed a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly for the prescribed statutory period, together with an assumption of control adverse to the owner. To be open and notorious, the use of a claimed right must give the landowner actual knowledge of the claimed right or be of such a character as to raise a presumption of notice. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right may not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. To be adverse, the use or assumption of control of a claimed right must be exercised under a claim of right and not as a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the landowner. Regular maintenance of a roadway by the party asserting a prescriptive easement is evidence of adverse rather than permissive use. Because a public prescriptive easement is "public", the element of exclusivity is not required in establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement. In the present case, the county presented sufficient evidence establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement on German Gulch Road, including a history of open public use and county maintenance of the road, an absence of evidence that the public ever abandoned use of the road, and the fact that plaintiff never erected gates, barriers, or signs on the road to create the impression of permissive use or established permissive use through neighborly accommodation. Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996).

Use of Property Through Neighborly Accommodation Not Adverse Use — Prescriptive Easement Precluded: A prescriptive easement is established by open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the easement for 5 years. If the property owner shows permissive use, no easement can be acquired because the theory of prescriptive easement is based on adverse use. In the present case, the property owners and their predecessors in interest exercised complete dominion and control over the road in question. The road was used to control not only livestock, but also to restrict access to the property and to protect the property from theft. Any use of the road was by express or implied permission of the landowners, according to a community understanding or local custom of accommodating neighbors' use of the road, a pattern of neighborly accommodation that persisted for years. Because use of the road was not adverse, it could not ripen into a prescriptive easement. Amerimont, Inc. v. Anderson, 278 M 495, 926 P2d 688, 53 St. Rep. 924 (1996). See also Amerimont, Inc. v. Gannett, 278 M 314, 924 P2d 1326, 53 St. Rep. 929 (1996), followed in Gelderloos v. Duke, 2004 MT 94, 321 M 1, 88 P3d 814 (2004).

Presumption of Adverse Use Under Claim of Right — No Evidence of Neighborly Accommodation: Tanners and others purchased property on Flathead Lake. Tanners and the others obtained access to their property by driving on roads located on Daly's property to the north. When Daly erected a fence across the roads and blocked access to their property, Tanners and the others brought suit, alleging that they had acquired an easement by prescription for the use of several of the roads. The Supreme Court held that Tanners had established a presumption of adverse use under a claim of right based upon the 1932 deed of their predecessors in interest. Because Daly claimed that Tanners' use of the roads was by her permission or neighborly accommodation, the Supreme Court held that Daly had the burden of proving permissive use. The Supreme Court referred to testimony in the record from which the jury could have found that no permission had been granted by Daly. Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

No Relocation of Prescriptive Easement by Consent of Parties: For nearly 100 years, access to Glenn's property was across the "old road" that crossed Grosfields' land. The parties agreed that Glenn and her neighbors had established a prescriptive easement by use of the "old road". After 1992, Glenn quit using part of the old road and began using a "new road" across another part of Grosfields' land. All of the property owners, including Grosfields, used the new road for approximately 2 years, until Grosfields placed barbed wire across it. Glenn brought an action to enjoin Grosfields from placing the fence across the new road. The Supreme Court held that the location of a prescriptive easement cannot be changed by mutual consent of the parties, tacit or otherwise, and that because Glenn did not otherwise satisfy the requirements for a prescriptive easement on the new road, the District Court erred in granting the injunction. The court overruled Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91(1962), to the extent that it suggested that a prescriptive easement can be relocated by verbal or tacit consent. Glenn v. Grosfield, 274 M 192, 906 P2d 201, 52 St. Rep. 1150 (1995), followed in Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996), and Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2007 MT 347, 340 M 294, 174 P3d 481 (2007).

Easement Created by Evidence of Other Than Recreational Use by Public: The defendant argued that the seasonal use by hunters and fishermen of a road was not sufficient to create a prescriptive easement. The Supreme Court agreed that recreational use alone was not enough but ruled that there was sufficient evidence of nonrecreational use to establish the easement. Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990), followed in Swandal Ranch Co. v. Hunt, 276 M 229, 915 P2d 840, 53 St. Rep. 361 (1996), and Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999).

Prescriptive Easement Not Established by Travel on Public Road: A defendant cannot establish a prescriptive easement by traveling on a public road, which is a road that all people have a right to use. The open and public nature of the road forestalls its use from being adverse or exclusive. Cummings v. Canton, 244 M 132, 796 P2d 574, 47 St. Rep. 1493 (1990).

Easement by Prescription Extinguished: Although a landowner's predecessors in interest may have obtained a prescriptive easement to use an irrigation ditch, the landowner's subsequent actions in apparent recognition that his use was permissive are incompatible with the nature of a prescriptive easement and have extinguished any easement by prescription. Robertson v. Hughes, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1041 (1983).

Permissive Use Not Basis for Easement by Prescription: When use of an easement begins as a permissive use, it cannot ripen into a prescriptive right no matter how long it continues, unless there is a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to the owner. Robertson v. Hughes, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1041 (1983).

Nonexclusive Prescriptive Easement by Nature of the Use: Under the settled principle in Montana that in acquiring a prescriptive easement, the right of the owner of the dominant estate is governed by the character and extent of the use during the period requisite to acquire it, Ferguson v. Standley, 89 M 489, 300 P 245 (1931), the nature of the right of the plaintiffs to a roadway cannot exceed the use which they made of it during the prescriptive period. Thus, where it is shown that other persons have participated in the use of the roadway, plaintiffs cannot establish a private or exclusive easement. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Prescriptive Easement Not Created When Original Use Was Permissive: The use of land not owned by plaintiff for a driveway since 1934 does not give rise to a prescriptive easement because the use at its inception was permissive, and although since 1957 the land was owned by another, there was no later distinct assertion of right hostile to the present owner. Justice Sheehy, dissenting: Distinguishing between "permissive use" relied on in the majority opinion, which defeats a prescriptive easement, and "acquiescence" of the original owner, which should be applied here making his land servient to a prescriptive right of plaintiff. Wiedman v. Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church, 188 M 10, 610 P2d 1149 (1980).

Use to Be Exclusive: Trial court properly held for defendant when plaintiff claimed a prescriptive easement to right-of-way because plaintiff shared use of claimed land with former neighboring tenants. Thus, use was not exclusive or adverse and hostile and did not create an easement by prescription or implication but only a permissive use. Ingels v. Mickalson, 170 M 1, 549 P2d 459 (1976).

Presence of Gates — Presumption of Permissive Use Created: Summary judgment for defendant was proper because plaintiff failed to establish an easement by prescription to a road crossed at several points by fences with closed gates owned and controlled by defendant. The presence of gates which must be opened by the user was strong evidence of permissive rather than adverse use since it tended to establish "total dominion" over the roadway by defendant. Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976).

Easement by Prescription: Landowners and their predecessors in interest acquired by prescription an easement for the diversion and conveyance of water validly appropriated from adjoining land where water system had been in existence prior to 1908, had been in continuous use since that time, and had been regularly repaired and maintained with knowledge of and without complaint by previous owners of the adjoining land. The easement encompassed both the waterline and the diversion system. Circumstances of adverse possession were sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry since a casual inspection of premises would have disclosed fenced inclosure with intake system and attached underground waterline. Failure of former owners of adjoining land to object to water system raised inference of acquiescence rather than license. O'Connor v. Brodie, 153 M 129, 454 P2d 920 (1969).

NEGATIVE EASEMENT

Properly Created Negative Easements Not Automatically Void: Appellants contended the District Court erred in concluding that the commercial use limitation on Bridger Bowl land was void as an unlawful restraint of trade. The Supreme Court agreed and reversed the District Court, finding that the conditions of the test outlined in O'Neil v. Ferraro, 182 M 214, 596 P2d 197 (1979), had been met. Additionally, the Supreme Court noted the statutory authority in 70-17-101 for allowing creation of covenants and easements governing the right to transact business on land and held that properly created negative easements are not automatically void under 28-2-703. Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

Negative Easement Not a Restraint of Trade: A written agreement in the form of a settlement agreement that creates a negative easement prohibiting the use of property as a restaurant and bar does not constitute a contract in restraint of trade. The agreement is not merely a personal contract between the parties which would fall within the scope of 28-2-703 prohibiting restraint of trade but rather creates a property interest which runs with the land. Reichert v. Weeden, 190 M 95, 618 P2d 1216, 37 St. Rep. 1788 (1980), followed in Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

Creation of a Negative Easement Notwithstanding Absence of a Conveyance: A written agreement in the form of a court settlement not to use property as a restaurant and bar creates a valid and enforceable covenant which runs with the land and which is binding on each of the parties and their successors in interest notwithstanding absence of a conveyance of the estate to which the covenant pertains or words to that effect in the settlement agreement. The agreement was expressly intended to constitute a covenant running with the land and to bind the present owners, heirs, and assigns and was entered into voluntarily. A negative easement, as was created here, can be created by a grant (conveyance) or agreement; the agreement being construed as a grant is binding upon purchasers of the servient tenement who have actual or constructive notice of it. Reichert v. Weeden, 190 M 95, 618 P2d 1216, 37 St. Rep. 1788 (1980).

MINERAL OR WATER RIGHT

Ditches Not Necessary for Exercise of Water Right — No Ownership Interest in Ditches: A dispute arose over whether plaintiff with water rights had an ownership interest in two ditches that crossed a neighbor's property. The District Court determined that no ownership interest existed, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that ditches are easements that attach to land and that a transfer of real property also transfers a ditch right in the same manner and to the same extent as at the time that the property was transferred, but also noted that a ditch right and a water right are separate and distinct property rights and that if a water right passes as an appurtenance, the means of conveying the water also passes. In order to determine whether the ditch right was appurtenant to the water right, the court examined necessity and beneficial use. In this case, the ditches in question were not necessary for plaintiff to exercise its water rights. Testimony indicated that no one had used the ditches to irrigate plaintiff's land and that plaintiff was able to exercise its water right through two other ditches, nor did plaintiff recognize a historical ownership interest in or beneficial use of the ditches in question. In addition, because the deeds were ambiguous with respect to which ditch rights were conveyed to each parcel, a search of the chain of title would not have revealed that plaintiff had an easement in the ditches. The District Court weighed the conflicting evidence and did not err in holding that plaintiff did not have an ownership interest in the ditches. The judgment was affirmed. Wills Cattle Co. v. Shaw, 2007 MT 191, 338 M 351, 167 P3d 397 (2007), following Lincoln v. Pieper, 245 M 12, 798 P2d 132 (1990), and Ponderosa Pines Ranch, Inc. v. Hevner, 2002 MT 184, 311 M 82, 53 P3d 381 (2002).

Life Span of Government-Funded Irrigation System Related to Cost-Sharing Involvement, Not Duration of Easement: Quinlan and Cox entered into a pooling agreement and a cost-sharing agreement with the federal government for installation of a permanent irrigation system across their adjoining properties. The agreement defined the life span of the irrigation system as 10 years. Cox eventually lost the property through foreclosure, and Espy purchased it, becoming the successor in interest. In 1997, Quinlan attempted to prohibit Espy's use of the irrigation system, so Espy sued for easement interference. Quinlan filed a permissive counterclaim, alleging that Espy had interfered with Quinlan's road easement over Espy's property. Following trial, the District Court concluded that Espy had a valid easement over Quinlan's property for use and maintenance of the irrigation system, that Quinlan had a valid road easement over Espy's property, and that both parties were entitled to a permanent order restraining the other party from interfering with their respective easements. Quinlan appealed, contending that because the pooling agreement created a contract for a 10-year duration based on the life span of the irrigation system, the District Court erred in holding that Espy had an easement for an indefinite duration. The Supreme Court affirmed. The 10-year life span of the system was related to the government's cost-sharing involvement only, not to a limitation on the duration of the easement. The duration of the easement was indefinite because with proper maintenance and repair, the irrigation system could last indefinitely. Espy v. Quinlan, 2000 MT 193, 300 M 441, 4 P3d 1212, 57 St. Rep. 764 (2000).

Conveyance of Water Right Includes Use of Water System: When use a of water conveyance system was necessary for the plaintiffs to exercise their water rights, it was incidental to the use of and part and parcel of the realty. The easement in the water system necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the property was appurtenant to the premises conveyed. Lincoln v. Pieper, 245 M 12, 798 P2d 132, 47 St. Rep. 1803 (1990), distinguished in Flaig v. Gramm, 1999 MT 181, 295 M 297, 983 P2d 396, 56 St. Rep. 710 (1999).

Mineral Reservation Right of Entry — Easement Only Does Not Include Property Interest in Minerals: A mineral reservation right of entry is an easement and conveys no interest in the underlying oil, gas, or minerals or in oil, gas, or minerals produced from the land. McDonald v. Unirex, Inc., 221 M 156, 718 P2d 316, 43 St. Rep. 709 (1986).

Sale of a Water Right With Implied Reservation of Another Water Right: Landowner owned two water rights on river and each had a related ditch right; one was called the "McNiven Right" and the other was called the "Grannis Right". He sold part of his land together with part of the McNiven Right and "related ditch rights". The Supreme Court held that the words "related ditch rights" in the deed's water right grant referred only to the McNiven ditch, and further held that since the landowner held two water rights and related ditch rights, the conveyance of the McNiven water and ditch right impliedly reserved to landowner the Grannis water right and related ditch right. Castillo v. Kunnemann, 197 M 190, 642 P2d 1019, 39 St. Rep. 460 (1982); reversing on rehearing, Castillo v. Kunnemann, 38 St. Rep. 1618 (1981) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Water Rights Made Appurtenant by Court Decree and Beneficial Use: Where a prior District Court water rights adjudication decree determined that there was an appropriation of 240 miners' inches on a river, appurtenant to the south half of a certain section of land, and the rancher who sold part of the half section to subdivider, who then sold a parcel to coplaintiff, testified that the 20-acre parcel purchased by coplaintiff had traditionally been irrigated by water from a ditch used to carry the appropriated water to the land, and the rancher's testimony was confirmed by the son of the rancher's predecessor in interest and by a hired hand, clearly, both by decree and by beneficial use, the water and ditch rights were appurtenant to the 20-acre parcel through which the ditch ran. Further, where the rancher testified that he had used the ditch and water to irrigate land south of the 20-acre parcel, coplaintiff had purchased from the subdivider a 9.114-acre parcel south of the 20-acre parcel, the ditch ran through the 9.114-acre parcel, and evidence supported a finding that both parcels would have been irrigated at the same time, the water and ditch rights were also appurtenant to the 9.114-acre parcel. Castillo v. Kunnemann, 38 St. Rep. 1618 (1981) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports), reversed on other grounds on rehearing, 197 M 190, 642 P2d 1019, 39 St. Rep. 460 (1982).

No Right of Hydroelectric Facility to Make Free Appropriation of Water on State-Owned Land: A hydroelectric facility does not have the right to make free appropriation of water on and within state-owned land without paying compensation to the state. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, distinguishing Smith v. Deniff, 24 Mont. 20, 60 P 398 (1900), U.S. v. Conrad Invest. Co., 156 F 123 (D.C. Mont. 1907), and Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2009 MT 286, 352 Mont. 212, 215 P.3d 675. See also Prentice v. McKay, 38 Mont. 114, 98 P 1081 (1909).

Following the Montana Supreme Court's decision, PPL appealed to the United States Supreme Court. The United States Supreme Court reversed the Montana court's ruling, holding that the Montana court had not properly considered the rivers in question on a segment-by-segment basis and had not determined whether they were navigable in fact at the time of statehood. The United States Supreme Court remanded the case for proceedings consistent with its opinion. PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana, 565 US __, 132 S Ct 1215, 182 L Ed 2d 77 (2012).

No Express Federal Reservation of Public Road Pursuant to Land Patent — Easement by Reference Reversed: The District Court held that the federal government expressly reserved a public road across patented mining claims by referring in an 1896 federal land patent to a mineral survey that depicted a road labeled "ROAD". Citing Leo Sheep Co. v. U.S., 440 US 668 (1979), the Supreme Court disagreed. Plaintiff cited no authority for the proposition that a reference in a federal land patent to a mineral survey that depicts a road labeled "ROAD" qualified as an express reservation under federal law. Rather, the inference prompted by the presence of certain other express reservations in the patent and the absence of an express reservation for a particular right-of-way was that no right-of-way was reserved. The intent to create an easement must be clearly and unmistakably communicated on the referenced plat or certificate of survey, using labeling or other express language, and an easement may not be inferred or implied from an unlabeled or inadequately described swath of land or other depiction appearing on a certificate of survey. Additionally, the Supreme Court has recognized the creation of privately held easements only by reference and has never applied the doctrine to create a public road, and the court declined to do so in this case. Nothing in the field notes or in the patent evidenced an intent by the federal government to reserve a public road across a patented mining claim, and the District Court erred in finding that the road traversing the mining claim was a public road pursuant to an express easement by reservation created in the mining survey and referenced in the conveying documents of the mining claim. The District Court was reversed. Our Lady of the Rockies, Inc. v. Peterson, 2008 MT 110, 342 M 393, 181 P3d 631 (2008).

Distinction Between Servitudes and Easements: While a servitude may by definition be an easement, not all servitudes are easements since not all servitudes are attached to the land as appurtenances. Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136, 40 St. Rep. 1005 (1983).

No Interest Acquired in Property by Possessory Use Without Payment of Taxes: In 1978, Burlingames acquired a parcel of land adjoining Marjerrisons' land. A survey of Burlingames' property indicated that Marjerrisons' fence enclosed 5 acres of Burlingames' property. Since 1935, Marjerrisons had used the 5-acre parcel, along with their property, for cattle grazing, agriculture, and timber harvesting. Burlingames filed an action to quiet title. The District Court ruled that Burlingames possessed title to the 5-acre parcel but that Marjerrisons had acquired prescriptive easements for grazing, agricultural, and timber harvesting purposes. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, stating that since an easement is a nonpossessory interest and Marjerrisons had complete possession of the parcel for the statutory period, the only interest they could have acquired was full title. Treating Marjerrisons' claim as one for adverse possession, the court then ruled that although their use was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for a 5-year period, they had not paid property taxes on the disputed parcel as required by 70-19-411, and thus have acquired no interest in the property. Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136, 40 St. Rep. 1005 (1983).

Alienation and Apportionment of Roadway Easement: In a warranty deed conveying land, the grantor expressly reserved a roadway easement and later conveyed the easement to various landowners. Because there was no language in the deed limiting the grantor's right to alienate or apportion the easement, such action was proper. Lindley v. Maggert, 198 M 197, 645 P2d 430, 39 St. Rep. 876 (1982).

Roadway Easement — No Increase in Burden: In a warranty deed conveying land to the defendant, the grantor expressly reserved a roadway easement and later conveyed the easement to the plaintiffs. The defendant could not claim, on the basis of speculation as to possible future uses, that the plaintiffs' use of the easement would increase the burden on the defendant's land beyond that contemplated when the easement was created. Lindley v. Maggert, 198 M 197, 645 P2d 430, 39 St. Rep. 876 (1982).

Creation of Prescriptive Easement: Testimony in this case shows the use of the road in dispute was originally permissive. To find a prescriptive easement, there must be a distinct and positive assertion of a right to use the road hostile to the owners by those claiming the easement. Claimants must also show the right was brought to the attention of the owners and continued use of the easement for the full statutory period. The record here shows occasional use of the road by hunters, hikers, and neighbors. This type of use is insufficient to raise a presumption of adverse use and does not represent the distinct and positive assertion of a hostile right brought home to the owner of the purportedly servient tenement necessary to transform the originally permissive use into adverse use. Medhus v. Dutter, 184 M 437, 603 P2d 669 (1979).

Water Rights: A water right, legally acquired, is in the nature of an easement in gross which, according to circumstances, may or may not be an easement annexed or attached to certain land as an appurtenance thereto. Smith v. Denniff, 24 M 20, 60 P 398 (1900), distinguished in Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

Case Notes

Prescriptive Easement Not Created When Original Use Was Permissive: The use of land not owned by plaintiff for a driveway since 1934 does not give rise to a prescriptive easement because the use at its inception was permissive, and although since 1957 the land was owned by another, there was no later distinct assertion of right hostile to the present owner. Justice Sheehy, dissenting: Distinguishing between "permissive use" relied on in the majority opinion, which defeats a prescriptive easement, and "acquiescence" of the original owner, which should be applied here making his land servient to a prescriptive right of plaintiff. Wiedman v. Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church, 188 M 10, 610 P2d 1149 (1980).

Intent of Grantor to Control Creation of Easement: Before the creation of an easement in a stranger to a conveyance will be recognized, the intent of the grantor to create the easement must clearly be shown. If it appears it is as likely the purpose of the clause in the deed was to protect the grantor's warranty of title as to reserve an easement, the court will not depart from the majority rule and find an easement. The testimony presented indicated that in executing the documents that passed equitable title to the property, the grantor did not intend to create an easement. There was no testimony that any of the grantors received less than full value for the land because of the existence of an easement. Finally, although the language of the deed does locate the easement, it fails to name a dominant tenement. Considering these factors together, as in Wilson v. Chestnut, 164 M 484, 525 P2d 24 (1974), it is as likely the grantors intended to protect their warranty of title as to reserve an easement. Thus, the deeds do not establish an easement of record. Medhus v. Dutter, 184 M 437, 603 P2d 669 (1979), followed in Kelly v. Wallace, 1998 MT 307, 292 M 129, 972 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1271 (1998).

Case Notes

Terms of Attempted Easement Too Vague to Enforce — Deed Insufficient to Constitute Easement by Reservation: The founders of plaintiff homeowners' association recorded a declaration of conditions in 1973 that set aside certain undescribed property for parking and that provided that the homeowners' association would be formed after 75% of subdivision lots were sold and if 75% of lot owners voted to form an association. The homeowners' association was finally formed about 33 years later, but the property set aside for parking was never used and was ultimately sold in 1992. When the association eventually required more room for parking, they sought to enforce the declaration, but access to the property was denied by the current owner. The association filed an action to quiet title, but the District Court granted summary judgment for the landowner, so the association appealed. The Supreme Court held that the 1973 declaration and the 1992 deed did not result in an enforceable easement allowing the association to use the property, noting that a grant of an easement may be subject to conditions precedent, but if the uncertain event upon which the obligation hinges does not take place, the obligation does not materialize. The association never used the property for parking, so an easement never materialized. An agreement that requires parties to agree to material terms in the future is not an enforceable agreement. The court also found that the scope and terms of the attempted easement were too vague to be specifically enforced, and the 1992 deed was insufficient to constitute an easement by reservation. Therefore, summary judgment for the landowner was proper and the District Court was affirmed. Holter Lakeshores Homeowners Ass'n, Inc v. Thurston, 2009 MT 146, 350 M 362, 207 P3d 334 (2009).

Use of Public Road Created by Prescriptive Use Extends to All Reasonably Foreseeable Uses: Once a public road is established by prescriptive use, the use of that road is not limited to the adverse usage through which the road was acquired, but rather extends to all reasonably foreseeable uses, including foot travel. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Easement by Reservation — Creation by Reference — Location Description on Plat Sufficient to Establish Burden Imposed by Easement With Reasonable Certainty: The Supreme Court held that an easement by reservation was created when the deed conveying title referred to the plat on file with the County Clerk and Recorder. While the plat did not provide a metes-and-bounds description of the easement's location, the court determined that the plat identified the dominant and servient tenements, the intended use or necessity for the easement, and a description of the easement's location sufficient to establish with reasonable certainty the course of the easement across the property. Yorlum Properties, Ltd. v. Lincoln County, 2013 MT 298, 372 Mont. 159, 311 P.3d 748.

Elements of Implied Easement by Necessity Established — Easement Properly Granted — Interference Claim Properly Dismissed: Plaintiffs sought an easement by necessity across defendants' property. The District Court held that an easement by necessity existed and defined the scope of the easement, and both parties appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. There was sufficient clear and convincing evidence of both unity of ownership and strict necessity to establish an easement by necessity. Additionally, nothing in the history or condition of the property at the time of severance supported a finding that the extent of the implied easement by necessity across the servient estate should be unlimited, so plaintiffs were entitled to cross defendants' land to reach a public road. However, plaintiffs' claim that defendants interfered with the easement failed. The essential acts that gave rise to the easement by necessity arose in the 1930s, but plaintiffs' right to the easement was not established until 2007, so defendants could not have wrongfully interfered with the easement. Ashby v. Maechling, 2010 MT 80, 356 Mont. 68, 229 P.3d 1210. See also Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 Mont. 56, 968

Genuine Issue of Material Fact Whether Dam Operation Damaged Lakeshore Properties — Summary Judgment Improper — Class Action Vacated: Flathead Lake landowners brought a class action suit against defendant operators of Kerr Dam for operating outside the scope of their easements in a manner that continuously eroded and damaged plaintiffs' lakeshore properties. The District Court rejected plaintiffs' argument that the dam operator was not allowed to affect plaintiffs' properties above an elevation of 2,893 feet, concluding instead that defendants' easements covered entire parcels. The court concluded that erosion, including wave action erosion, was within the scope of the easements and held that any duty defendants had to not cause unreasonable damage to plaintiffs' properties applied only to damage unrelated to use of the easement. Therefore, summary judgment was granted to defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court first agreed that the District Court's contour line theory was correct. The "2,893 feet" clause did not establish the vertical limit argued by plaintiffs because although the dam operators' right to flood, subirrigate, drain, or otherwise affect the shoreline was not unlimited, it was not restricted to a maximum elevation of 2,893 feet at each parcel, but rather extended to whatever part of each parcel was affected when the lake was held at 2,893 feet above mean sea level as measured at the dam. The court also agreed that the right to cause some erosion was necessary to the enjoyment of the right to perpetually flood, subirrigate, and drain and was thus included by implication in the easements. However, further factual development and trial were necessary to address the question of whether the erosion was reasonable, necessary, and within the scope of the easements, which could not be resolved by summary judgment. Additionally, the question of whether defendants breached their obligation to not cause unreasonable damage to the shoreline properties and to not unreasonably interfere with plaintiffs' enjoyment also required further factual development and possibly trial. Therefore, the order certifying the case as a class action was vacated and the case was remanded for further consideration. Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2009 MT 286, 352 M 212, 215 P3d 675 (2009).

On remand, the District Court decertified the class as to one defendant and denied the plaintiffs' motion for certification as to another defendant on the basis that the question of whether the erosion caused unreasonable damage to or unreasonably interfered with the plaintiffs' properties required an individual, property-by-property analysis that was improper for class certification. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that class certification to both defendants was proper because the reasonableness of the erosion presents a common question that is incapable of being resolved on a property-by-property basis since an aggregate of the benefits and burdens imposed on all of the shoreline properties must be considered together to determine reasonableness. Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2012 MT 318, 368 Mont. 1, 291 P.3d 1209.

Historical Use of Road Not Supportive of Residential Access — Recreational Access Creating Narrower Prescriptive Easement: A dispute arose regarding access to several Whitefish Lake lots. The District Court concluded that a prescriptive easement existed to two lots for year-round recreational and residential use. The Supreme Court noted the testimony of one witness that she had resided permanently at a cabin on one lot for 6 years. Therefore, the District Court did not err in concluding that a prescriptive easement existed to that lot for year-round residential and recreational use. However, the record demonstrated that two adjoining lots were historically used seasonally for recreational purposes, and then only as an extension of the use of the residential lot. Historical use of the road did not support access to the adjoining lots for residential purposes, but the recreational use in conjunction with the residential use provided a heightened notice of the use of the adjoining lots. The recreational use created a discrete historical use of the adjoining lots and established a narrower prescriptive easement, which would not increase the burden on the servient tenement. Therefore, the District Court erred in granting a prescriptive easement to the adjoining lots for residential use. Thus, the District Court was affirmed in finding a prescriptive easement for the residential lot but reversed in the grant of a prescriptive easement to the adjoining lots for residential use. Schmid v. Pastor, 2009 MT 280, 352 M 178, 216 P3d 192 (2009). See also Clark v. Heirs & Devisees of Dwyer, 2007 MT 237, 339 M 197, 170 P3d 927 (2007).

Deed Outside Chain of Title — No Easement Absent Notice That Property Servient to Access Stated in Deed: Nelson's deed for a subdivision lot stated that Nelson would have a roadway easement for access to another lot bordered by Flathead Lake. That lot was subsequently purchased by Barlow. Barlow's deed contained no reference to an easement or reference to Nelson's deed stating that Nelson had a roadway easement to access Barlow's lot. When Barlow began building a cabin on his lot, Nelson sued to enjoin construction, alleging that Nelson's deed entitled him to cross Barlow's lot to access Flathead Lake. The District Court granted Barlow's motion for judgment on the pleadings and dismissed Nelson's claim, so Nelson appealed. The Supreme Court first noted that the language in Nelson's deed was ambiguous and concluded that the District Court erred in holding otherwise. However, the District Court correctly noted that Barlow was not a party to Nelson's deed, and because no similar access provision existed in Barlow's deed, Barlow was not bound by Nelson's deed. Nelson's deed was outside Barlow's chain of title. Even though Nelson's deed was recorded several years prior to Barlow's purchase, that fact was insufficient to impose an easement on Barlow's lot. Barlow was not required to examine the chain of title to Nelson's land to discover an alleged easement across the Barlow property for the benefit of Nelson, and the purported grant of lake access in Nelson's deed did not put Barlow on notice that his property was servient to an easement. The District Court was affirmed. Nelson v. Barlow, 2008 MT 68, 342 M 93, 179 P3d 529 (2008), overruled in part in Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154. See also Rigney v. Swingley, 112 M 104, 113 P2d 344 (1941), and Goeres v. Lindey's, Inc., 190 M 172, 619 P2d 1194 (1980).

No Error in Granting Private Prescriptive Roadway Easement for Previously Established Subdivision: When declaring a private prescriptive roadway easement over defendants' property for plaintiffs' use, the District Court also provided that the easement could be used to provide access to tracts owned by plaintiffs that were subdivided in the 1960s but that had never contained residences. Defendants asserted error, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Once established, the owners of a prescriptive easement are limited to the use and frequency of use that were established during the prescriptive period. The property was subdivided prior to the time that the easement was established, which put all owners on notice that the road was intended to service residences. Because an easement attaches to the dominant tenant, the easement attached to each of the subdivision parcels. Even though plaintiffs testified that they had no plans to further subdivide the land, allowing subdivision access to the tracts did not expand the scope of the prescriptive easement beyond what was contemplated at the time of its creation, and the District Court did not err in determining the scope of the easement. Clark v. Heirs & Devisees of Dwyer, 2007 MT 237, 339 M 197, 170 P3d 927 (2007).

Easement Limited to Historical Size and Location of Grant: In 1949, plaintiffs' predecessor in interest granted an easement to defendant's predecessor in interest to allow the construction of radio towers on a portion of a 160-acre parcel, conditioned on location and maintenance of the property. Defendant subsequently notified plaintiffs that he intended to expand the radio facilities beyond the original construction site. Plaintiffs sued, asserting that the expansion would encompass property not included in the original grant, while defendant contended that the easement encompassed the entire 160 acres described in the grant, so the facilities could be expanded onto other portions of the parcel or relocated elsewhere within the parcel. The District Court found for plaintiffs, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under the rules of contract construction, the grant language clearly limited placement of the radio facilities on a portion of the 160-acre parcel to be chosen by defendant's predecessor in interest. Thus, the easement did not encumber the full 160-acre parcel, but rather was limited in size and location to the historical location of the radio facilities. The original grant also required that wires, ground radial antennas, conduits, and transmission lines be buried to a minimum depth of 12 inches, and the District Court did not err in ordering defendant to bury the equipment pursuant to the maintenance portion of the grant. Anderson v. Stokes, 2007 MT 166, 338 M 118, 163 P3d 1273 (2007).

Proper Determination of Legal Access for Subdivision Parcels: Plaintiffs asserted that language in a declaration of a subdivision easement permitting all subdivision owners to use subdivision roads should limit access only to owners of lots that existed at the time that the declaration was executed. The District Court disagreed, and based on the clear and unambiguous language of the declaration, the Supreme Court concurred. Although not all of the subdivision parcels were established at the time that the declaration was executed, the declaration was clear that use of the roads extended to all lot owners, including the parcels yet to be divided. The Board of County Commissioners did not act arbitrarily in finding that legal access existed for the entire subdivision. Fielder v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2007 MT 118, 337 M 256, 162 P3d 67 (2007).

Use and Maintenance of Private Dock in Subdivision Communal Area Violative of Subdivision Creation Document — Order for Dock Removal Proper: A subdivision creation document included a provision reserving a community access area for subdivision property owners, including lake frontage for recreational purposes. In an unpublished 2001 opinion, the Supreme Court confirmed the validity of the creation document, affirmed that plaintiff held an irrevocable nonpossessory interest in the common access area, and held that defendant took title to the subdivision property subject to the community access rights. Defendant subsequently constructed a private dock at least partly within the community access area, required other subdivision residents to obtain permission to use the dock, and generally excluded use of the dock except for emergency purposes. In response to the construction and exclusionary use of defendant's dock, a subdivision property owner obtained an injunction prohibiting defendant from using the dock and ordering that the dock be removed. On appeal, defendant contended that the District Court erred by not applying easement law. However, the unpublished opinion did not establish an easement, and the District Court did not err in not applying easement law to determine the respective rights of the parties to use the communal access area. Further, defendant's erection of the dock physically and improperly prevented residents from using the reserved communal area, in violation of the subdivision creation document. Defendant was also precluded from requiring residents to obtain permission to use the dock because the owner of a dominant estate is not required to obtain permission from the owner of the servient estate to do what the owner of the dominant estate is already legally entitled to do. Because defendant's use and maintenance of a private dock violated the subdivision creation document and because pecuniary compensation would not provide an adequate remedy, the District Court properly enjoined defendant's continued use of the dock and ordered removal of the dock. Cravath v. Ellingson, 2005 MT 289, 329 M 280, 124 P3d 141 (2005). See also Ludwig v. Spoklie, 280 M 315, 930 P2d 56 (1996), and Mason v. Garrison, 2000 MT 78, 299 M 142, 998 P2d 531 (2000).

Extent of Public Easement Not Limited to Contested Portion on Defendant's Property — Prescriptive Easement Properly Found as Matter of Law: A part of Boadle Road that crossed a portion of defendant's property had been chained and closed by defendant's predecessor in interest in 1999. Plaintiff land access association sought to have the road declared a public road and have defendant enjoined from prohibiting public access. The trial court found that Boadle Road was in existence since the early 1900s and that open public use without landowner permission continued unabated until the road was closed in 1999. Defendant contended that because the litigated portion of the road began and ended on his property, the road essentially went nowhere and thus it was pointless for the trial court to find a public prescriptive easement. The Supreme Court disagreed. Nothing supported defendant's contention that an easement cannot begin and end on the servient landowner's estate. The portion of the road on defendant's property was part of a much longer public road, and there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that the public was entitled to a prescriptive easement over the portion of the road in dispute. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Jones, 2004 MT 394, 325 M 236, 104 P3d 496 (2004). See also Han Farms, Inc. v. Molitor, 2003 MT 153, 316 M 249, 70 P3d 1238 (2003).

Scope of Easement Implied When Easement Exists: Defendant contended that, based on this section, the scope of a prescriptive easement should be limited to the use during the prescriptive period when the easement was acquired. Plaintiff pointed out that the issue was never raised in the pleadings or mentioned in the pretrial order and argued that the issue was therefore not properly before the Supreme Court. The court disagreed. Pursuant to Warnack v. Coneen Family Trust, 266 M 203, 879 P2d 715 (1994), and this section, in an action in which the existence of a prescriptive easement is at issue, it is implied that the scope of the easement, if one exists, is also at issue. The court found that a prescriptive easement existed in this case, so remand was appropriate in order for the trial court to determine the scope of the easement. Han Farms, Inc. v. Molitor, 2003 MT 153, 316 M 249, 70 P3d 1238 (2003).

Easement by Reservation — Showing of Intent to Create Easement in Favor of Stranger to Deed Required: The Loomises contended that an easement by reservation to their property was created by two clauses within an original contract for deed when the Kolbs sold some adjoining property to the Luraskis. The language in the contract for deed purported to reserve a right-of-way and easement over and across the west 30 feet of the Luraski property for the purpose of establishing a public road and an easement for utilities. The District Court concluded that the disputed easement was outside the Loomises' chain of title, making them strangers to the deed, because the express reservation was from the Kolbs to the Luraskis and the Loomises were not parties. The Supreme Court agreed. An easement by reservation in favor of a stranger to a deed can be created only by clearly showing the grantor's intent to do so. In this case, testimony and evidence established that the Kolbs intended to preserve the option for means of access to other property only in the event that property was purchased, but the optional property was never purchased and the road was never constructed. The Supreme Court also disagreed with the Loomises' contention that no one should be considered a stranger to the deed because the reservation was for a public road. No rights are granted to the public prior to a road's actual creation and dedication. The court found it unlikely that a prudent landowner would reserve an easement for the benefit of the public at large, and the burden was on the Loomises, as strangers to the deed, to show the Kolbs' intent to reserve an easement for the Loomises' benefit. The fact that the Kolbs subsequently amended the original certificate of survey to eliminate the disputed easement was further proof that no easement reservation was created for the Loomises. Subsequent acts of the parties that tend to show the construction that they themselves placed upon the writing are also important in determining intent if intent is not clearly expressed in the deed. No easement by reservation was created in favor of the Loomises as a matter of law, and the District Court did not err in so holding. Loomis v. Luraski, 2001 MT 223, 306 M 478, 36 P3d 862 (2001).

Clear and Unambiguous Easement Language — Contract Principles Applied to Interpretation of Easement: After an initial conveyance of property, Tract A-1 was burdened by three easements: (1) an existing driveway; (2) an alternative drainfield easement; and (3) a trapezoid-shaped parcel called the trapezoid easement, which was designated as an easement for access to a seepage pit and alternative drainfield for an adjoining tract entitled "Tract 1". Following the subdivision of Tract 1 into Tract 1-A and Tract 1-B, the Linfords conveyed Tract 1-B to the Bings, but still continued to possess Tract 1-A and continued to benefit from the access easement. When Tract 1-A was later conveyed to the Bings, they acquired the same right to use easements appurtenant to the dominant estate that the Linfords previously enjoyed. A dispute then arose with the Mularonis, the owners of Tract 1-A, who contested the validity of the trapezoid easement, arguing that when the Bings took title to Tract A-1 from the Linfords, a merger of titles occurred that extinguished the easements. The District Court impliedly rejected the merger argument by holding that the easement burdening Tract A-1 benefited both Tract 1-A and Tract 1-B, and the Supreme Court concurred. In order to extinguish an easement by merger, there must be unity of title or ownership, coextensive in validity, quality, and all other circumstances of right. The language describing the trapezoid easement as an easement for access was clear and unambiguous and created a general access easement. Applying principles of contract interpretation to the transfer of property, the Supreme Court held that the incorporation of the certificate of survey into the deeds conveying the tracts to the Bings clearly and effectively described the easements in question and that the District Court did not err in finding that the Bings were entitled to general access across the trapezoid easement. Mularoni v. Bing, 2001 MT 215, 306 M 405, 34 P3d 497 (2001).

Determination That Servient Estate Burdened by Expansion of Easement Based on Credible Evidence — Correct Case Law Properly Applied: Hardy contended that the District Court had insufficient evidence to define the scope of Hardy's easement and to find that Hardy burdened the servient estate by trying to improve an access road for subdivision purposes and that the court failed to apply the correct case law in making its determination. The Supreme Court disagreed on both issues. The District Court had substantial credible evidence upon which to find that Hardy changed the use of the access road to the detriment of the servient owners, who were burdened by Hardy's unreasonable and vexatious use of the easement to the extent that some equitable remedy was required to preserve their right of use and enjoyment and to maintain the status quo. Circumstances dictated that the District Court tailor a precise and restrictive remedy, and the court did so. Further, in arriving at its conclusion, the court properly applied the correct case law in looking beyond the plain language of the unrestricted easement to define the scope and breadth of the servitude. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in enjoining Hardy from any activity other than using the easement for temporary secondary access in the event that his primary access became impaired, based on the conclusion that Hardy was incapable of responsibly exercising his nonpossessory rights associated with repairing and maintaining the easement burdening plaintiffs' property. However, to avoid a potential issue for future dispute, the Supreme Court did remand for a clarification of the injunction for the limited purpose of determining responsibility for the maintenance and repair on the entire easement road. Guthrie v. Hardy, 2001 MT 122, 305 M 367, 28 P3d 467 (2001). See also Laden v. Atkeson, 112 M 302, 116 P2d 881 (1941), and Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751 (1996).

Obstruction of Easement Properly Enjoined: Burleson filed an action to enjoin defendant from refusing access to an easement across defendant's property, and the District Court granted summary judgment to Burleson, permanently enjoining defendant from obstructing the easement. Defendant appealed, making various overlapping arguments attacking the creation of the easement, contending that the easement did not pass to subsequent purchasers, that the easement was somehow extinguished, and that defendant was not provided notice of the easement. The Supreme Court addressed each argument, noting that an easement is a nonpossessory interest in land creating a right of one person to use the land of another for a specific purpose or a servitude imposed as a burden upon the land and that an easement cannot be created, granted, or transferred except by operation of law, by an instrument in writing, or by prescription. In this case, an easement by reservation was created by the original documents and attached to the property when the dominant tenement was partitioned or subdivided. Summer access roads were clearly defined rights-of-way constituting easements that were attached to the remaining parcels in the subdivision and passed to subsequent purchasers, such as Burleson. Defendant's argument regarding lack of notice failed because each purchaser of land in the subdivision was notified of the easement through specific language in the contracts, deeds, and title insurance and defendant had actual notice of the easement when inspecting the property prior to purchase. The documents were sufficiently clear to indicate that the summer access roads, despite their designation, were intended to be available to subdivision owners for full-time access to their property. Defendant also presented no evidence to satisfy the necessary elements of extinguishment or abandonment. The owner of the servitude and the servient tenement were not the same person; there was no unity of ownership; the servient tenement was not destroyed; there was no evidence that the owner of the servitude performed or assented to an act that was incompatible with the nature of the easement; and the necessary elements of extinguishment through adverse possession were neither alleged nor satisfied. On the basis of the record, the District Court was affirmed. Burleson v. Kinsey-Cartwright, 2000 MT 278, 302 M 141, 13 P3d 384, 57 St. Rep. 1162 (2000), distinguished in Roland v. Davis, 2013 MT 148, 370 Mont. 327, 302 P.3d 91.

Life Span of Government-Funded Irrigation System Related to Cost-Sharing Involvement, Not Duration of Easement: Quinlan and Cox entered into a pooling agreement and a cost-sharing agreement with the federal government for installation of a permanent irrigation system across their adjoining properties. The agreement defined the life span of the irrigation system as 10 years. Cox eventually lost the property through foreclosure, and Espy purchased it, becoming the successor in interest. In 1997, Quinlan attempted to prohibit Espy's use of the irrigation system, so Espy sued for easement interference. Quinlan filed a permissive counterclaim, alleging that Espy had interfered with Quinlan's road easement over Espy's property. Following trial, the District Court concluded that Espy had a valid easement over Quinlan's property for use and maintenance of the irrigation system, that Quinlan had a valid road easement over Espy's property, and that both parties were entitled to a permanent order restraining the other party from interfering with their respective easements. Quinlan appealed, contending that because the pooling agreement created a contract for a 10-year duration based on the life span of the irrigation system, the District Court erred in holding that Espy had an easement for an indefinite duration. The Supreme Court affirmed. The 10-year life span of the system was related to the government's cost-sharing involvement only, not to a limitation on the duration of the easement. The duration of the easement was indefinite because with proper maintenance and repair, the irrigation system could last indefinitely. Espy v. Quinlan, 2000 MT 193, 300 M 441, 4 P3d 1212, 57 St. Rep. 764 (2000).

Order Prohibiting Interference With Use of Easement Affirmed: Generally, the owner of a servient tenement may make use of the land in any lawful manner, provided that the use is not inconsistent with and does not interfere with the use and right reserved to the dominant tenement or estate. In turn, those for whom the use and right exist are entitled to use the easement area for its intended purposes. Here, Garrison constructed gardens in and fences across the easement and allowed his dogs to run at large on the easement, which unreasonably and materially interfered with the rights of the dominant estate. Thus, the District Court did not err in ordering Garrison to remove the gardens and fences and to restrain the dogs from interfering with easement use. Mason v. Garrison, 2000 MT 78, 299 M 142, 998 P2d 531, 57 St. Rep. 340 (2000). See also Gabriel v. Wood, 261 M 170, 862 P2d 42 (1993).

Scope of Specific Easement Determined by Actual Terms of Grant — Scope of Nonspecific Easement Determined by Reasonable Necessity and Convenience: When an easement is specific in nature, the breadth and scope of the easement are strictly determined by the actual terms of the grant. However, when the granting language is not specific in nature, courts must look beyond the plain language of the grant to whether the easement is reasonably necessary and convenient for the purpose for which it was created, with a view to the situation of the property and the surrounding circumstances. In this case, the District Court looked to historical use in interpreting a nonspecific easement, and because the findings of fact were supported by substantial credible evidence and not clearly erroneous, they were affirmed. Mason v. Garrison, 2000 MT 78, 299 M 142, 998 P2d 531, 57 St. Rep. 340 (2000), followed in Guthrie v. Hardy, 2001 MT 122, 305 M 367, 28 P3d 467 (2001), and Clark v. Pennock, 2010 MT 192, 357 Mont. 338, 239 P.3d 922. See also Strahan v. Bush, 237 M 265, 773 P2d 718, 46 St. Rep. 789 (1989), and Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154.

Reservation of Single Right-of-Way Over Existing Private Road — No Ambiguity or Conflict With Intended Access: The District Court determined that a reservation of rights in a 1965 deed was ambiguous because the reservation of rights over a single roadway conflicted with the grantors' intent to reserve as many means as possible to their remaining property in a mountainous area. Ambiguities in a reservation of rights in any grant of property are to be construed in favor of the grantor; however, the breadth and scope of an easement are determined upon the actual terms of the contract. The easement in this case was described as "a right of way" over "an existing private road which extends across" the servient tenement "for the use and benefit of Section 3 and [parts] of Section 34". That language indicated the use to which the easement would be put, not the scope of the easement itself. The Supreme Court found that the reservation of rights was not ambiguous; rather, the language restricting the easement to a single right-of-way over an existing private road did not conflict with the intended use of the easement to benefit the grantors' remaining properties, nor did the grantors' intent override any limitation of the singular use of the word "road" in the reservation. Van Hook v. Jennings, 1999 MT 198, 295 M 409, 983 P2d 995, 56 St. Rep. 767 (1999).

Nature of Enjoyment Inclusive of Frequency of Use: Owners of a prescriptive easement are limited to the use that was established during the prescriptive period. The phrase "nature of enjoyment" includes the frequency with which an easement was enjoyed, so the frequency of use by which owners of an easement by prescription acquire their easement during the prescriptive period may limit the frequency of future use. Kelly v. Wallace, 1998 MT 307, 292 M 129, 972 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1271 (1998).

Extent and Scope of Implied Easement: The extent and scope of an implied easement from existing use are determined by 70-20-308 and this section and are limited to its historical use at the time that the easement was created. In the present case, prior to severance and for over 50 years since, use of the easement was limited to agricultural and recreational purposes, and there was no evidence that the parties ever considered the easement to be unlimited in scope. Therefore, the District Court did not err when it found that the Hoyem Trust had an implied easement from existing use rather than an implied easement by necessity and that the scope and extent of the easement were limited to agricultural and recreational purposes based on the historical use of the easement at the time of its creation. Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135, 55 St. Rep. 1230 (1998), modified in Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St. Rep. 125 (2000), requiring that in determining the scope and extent of an implied easement, consideration be given to the intent and reasonable expectations of the parties at the time of severance, and followed in Wolf v. Owens, 2007 MT 302, 340 M 74, 172 P3d 124 (2007). See also Fristoe v. Drapeau, 215 P2d 729 (Calif. 1950), and Restatement of Property 484, comment b (1944). Tungsten Holdings was followed in Waters v. Blagg, 2008 MT 451, 348 M 48, 202 P3d 110 (2008), which was overruled in part in Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154.

Informal Apparent Easement — Reasonable Necessity: For a use to give rise to an implied easement from existing use, it must be apparent and continuous at the time that the tract is divided. An easement is apparent when it may be discovered upon reasonable inspection. An apparent easement need not be so formal as to be an improved, paved, or even graveled two-way road but may be as simple as a path, roadway of sorts, trail, or primitive road. In addition to the requirement that the use be apparent and continuous at the time that the tract is divided, an implied easement from existing use must also have a use that is reasonably necessary for the enjoyment of the dominant parcel. An implied easement from existing use passes to all future owners of the property pursuant to 70-20-308. In the present case, the District Court properly held that an easement from existing use, not an implied easement by necessity, existed in favor of the Hoyem Trust over and across Galts' property. The easement by necessity requirement of "strict necessity" did not exist at the time that the property was severed in 1944 because a road existed that provided practical access to a public road for ingress and egress. The presence of an implied easement from existing use necessarily defeats the strict necessity requirement of an easement by necessity. Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135, 55 St. Rep. 1230 (1998), following Michaelson v. Wardell, 186 M 278, 607 P2d 100 (1980), and followed in Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St. Rep. 125 (2000), and Wolf v. Owens, 2007 MT 302, 340 M 74, 172 P3d 124 (2007). See also Waters v. Blagg, 2008 MT 451, 348 M 48, 202 P3d 110 (2008), wherein the Supreme Court clarified that a connection to a public road is not required when a landowner seeks declaration of an implied easement by preexisting use, overruled in part in Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154, 1927 Easement to Ranch for Agricultural Use — Access to Subdivided Ranch and Additional Property Prohibited: Elk Park Ranch's predecessors in interest received warranty deeds in 1927 that included easements for access to the property by Mill Creek Road, a private road that ran through another ranch. The warranty deeds provided that the right-of-way not be fenced, that any gates in place across the grantor's property be kept closed at all times, and that abuse of the terms of the easement would result in the loss of the easements. Elk Park Ranch subdivided its ranch property into 174 parcels and sought to use Mill Creek Road for access to those parcels. Citing Lindley v. Maggert, 198 M 197, 645 P2d 430 (1982), and Strahan v. Bush, 237 M 265, 773 P2d 718 (1989), the Supreme Court held that Elk Park Ranch was limited by the terms of the easement and its historical use, which was only for agricultural purposes. Elk Park Ranch also argued that it now owned additional property that was not owned in 1927 by its predecessors in interest and that Elk Park Ranch should therefore be given access to that additional property. However, the Supreme Court relied upon DND Neffson Co. v. Galleria Partners, 745 P2d 206 (Ariz. App. 1987), and held that the 1927 easement could not be used to access additional, nonappurtenant property. Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996), distinguished in Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999).

Right to Build Access Road Determined by Scope of Use of Easement: The Supreme Court found that no easement by grant or reservation had been conveyed to Ruana and Bielby through their chain of title for the use of North Hidden Valley Road. The Supreme Court left undecided and remanded to the District Court the issue of whether Ruana and Bielby enjoyed an easement by implication or by prescription for the use of the road. Ruana and Bielby also claimed an easement for the purpose of an access road called Blue Sky Lane joining North Hidden Valley Road at a right angle. The Supreme Court held that in order for Ruana and Bielby to have an easement for construction of Blue Sky Lane, they must establish either: (1) that construction and use of Blue Sky Lane are encompassed within and do not exceed the scope of their easement on North Hidden Valley Road; or (2) that in addition to their easement on North Hidden Valley Road, they have an easement on Blue Sky Lane either by implication or by prescription. Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247, 53 St. Rep. 216 (1996).

Extent of Nonspecific Easement Determined by Circumstances: Property owners were permanently enjoined from interfering with their neighbors' ingress and egress to the neighbors' property pursuant to a general easement right granted to the neighbors. If an easement is not specifically defined, as in this case, it need only be as is reasonably necessary and convenient for the purpose for which it was created. The owner of a reserved easement may use it to the full use of the right retained, and the owner of the servient tenement may not interfere with the use and right reserved to the dominant tenement or estate. Strahan v. Bush, 237 M 265, 773 P2d 718, 46 St. Rep. 789 (1989), followed in Gabriel v. Wood, 261 M 171, 862 P2d 42, 50 St. Rep. 1246 (1993), Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996), Mason v. Garrison, 2000 MT 78, 299 M 142, 998 P2d 531, 57 St. Rep. 340 (2000), and Guthrie v. Hardy, 2001 MT 122, 305 M 367, 28 P3d 467 (2001).

Use of Private Road Easement for Parking and Storage — Use Not Contemplated at Time Easement Created: Adjoining landowners shared a 12-foot wide "private road" on land owned by defendants. Plaintiff originally had an easement for access but later parked and stored vehicles and camper shells on the road. The District Court abused its discretion by allowing plaintiff to store vehicles on the easement and by requiring defendants to request removal of the vehicles to access their backyard. The Supreme Court reversed the scope of injunctions against the parties, requiring the easement be used only for purposes that did not unreasonably burden the servient tenement and that did not interfere with the use and right reserved to the dominant tenement. Both parties were enjoined from long-term parking and storage. Sampson v. Grooms, 230 M 190, 748 P2d 960, 45 St. Rep. 133 (1988). See also Mason v. Garrison, 2000 MT 78, 299 M 142, 998 P2d 531, 57 St. Rep. 340 (2000).

Unobstructed Use of Right-of-Way: Defendants' predecessors in interest conveyed an easement for right-of-way to plaintiffs. Defendants had actual knowledge of the easement and purchased the property subject to it. The defendants obstructed the easement, first by means of a gate, then by locked chains. The plaintiffs' use of the easement would have been impaired to such an extent as to defeat the purpose of the easement if it were gated, barricaded, chained, or obstructed. The plaintiffs had not abandoned any portion of the easement. Flynn v. Siren, 219 M 359, 711 P2d 1371, 43 St. Rep. 10 (1986).

Duty of Repair Owed to Servient Tenement — FTCA Action: The plaintiffs brought an action under the Federal Tort Claims Act against the United States and its assignee, alleging that the defendants negligently allowed cattle guards located on a highway easement granted by the plaintiffs to the United States to become damaged, rendering the guards useless for livestock control, and the District Court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim for relief. The court of appeals reversed, holding that the complaint did in fact state a claim for relief, as Montana courts would hold that in the absence of a specific provision in the documents creating and conveying the easement, the owner of an easement has the duty of repair and maintenance to prevent unreasonable interference with the uses of the servient tenement and is liable for damages proximately caused by failure or neglect to perform that duty. Walsh v. U.S., 672 F2d 746 (9th Cir. 1982).

Nature of Easement — When Deprivation of Property Occurs: A landowner brought an action to prevent the state from opening a fishing access site and from paving a road to the site, based on a claimed fee title to the roadway. The District Court granted the state a summary judgment as a matter of law. The Supreme Court found the landowner's interest was an ordinary easement. The words "private road" did not clearly indicate intent to create in him an "exclusive" easement. The state's use of the road cannot be declared inconsistent with the landowner's on the basis of speculation. Furthermore, under various statutory provisions, the state obtained its land lawfully. The plaintiff had not yet been deprived of his property interest. Any damages remained speculative at the time of the decision. The summary judgment was accordingly affirmed. Titeca v. St., 194 M 209, 634 P2d 1156, 38 St. Rep. 1533 (1981), followed in Bridger v. Lake, 271 M 186, 896 P2d 406, 52 St. Rep. 395 (1995).

Nonexclusive Prescriptive Easement by Nature of the Use: Under the settled principle in Montana that in acquiring a prescriptive easement, the right of the owner of the dominant estate is governed by the character and extent of the use during the period requisite to acquire it, Ferguson v. Standley, 89 M 489, 300 P 245 (1931), the nature of the right of the plaintiffs to a roadway cannot exceed the use which they made of it during the prescriptive period. Thus, where it is shown that other persons have participated in the use of the roadway, plaintiffs cannot establish a private or exclusive easement. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Creation of Prescriptive Easement: Testimony in this case shows the use of the road in dispute was originally permissive. To find a prescriptive easement, there must be a distinct and positive assertion of a right to use the road hostile to the owners by those claiming the easement. Claimants must also show the right was brought to the attention of the owners and continued use of the easement for the full statutory period. The record here shows occasional use of the road by hunters, hikers, and neighbors. This type of use is insufficient to raise a presumption of adverse use and does not represent the distinct and positive assertion of a hostile right brought home to the owner of the purportedly servient tenement necessary to transform the originally permissive use into adverse use. Medhus v. Dutter, 184 M 437, 603 P2d 669 (1979).

Intent of Grantor to Control Creation of Easement: Before the creation of an easement in a stranger to a conveyance will be recognized, the intent of the grantor to create the easement must clearly be shown. If it appears it is as likely the purpose of the clause in the deed was to protect the grantor's warranty of title as to reserve an easement, the court will not depart from the majority rule and find an easement. The testimony presented indicated that in executing the documents that passed equitable title to the property, the grantor did not intend to create an easement. There was no testimony that any of the grantors received less than full value for the land because of the existence of an easement. Finally, although the language of the deed does locate the easement, it fails to name a dominant tenement. Considering these factors together, as in Wilson v. Chestnut, 164 M 484, 525 P2d 24 (1974), it is as likely the grantors intended to protect their warranty of title as to reserve an easement. Thus, the deeds do not establish an easement of record. Medhus v. Dutter, 184 M 437, 603 P2d 669 (1979), followed in Kelly v. Wallace, 1998 MT 307, 292 M 129, 972 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1271 (1998).

Extent of Servitude — Determined by Terms of Grant: The extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant or the nature of the enjoyment by which it was acquired. The trial court found that the reservation in the warranty deed was only for the one east-west ditch and not for the entire north-south ditch. The findings of the trial court will not be reversed unless there is a clear preponderance of the evidence against such findings. Stout v. Reiter, 182 M 171, 595 P2d 1167 (1979).

Restrictive Covenant in Deed: Road easement which had been purchased from former owners of a portion of subdivision with full knowledge that the building of the road would be in violation of the restrictive covenants of the subdivision did not grant buyer the right to violate the covenants. Sheridan v. Martinsen, 164 M 383, 523 P2d 1392 (1974).

Ditch Rights: While, ordinarily, joint owners of a ditch are tenants in common, each entitled to its use, where such owners of an irrigation system, supplying a subdivided tract, owned an interest in the main canal and the laterals only to such point as was necessary for the conduct of water to their lands, the joint ownership of the canal extended only to the point of diversion to each owner's land and no subsequent owner acquired a greater right or easement therein. Maclay v. Missoula Irrigation District, 90 M 344, 3 P2d 286 (1921).

Water Rights and Ditch Rights Distinguished: Water rights and ditch rights are separate and distinct property rights, i.e., one may own a water right without a ditch right, or a ditch right without a water right. Maclay v. Missoula Irrigation District, 90 M 344, 3 P2d 286 (1921).

Prescriptive Easement — Extent of Use to Determine Extent of Easement: Extent of an easement acquired by adverse user is measured by extent of use. Hence, evidence of amount of water which had been or could be used through a ditch, title to which rested upon prescription, was admissible. Lowry v. Carrier, 55 M 392, 177 P 756 (1918).

Ditch Right-of-Way — Not to Be Changed or Enlarged: Though a person has acquired a right by prescription to maintain a ditch diagonally across the town lots of another, that does not carry with it the right to enlarge the ditch, to change its course materially, or to make a new ditch over such lots. Babcock v. Gregg, 55 M 317, 178 P 284 (1918).

70-17-107. Apportionment of burden upon partition of dominant tenement.

Case Notes

Easement Transferred With Transfer of Portion of Dominant Estate — Subdivision of Dominant Tenement Not Considered Increased Burden on Servient Tenement: The District Court found that the creation of a tract and the subsequent sale to Dabney constituted a transfer of a portion of the dominant estate and that the transfer conveyed all easements attached to the property to Dabney, so Dabney had a prescriptive easement to use a road across Leichtfuss's property to access the Dabney property. The court also concluded that Leichtfuss's parcels were not impermissibly burdened by Dabney's use of the road. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a life tenant or lessee generally cannot impose upon land a burden that passes to a remainderman or reversioner, the termination of a dominant estate held in less than fee simple does not automatically extinguish an appurtenant easement. Rather, it is the intent or expectations of the parties to the servitude that determine its duration. In this case, there was no evidence that the parties intended to abandon Dabney's parcel, so Dabney's use of the road was within the scope of the original easement on the parcel, and the easement was apportioned according to the division of the dominant tenement. In addition, Leichtfuss's contention that the apportionment increased the burden on the servient tenement also failed. "Subdivision and conveying away of portions of a dominant estate does not, in and of itself, mean that an additional burden is imposed upon the servient estate." Dabney's use of the parcel was consistent with the predecessor's historical use, and this was not a case in which the easement was suddenly being used to serve additional land or residences or in which the character of the easement's use was changed, so no increased burden to Leichtfuss's parcel was created. Leichtfuss v. Dabney, 2005 MT 271, 329 M 129, 122 P3d 1220 (2005), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751 (1996), and following Burleson v. Kinsey-Cartwright, 2000 MT 278, 302 M 141, 13 P3d 384 (2000).

Obstruction of Easement Properly Enjoined: Burleson filed an action to enjoin defendant from refusing access to an easement across defendant's property, and the District Court granted summary judgment to Burleson, permanently enjoining defendant from obstructing the easement. Defendant appealed, making various overlapping arguments attacking the creation of the easement, contending that the easement did not pass to subsequent purchasers, that the easement was somehow extinguished, and that defendant was not provided notice of the easement. The Supreme Court addressed each argument, noting that an easement is a nonpossessory interest in land creating a right of one person to use the land of another for a specific purpose or a servitude imposed as a burden upon the land and that an easement cannot be created, granted, or transferred except by operation of law, by an instrument in writing, or by prescription. In this case, an easement by reservation was created by the original documents and attached to the property when the dominant tenement was partitioned or subdivided. Summer access roads were clearly defined rights-of-way constituting easements that were attached to the remaining parcels in the subdivision and passed to subsequent purchasers, such as Burleson. Defendant's argument regarding lack of notice failed because each purchaser of land in the subdivision was notified of the easement through specific language in the contracts, deeds, and title insurance and defendant had actual notice of the easement when inspecting the property prior to purchase. The documents were sufficiently clear to indicate that the summer access roads, despite their designation, were intended to be available to subdivision owners for full-time access to their property. Defendant also presented no evidence to satisfy the necessary elements of extinguishment or abandonment. The owner of the servitude and the servient tenement were not the same person; there was no unity of ownership; the servient tenement was not destroyed; there was no evidence that the owner of the servitude performed or assented to an act that was incompatible with the nature of the easement; and the necessary elements of extinguishment through adverse possession were neither alleged nor satisfied. On the basis of the record, the District Court was affirmed. Burleson v. Kinsey-Cartwright, 2000 MT 278, 302 M 141, 13 P3d 384, 57 St. Rep. 1162 (2000), distinguished in Roland v. Davis, 2013 MT 148, 370 Mont. 327, 302 P.3d 91.

Implied Equitable Servitude: There can be implied reservations or grants of easement by necessity; where high rise condominium was constructed and apartments therein sold under plan whereby corporate builders sold individual apartments to suitable applicants but management corporation retained ownership of building and deed between the two corporations reserved no easements, an implied equitable servitude attached to transfers of apartments in question, requiring that they be used for residential purposes only. Thisted v. Country Club Tower Corp., 146 M 87, 405 P2d 432 (1965), overruling holding in Simonson v. McDonald, 131 M 494, 311 P2d 982 (1957), that 70-20-304 abolishes all implied covenants except the two enumerated therein and observing that language in Simonson was too broadly put and should have been limited in application to facts of that case, and distinguished in Flaig v. Gramm, 1999 MT 181, 295 M 297, 983 P2d 396, 56 St. Rep. 710 (1999).

Modification of Easement: Where grantor reserved an easement in land conveyed, city purchasing land from grantee could not obtain modification of easement based on need. Missoula v. Mix, 123 M 365, 214 P2d 212 (1950), followed in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000).

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved. Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

70-17-110. Action by owner of servient tenement for possession.

Case Notes

Easement by Way of Necessity — Incompatible With Prescriptive Easement: A way of necessity is incompatible with a prescriptive right for the same easement. A prescriptive right never accrues in a way of necessity as long as the necessity continues. There are two basic elements of easements by way of necessity: (1) unity of ownership; and (2) strict necessity. The necessity must exist at the time the unified tracts are severed. The way granted must be over the grantor's land and never over the land of a third party or stranger to the title, and finally there must be strict unity of ownership. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988), followed in Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Hidden Village, Inc., 276 M 268, 915 P2d 845, 53 St. Rep. 379 (1996).

No Implied Easement: Courts are reluctant to find easements by implication because such an action results in depriving a person of the use of his property by imposing a servitude by mere implication. To create an easement by implication from a preexisting use imposed on one part of the property for the benefit of another party, unity of title at the time of the severance thereof is required. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988). However, see Wangen v. Kecskes, 256 M 165, 845 P2d 721, 50 St. Rep. 6 (1993).

Prescriptive Easement Established — Summary Judgment — Burden of Proof: In a quiet title action, once defendant filed affidavits reciting facts that would fulfill the requirements for a prescriptive easement, it became the duty of the plaintiff not to rest upon mere allegations or denials but to respond by affidavit or otherwise, setting forth specific facts showing there was a genuine issue of material fact for trial. It was the plaintiff's burden to show that defendant's use was permissive. Summary judgment for the defendant was proper due to the plaintiff's failure to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Defendant was under no duty to communicate by word of mouth to the plaintiff or his predecessors in interest that she was using the roadway over plaintiff's property under a claim of right and adversely to them. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988).

Case Notes

Dedication of Public Road — No Extinguishment of Easement: Plaintiffs had an easement over a road that was subsequently declared a public road. Defendants, who later purchased a portion of the dominant estate, claimed the plaintiffs' easement was extinguished by the dedication of the road as a public road. The District Court found for the plaintiffs, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Private and public easement rights in the same road can coexist, and the alteration of the public right does not affect the private easement. Gibson v. Paramount Homes, LLC, 2011 MT 112, 360 Mont. 421, 253 P.3d 903, citing McPherson v. Monegan, 120 Mont. 454, 187 P.2d 542 (1947).

Not Incompatible: Purchase of lots in a subdivision by easement holders was not incompatible with the nature or exercise of the easement, and the plaintiffs failed to show that any act of the easement holders was incompatible with the easement. Steed v. Solso, 2010 MT 264, 358 Mont. 356, 246 P.3d 697.

No Evidence of Incompatible Use — Prescriptive Easement Affirmed: Plaintiffs' tearing down of an encroaching building in a disputed area, their attempted purchase of the easement, and their attempt to negotiate the purchase of an easement did not constitute acts incompatible with a prescriptive easement. Because defendants failed to present evidence that plaintiffs acted in a manner that was incompatible with a claim for a prescriptive easement, the District Court did not err in holding that plaintiffs had acquired a prescriptive easement across defendants' property. Knutson v. Schroeder, 2008 MT 139, 343 M 81, 183 P3d 881 (2008).

Failure to Establish Uninterrupted Possession to Qualify as Extinguished Easement — Summary Judgment Proper: A deed of restriction reserved easements on all existing roads within a subdivision for the scenic views and enjoyment of the property and for the reasonable general use of all subdivision property owners to access public lands. In 1984, defendants bought three subdivision tracts and promptly erected a locking gate across the road that intersected their property. Plaintiff subdivision association requested that defendants remove the gate because it was interfering with property owners' access to public lands. However, defendants refused and threatened legal action, so the association took no immediate action. The association eventually filed a complaint in 2000, accusing defendants of violating the deed of restriction by interfering with the easement. Defendants contended that the association had waived or abandoned any easement by not using the road for over 17 years. The District Court disagreed and granted summary judgment to the association. Defendants appealed on grounds that summary judgment was improper because a material fact existed as to whether the easement had been extinguished, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The association established the existence of a valid recorded easement that encumbered defendants' land, and defendants failed to show that their use of the road was continuous and uninterrupted for 5 years. In fact, the record was replete with admissions that association members continued to use the road, interrupting defendants' attempted adverse possession of the easement. Additionally, defendants testified that the gate was not locked all the time, that they lived outside the state part of the year, during which time they were unable to enforce their claim of right, and that the association had graded and maintained the road during the time in question. Thus, defendants' own testimony contradicted their claim of abandonment and adverse possession. The District Court did not err in finding that defendants' claims failed to establish a genuine issue of material fact that would preclude summary judgment. Meadow Lake Estates Homeowners Ass'n v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 41, 341 M 345, 178 P3d 81 (2008).

Easement Transferred With Transfer of Portion of Dominant Estate — Subdivision of Dominant Tenement Not Considered Increased Burden on Servient Tenement: The District Court found that the creation of a tract and the subsequent sale to Dabney constituted a transfer of a portion of the dominant estate and that the transfer conveyed all easements attached to the property to Dabney, so Dabney had a prescriptive easement to use a road across Leichtfuss's property to access the Dabney property. The court also concluded that Leichtfuss's parcels were not impermissibly burdened by Dabney's use of the road. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a life tenant or lessee generally cannot impose upon land a burden that passes to a remainderman or reversioner, the termination of a dominant estate held in less than fee simple does not automatically extinguish an appurtenant easement. Rather, it is the intent or expectations of the parties to the servitude that determine its duration. In this case, there was no evidence that the parties intended to abandon Dabney's parcel, so Dabney's use of the road was within the scope of the original easement on the parcel, and the easement was apportioned according to the division of the dominant tenement. In addition, Leichtfuss's contention that the apportionment increased the burden on the servient tenement also failed. "Subdivision and conveying away of portions of a dominant estate does not, in and of itself, mean that an additional burden is imposed upon the servient estate." Dabney's use of the parcel was consistent with the predecessor's historical use, and this was not a case in which the easement was suddenly being used to serve additional land or residences or in which the character of the easement's use was changed, so no increased burden to Leichtfuss's parcel was created. Leichtfuss v. Dabney, 2005 MT 271, 329 M 129, 122 P3d 1220 (2005), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751 (1996), and following Burleson v. Kinsey-Cartwright, 2000 MT 278, 302 M 141, 13 P3d 384 (2000).

Extinguishment of Easement Upon Ownership of Servient Tenement: Any time that a party who owns an easement right acquires legal ownership of a parcel with a servient tenement, the easement associated with the parcel is extinguished. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Olson, 2002 MT 158, 310 M 374, 50 P3d 1086 (2002), followed in Boyne USA, Inc. v. Spanish Peaks Dev., LLC, 2013 MT 1, 368 Mont. 143, 292 P.3d 432.

Reverse Adverse Possession — Public Prescriptive Easement Extinguished by Relocation of Road and Public Acquiescence With Locked Gates for Thirty Years: Dome Mountain Ranch's predecessor in interest relocated a road in 1965 and installed locked gates and no trespassing signs. Public access was limited to occasional, seasonal recreational use by permission or when the gates were unlocked, until Park County officially declared the road a county road in 1994. Dome Mountain Ranch claimed that the 5-year statutory period of reverse adverse possession concluded in 1970, so it was not required to show a clear intent by the county to abandon the road in proving its claim of reverse adverse possession. Title to a public road may not be obtained by adverse possession, and there must be a clear showing of intent to abandon a county road. Mere nonuse, even for extended periods of time, is generally insufficient in itself to indicate an intent to abandon. Likewise, mere nonuse or lack of maintenance by the county is not sufficient to indicate an intent to abandon, absent notice and a public hearing. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right in a prescriptive easement must not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. Seasonal recreational use, use by neighbors visiting neighbors, and use by persons cutting Christmas trees and gathering firewood are generally not sufficient to establish use by the public over a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly. In this case, the Supreme Court agreed with Dome Mountain Ranch that reverse adverse possession applied. The relocation of the road, coupled with the public's acquiescence with locked gates for almost 30 years, extinguished the county's public prescriptive easement, if one ever existed. Dome Mtn. Ranch, LLC v. Park County, 2001 MT 289, 307 M 420, 37 P3d 710 (2001), following Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), and McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794 (2000).

Clear and Unambiguous Easement Language — Contract Principles Applied to Interpretation of Easement: After an initial conveyance of property, Tract A-1 was burdened by three easements: (1) an existing driveway; (2) an alternative drainfield easement; and (3) a trapezoid-shaped parcel called the trapezoid easement, which was designated as an easement for access to a seepage pit and alternative drainfield for an adjoining tract entitled "Tract 1". Following the subdivision of Tract 1 into Tract 1-A and Tract 1-B, the Linfords conveyed Tract 1-B to the Bings, but still continued to possess Tract 1-A and continued to benefit from the access easement. When Tract 1-A was later conveyed to the Bings, they acquired the same right to use easements appurtenant to the dominant estate that the Linfords previously enjoyed. A dispute then arose with the Mularonis, the owners of Tract 1-A, who contested the validity of the trapezoid easement, arguing that when the Bings took title to Tract A-1 from the Linfords, a merger of titles occurred that extinguished the easements. The District Court impliedly rejected the merger argument by holding that the easement burdening Tract A-1 benefited both Tract 1-A and Tract 1-B, and the Supreme Court concurred. In order to extinguish an easement by merger, there must be unity of title or ownership, coextensive in validity, quality, and all other circumstances of right. The language describing the trapezoid easement as an easement for access was clear and unambiguous and created a general access easement. Applying principles of contract interpretation to the transfer of property, the Supreme Court held that the incorporation of the certificate of survey into the deeds conveying the tracts to the Bings clearly and effectively described the easements in question and that the District Court did not err in finding that the Bings were entitled to general access across the trapezoid easement. Mularoni v. Bing, 2001 MT 215, 306 M 405, 34 P3d 497 (2001).

Prescriptive Easement Established for One of Two Exits on Loop Road — Other Exit Considered Abandoned: Renner accessed his property by crossing Nemitz's property in two different places in order to form a loop driveway at Renner's house. The west easement was not at issue, but both the existence and location of an approximately 100-foot easement over the east side of the loop was contested. A series of interactions between the parties eventually led to Nemitz building a fence across the east side of the loop and Renner filing a claim to establish an easement over the east side of the loop. At trial, both parties presented testimony regarding use of the east side loop, including testimony regarding two possible exits on the loop. The District Court did not distinguish between the two exits, but found a prescriptive easement for the entire east side loop, held that the easement was not abandoned and that Nemitz's activities did not extinguish the easement, and granted Renner an easement for both exits of the east side loop, ordering all obstructions removed. Nemitz appealed. The District Court found clear and convincing evidence that a prescriptive easement existed for the east side loop based on testimony of its use from 1948 to 1974, and after reviewing the record, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's findings of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the easement. However, it was not clear from the testimony regarding use between 1948 and 1974 whether both exits met the requirements of a prescriptive easement, and that lack of specificity indicated that it was error for the District Court to find a prescriptive easement for both exits, but the error was harmless based on evidence regarding use from 1975 to 1995. Renner's predecessor in interest during that period continued to use the loop as in prior years and never sought permission and so could not be characterized as having abandoned the east loop easement. Testimony was undisputed that the left exit was used until 1995, but the right exit was not used past 1982, and testimony of Renner's predecessor in interest established that use of the right exit was intended to be subordinate to Nemitz's use, so it was error for the District Court to find that the right exit was not abandoned. The Supreme Court noted that extinguishment did not apply to the left exit because only 3 years passed between the time Renner acquired the property and when the claim was filed. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed the easement on the left exit and the order requiring removal of the fence across that exit, but reversed the part of the order requiring removal of the fence across the abandoned right exit. Renner v. Nemitz, 2001 MT 202, 306 M 292, 33 P3d 255 (2001), distinguishing Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 501, 668 P2d 1029 (1983).

Life Span of Government-Funded Irrigation System Related to Cost-Sharing Involvement, Not Duration of Easement: Quinlan and Cox entered into a pooling agreement and a cost-sharing agreement with the federal government for installation of a permanent irrigation system across their adjoining properties. The agreement defined the life span of the irrigation system as 10 years. Cox eventually lost the property through foreclosure, and Espy purchased it, becoming the successor in interest. In 1997, Quinlan attempted to prohibit Espy's use of the irrigation system, so Espy sued for easement interference. Quinlan filed a permissive counterclaim, alleging that Espy had interfered with Quinlan's road easement over Espy's property. Following trial, the District Court concluded that Espy had a valid easement over Quinlan's property for use and maintenance of the irrigation system, that Quinlan had a valid road easement over Espy's property, and that both parties were entitled to a permanent order restraining the other party from interfering with their respective easements. Quinlan appealed, contending that because the pooling agreement created a contract for a 10-year duration based on the life span of the irrigation system, the District Court erred in holding that Espy had an easement for an indefinite duration. The Supreme Court affirmed. The 10-year life span of the system was related to the government's cost-sharing involvement only, not to a limitation on the duration of the easement. The duration of the easement was indefinite because with proper maintenance and repair, the irrigation system could last indefinitely. Espy v. Quinlan, 2000 MT 193, 300 M 441, 4 P3d 1212, 57 St. Rep. 764 (2000).

Easement Not Extinguished by Destruction of Structure Upon Which Easement Operates: Owners of adjoining lots had an easement to use a dock, a swimming deck and swimming areas, and a parking area on the shore of Flathead Lake. After the dock was destroyed by a preceding owner, the present owner of the property claimed that the destruction of the dock signaled the termination of the easement. However, as set out in 25 Am. Jur. 2d Easements and Licenses §120 (1996), when an easement in an artificial structure is coupled with an interest in land, the easement is not extinguished by the destruction of the structure or the part of the structure upon which the easement operates. Further, denial of a claim of extinguishment by prescription was proper in the absence of adverse use because mere nonuse of a permanent, express easement will not lead to extinguishment by prescription and there was no showing of adverse, hostile actions for the requisite 5-year period. The lot owners possessed a permanent easement to use the existing dock, which implied that they had a right to construct and maintain a new dock in the same location as the original dock as a necessary incident of their perpetual right of lake access. Mason v. Garrison, 2000 MT 78, 299 M 142, 998 P2d 531, 57 St. Rep. 340 (2000). See also Rothschild v. Wolf, 123 P2d 483 (Calif. 1942), and Halverson v. Turner, 268 M 168, 885 P2d 1285 (1994).

Prescriptive Easement — "Clear and Convincing" Evidence Burden Adopted: Overruling Downing v. Grover, 237 M 172, 772 P2d 850 (1989), and earlier decisions requiring that the elements of a prescriptive easement be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, the Supreme Court held that the proper burden of proof is that each element of a prescriptive easement claim be proved by clear and convincing evidence. Wareing v. Schreckendgust, 280 M 196, 930 P2d 37, 53 St. Rep. 1362 (1996), followed in Renner v. Nemitz, 2001 MT 202, 306 M 292, 33 P3d 255 (2001), Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004), Combs-DeMaio Living Trust v. Kilby Butte Colony, Inc., 2005 MT 71, 326 M 334, 109 P3d 252 (2005), and Watson v. Dundas, 2006 MT 104, 332 M 164, 136 P3d 973 (2006). See also Steiger v. Brown, 2007 MT 29, 336 M 29, 152 P3d 705 (2007).

Presumption of Adverse Use Established Through Preliminary Requirements for Prescriptive Right: After a claimant has established the preliminary requirements for a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises. The burden then shifts to the owner of the land on which the prescriptive easement is claimed to establish permissive use or license. If an owner establishes that the use is permissive, no easement can be acquired. In the present case, no genuine issue of material fact existed with regard to defendant's open, notorious, continuous, uninterrupted, and exclusive use of a road access for the statutory period; thus, the presumption of adverse use was applicable. Plaintiff failed to raise material facts regarding whether the use was permissive, including questions of permission or license, control of access by use of a gate, and neighborly accommodation. Defendant was therefore entitled to summary judgment based on adverse use as a matter of law. Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724, 51 St. Rep. 1459 (1994), distinguishing Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993). See also Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Express Easement Not Extinguished by Period of Nonuse: Dahlia Halverson granted an express easement by quitclaim deed that referenced a certificate of survey showing a 30-foot easement for a road upon Turner's property. Turner later constructed fences along two of the boundaries to the property, one of which blocked the use of the road, but the road had not been used. Relying upon Billings v. O.E. Lee Co., 168 M 264, 542 P2d 97 (1975), and Edmond v. Williams, 774 P2d 1241 (Wash. App. 1989), the Supreme Court held that Halverson was not required to make use of the express easement as a condition of retaining it. The Supreme Court also held that fencing of the land would not be considered a sufficiently adverse use to extinguish the express easement by prescriptive use until such time as a need arose to use the easement. Halverson v. Turner, 268 M 168, 885 P2d 1285, 51 St. Rep. 1233 (1994), followed in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000).

Reverse Adverse Possession and Inconsistent Use: A landowner's blocking of a road was a hostile act that established reverse adverse possession because the state and local government and the public cooperated and adhered to a walk-in policy that had been in existence on the land for about 17 years. The decision by County Commissioners to deny a petition to establish the disputed road as a county road confirmed acquiescence in the fact that the road was a private road. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 794 (1993), distinguished in Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724, 51 St. Rep. 1459 (1994).

Acts Inconsistent With Existence of Private Easement: In a case regarding a prescriptive easement, the plaintiffs had asked the defendant owners for permission to use the road over the defendants' property and the plaintiffs had told others that they did not have an easement over the defendants' property. The Supreme Court ruled that the plaintiffs' actions were inconsistent with a prescriptive easement and, that, additionally, if an easement had existed, it was statutorily extinguished by the plaintiffs' inconsistent acts. Downing v. Grover, 237 M 172, 772 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 713 (1989), followed in Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 794 (1993), and Greenwalt Family Trust v. Kehler, 267 M 508, 885 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1130 (1994). See also Wareing v. Schreckendgust, 280 M 196, 930 P2d 37, 53 St. Rep. 1362 (1996), which overruled Downing v. Grover, 237 M 172, 772 P2d 850 (1989), with regard to the requirement that prescriptive easement claimant prove elements by a preponderance of the evidence and adopted requirement that claimant prove elements by clear and convincing evidence.

Unobstructed Use of Right-of-Way: Defendants' predecessors in interest conveyed an easement for right-of-way to plaintiffs. Defendants had actual knowledge of the easement and purchased the property subject to it. The defendants obstructed the easement, first by means of a gate, then by locked chains. The plaintiffs' use of the easement would have been impaired to such an extent as to defeat the purpose of the easement if it were gated, barricaded, chained, or obstructed. The plaintiffs had not abandoned any portion of the easement. Flynn v. Siren, 219 M 359, 711 P2d 1371, 43 St. Rep. 10 (1986).

Easement by Prescription Extinguished: Although a landowner's predecessors in interest may have obtained a prescriptive easement to use an irrigation ditch, the landowner's subsequent actions in apparent recognition that his use was permissive are incompatible with the nature of a prescriptive easement and have extinguished any easement by prescription. Robertson v. Hughes, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1041 (1983).

Creation of Prescriptive Easement: Testimony in this case shows the use of the road in dispute was originally permissive. To find a prescriptive easement, there must be a distinct and positive assertion of a right to use the road hostile to the owners by those claiming the easement. Claimants must also show the right was brought to the attention of the owners and continued use of the easement for the full statutory period. The record here shows occasional use of the road by hunters, hikers, and neighbors. This type of use is insufficient to raise a presumption of adverse use and does not represent the distinct and positive assertion of a hostile right brought home to the owner of the purportedly servient tenement necessary to transform the originally permissive use into adverse use. Medhus v. Dutter, 184 M 437, 603 P2d 669 (1979).

Servitude Upon Land Extinguished: A servitude is extinguished by the vesting of the right to the servitude and the right to the servient tenement in the same person. The ditch system in question could not have been an appurtenance to defendant's land prior to 1965 because the dominant and servient tenements were part of the same parcel of land. Stout v. Reiter, 182 M 171, 595 P2d 1167 (1979).

Incompatible Act: Purchase by city of an easement which conveyed nothing more than the city already owned under a prior easement was not an act incompatible with the prior easement and did not extinguish the prior easement. Billings v. O. E. Lee Co., 168 M 264, 542 P2d 97 (1975), followed in Wangen v. Kecskes, 256 M 165, 845 P2d 721, 50 St. Rep. 6 (1993), Halverson v. Turner, 268 M 168, 885 P2d 1285, 51 St. Rep. 1233 (1994), and DeVoe v. St., 281 M 356, 935 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 207 (1997).

Abandonment and Reconveyance of Easement: Easement acquired for use of land as a public park adjoining highway was abandoned by state's abandonment of the highway and abandonment of its maintenance and dominion over the park area. Park County Rod & Gun Club v. Dept. of Highways, 163 M 372, 517 P2d 352 (1973).

2013 Amendment: Chapter 180 in (1) after "maintain a canal or ditch" inserted "or to operate the appropriation works"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 12, 2013.

Case Notes

Unreasonable Interference With Ditch Easement: In a ditch easement dispute, the District Court allowed the defendant's culvert and rock bridge to remain in the plaintiff's irrigation ditch. Applying 70-17-112, under which an owner of the ditch easement has the right to enter on the servient tenement to maintain the ditch, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the defendant, by constructing permanent encroachments, had unreasonably interfered with the plaintiff's ditch easement. Musselshell Ranch Co. v. Seidel-Joukova, 2011 MT 217, 362 Mont. 1, 261 P.3d 570.

Award of Attorney Fees and Costs Allowed Both for Sanction and as Statutory Fees — Conditions of Dual Award: The District Court awarded attorney fees and costs to defendants as a sanction for plaintiffs' violation of former Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Defendants also prevailed on a ditch encroachment claim against plaintiffs and were thus entitled to attorney fees and costs as the prevailing party pursuant to this section. The Supreme Court noted that in this case, the conduct being punished was distinct under each respective authority, so the District Court was allowed to award attorney fees and costs both for a former Rule 11 violation and pursuant to the statute. However, if attorney fees and costs are awarded as a former Rule 11 sanction, the District Court must ensure that the conduct being sanctioned is not the same conduct for which attorney fees and costs are awarded under the statute because litigants are not entitled to duplicate awards for the same conduct. Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007).

Remand for Determination of Appropriate Findings and Damages Related to Ditch Rights — Sanctions Dismissed Absent Specific Findings of Sanctionable Conduct: The parties entered a settlement agreement in 1998 regarding use and maintenance of a ditch that crossed plaintiffs' property and conveyed irrigation water to defendants' property. In 2002, plaintiffs alleged breach of the agreement, nuisance, and trespass. Defendants counterclaimed, alleging breach of the agreement, interference with water rights and easements, and nuisance. The District Court found that plaintiffs' claims were without merit and awarded sanctions against plaintiffs pursuant to former Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The court also found that all the counterclaims were unfounded and dismissed the counterclaims with prejudice. Plaintiffs appealed, and defendants cross-appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that the findings of fact regarding plaintiffs' claims were supported by substantial credible evidence and not clearly erroneous, so the trial court's holding that defendants did not breach the agreement was affirmed. Dismissal of defendants' counterclaims, however, was not affirmed. Although claims of plaintiffs' physical interference were not supported by the evidence, under Kephart v. Portmann, 259 M 232, 855 P2d 120 (1993), plaintiffs' filing of the lawsuit and forcing defendants into court to defend their established rights constituted an impairment of defendants' acknowledged ditch rights under this section, so the Supreme Court remanded for a determination of defendants' damages, if any. In addition, the District Court failed to set out specific findings concerning whether plaintiffs breached the settlement agreement, so evaluation of the counterclaims was not possible, and the Supreme Court directed the District Court to enter appropriate findings on remand. Last, the District Court failed to set out specific findings concerning plaintiffs' acts warranting sanctions, stating only that plaintiffs' case was so strongly without merit that it was frivolous. Without more specific findings as to why sanctions were assessed, the Supreme Court vacated the award and directed the District Court on remand to enter specific findings of fact in support of its determination that plaintiffs violated former Rule 11 and, if so, as to the appropriateness of the choice of sanction imposed (see Akin v. Q-L Investments, Inc., 959 F2d 521 (5th Cir. 1992)). Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007).

Attorney Fees Properly Assessed on Claim for Interference With Ditch Easement: A landslide occurred near one of plaintiff's ditches, and in the process of repairing the damages, defendant filled in about 1,300 feet of another of plaintiff's ditches that was not associated with the landslide. Although presented in the context of the entire suit, plaintiff's encroachment claim for interference with his ditch easement was the only claim brought pursuant to this section, and because plaintiff prevailed on this claim, defendant was properly assessed attorney fees on the issue. Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

Secondary Easement for Historical Ditch Maintenance — Size of Maintenance Equipment Improperly Limited: Defendant had a secondary easement to enter the property of other landowners to inspect, repair, and maintain a ditch. The right was defined in a 1965 District Court order and affirmed in the present case, wherein the District Court further limited to no greater than 6 feet in width the size of machinery that could be used for ditch maintenance. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court found that the District Court erred in limiting equipment size. As equipment technology advances, the size and capability of equipment designed for certain uses change. Defendant was therefore allowed to use equipment specifically for ditch maintenance and repair, regardless of its footprint size, and to transport the equipment along the upper level edges of the ditch bank, as long as the equipment did not result in expanding the dimensions of the ditch or negatively impact the property over which it was moved. Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

Award of One-Half of Attorney Fees in Prescriptive Easement Case Affirmed: Defendants prevailed in a prescriptive easement case and sought attorney fees. The District Court noted that lead counsel were relatively equal as to experience and standing in the legal community, that defendants' counsel rendered more than twice the time and services rendered by plaintiff's counsel, and that defendants' attorneys duplicated some of their work. The court then reduced the award of attorney fees by half. Defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court provided an evidentiary foundation for reaching its conclusion and did not abuse its discretion by reducing the award by one-half. Ray v. Nansel, 2002 MT 191, 311 M 135, 53 P3d 870 (2002).

Life Span of Government-Funded Irrigation System Related to Cost-Sharing Involvement, Not Duration of Easement: Quinlan and Cox entered into a pooling agreement and a cost-sharing agreement with the federal government for installation of a permanent irrigation system across their adjoining properties. The agreement defined the life span of the irrigation system as 10 years. Cox eventually lost the property through foreclosure, and Espy purchased it, becoming the successor in interest. In 1997, Quinlan attempted to prohibit Espy's use of the irrigation system, so Espy sued for easement interference. Quinlan filed a permissive counterclaim, alleging that Espy had interfered with Quinlan's road easement over Espy's property. Following trial, the District Court concluded that Espy had a valid easement over Quinlan's property for use and maintenance of the irrigation system, that Quinlan had a valid road easement over Espy's property, and that both parties were entitled to a permanent order restraining the other party from interfering with their respective easements. Quinlan appealed, contending that because the pooling agreement created a contract for a 10-year duration based on the life span of the irrigation system, the District Court erred in holding that Espy had an easement for an indefinite duration. The Supreme Court affirmed. The 10-year life span of the system was related to the government's cost-sharing involvement only, not to a limitation on the duration of the easement. The duration of the easement was indefinite because with proper maintenance and repair, the irrigation system could last indefinitely. Espy v. Quinlan, 2000 MT 193, 300 M 441, 4 P3d 1212, 57 St. Rep. 764 (2000).

Prevailing Party on Ditch Easement Claim Entitled to Attorney Fees and Costs Despite Loss of Separate Counterclaim Related to Road Easement: Espy sued for easement interference related to an underground irrigation system. Quinlan filed a permissive counterclaim, alleging that Espy had interfered with Quinlan's road easement over Espy's property. Following trial, the District Court concluded that: (1) Espy was successful on his claim because he had a valid easement over Quinlan's property for use and maintenance of the irrigation system; (2) Quinlan was successful on her counterclaim because she had a valid road easement over Espy's property; (3) both parties were entitled to a permanent order restraining the other party from interfering with their respective easements; and (4) Espy was entitled to attorney fees and costs as the successful party under this section. Quinlan appealed the award of attorney fees, contending that because she prevailed on the counterclaim, neither party could be considered a prevailing party. However, Quinlan's counterclaim was not raised in the context of this section, but was instead related to a road easement. Because Espy successfully prevailed on all claims raised pursuant to this section, he was entitled to attorney fees and costs regardless of the fact that he was not the prevailing party on the counterclaim. Espy v. Quinlan, 2000 MT 193, 300 M 441, 4 P3d 1212, 57 St. Rep. 764 (2000), distinguishing Knudsen v. Taylor, 211 M 459, 685 P2d 354 (1984).

Failure to Enjoin Against Interference With Secondary Easement Rights Not Error: Engel asserted District Court error in failing to enjoin Gampps from interfering with Engel's use of a secondary easement to maintain an irrigation ditch running across the property of both parties. However, there was substantial evidence that Engel's access for routine inspections and maintenance was, and always had been, free and uninterrupted. Although failing to enjoin Gampps, the District Court nevertheless fashioned an order balancing Engel's reserved right for occasional access with Gampps' right not to be unreasonably burdened by Engel's secondary easement, so the District Court was affirmed. Engel v. Gampp, 2000 MT 17, 298 M 116, 993 P2d 701, 57 St. Rep. 96 (2000).

Prevailing Party Must Prevail on All Claims Before Attorney Fees Owing: In order to be considered a prevailing party for purposes of the award of attorney fees under subsection (5) of this section, a party must prevail on all claims raised pursuant to the statute. As a matter of law, the legal conclusion that one party encroached or otherwise impaired another party's easement rights does not necessarily mean that the latter was the prevailing party. In this case, Engel prevailed on only one of three claims and partially prevailed on another. This partial success was insufficient as a matter of law for the determination that Engel was the prevailing party, so the award of attorney fees to Engel was in error. Engel v. Gampp, 2000 MT 17, 298 M 116, 993 P2d 701, 57 St. Rep. 96 (2000), following Sharon v. Hayden, 246 M 186, 803 P2d 1083, 47 St. Rep. 2322 (1990), and followed in Musselshell Ranch Co. v. Seidel-Joukova, 2012 MT 222, 366 Mont. 337, 286 P.3d 1212.

Ditch Right Based on Irrigation Ditch Agreement — Secondary Easement for Ditch Maintenance: In 1960, Kepharts and Portmanns entered into an irrigation ditch agreement that clearly acknowledged Portmanns' superior ditch right to transport water through the ditch over Kepharts' property. Given the known use of the ditch before and after entry of a 1937 adjudication decree, the acts of Portmanns since 1954 in consistently using, cleaning, and maintaining the ditch, as well as the terms of the 1960 agreement itself, equitably estopped Kepharts from challenging the existence of Portmanns' ditch right. Further, it was not error for the District Court to conclude that because Portmanns were owners of an easement in the ditch, they also had a necessary secondary easement to reasonably enter, inspect, repair, and maintain the ditch. Kephart v. Portmann, 259 M 232, 855 P2d 120, 50 St. Rep. 771 (1993).

Permanent Injunction — Attorney Fees and Costs: Plaintiffs sought an injunction requiring defendants to repair damage to an irrigation ditch running through their property. The District Court found a likelihood of future interference by defendants with plaintiffs' irrigation ditch easement. The District Court properly granted plaintiffs a permanent injunction and awarded damages, costs, and attorney fees. Butler v. Germann, 251 M 107, 822 P2d 1067, 48 St. Rep. 1083 (1991).

Failure to Prevail in Any Claims — Attorney Fees Warranted: Plaintiff contended that construction of a pond constituted an unlawful interference with his ditch easement, deprived him of water, and reduced the value of his property, entitling him to actual and punitive damages and injunctive relief. However, because he failed to prevail in any of his claims, defendants were properly considered the prevailing party and were entitled to attorney fees under this section. Boylan v. Van Dyke, 247 M 259, 806 P2d 1024, 48 St. Rep. 188 (1991), distinguishing Knudsen v. Taylor, 211 M 459, 685 P2d 354 (1984).

No Unlawful Interference With Ditch Easement: Plaintiff contended that construction of a pond constituted an unlawful interference with his ditch easement, depriving him of water and reducing the value of his property. The District Court's findings that the pond had nothing to do with plaintiff's water shortage, but rather that the shortage was caused by an upstream user exercising his full right to the water, were not clearly erroneous and were therefore affirmed on appeal. Boylan v. Van Dyke, 247 M 259, 806 P2d 1024, 48 St. Rep. 188 (1991).

Water Rights Inconsequential to Determination of Interference With Ditch Use: Evidence of the nature, priority, and extent of water rights is of no consequence to the determination of whether construction of a pond interfered with use of a ditch and was properly excluded as irrelevant. Boylan v. Van Dyke, 247 M 259, 806 P2d 1024, 48 St. Rep. 188 (1991).

Statutory Provisions Enforced — Attorney Fees Proper: The District Court affirmed defendants' rights to a reasonable secondary easement, thereby preventing plaintiff from encroaching or impairing the easement for the canal or ditch. Having successfully enforced both provisions of this section, defendants were entitled, as the prevailing party, to costs and reasonable attorney fees. Sharon v. Hayden, 246 M 186, 803 P2d 1083, 47 St. Rep. 2322 (1990), followed in Kephart v. Portmann, 259 M 232, 855 P2d 120, 50 St. Rep. 771 (1993), Rieman v. Anderson, 282 M 139, 935 P2d 1122, 54 St. Rep. 286 (1997), and Engel v. Gampp, 2000 MT 17, 298 M 116, 993 P2d 701, 57 St. Rep. 96 (2000).

No Prevailing Party for Award of Attorney Fees: The dominant and servient owners in a controversy over ditch flow had to some extent encroached on the other's rights, causing damages to each other, and an accompanying injunctive order was a victory and a loss for each side. The District Court was correct in not awarding attorney fees under this section on the ground that there was no prevailing party. Knudsen v. Taylor, 211 M 459, 685 P2d 354, 41 St. Rep. 1490

Part 2
Covenants Running With the Land

Part Case Notes

Servient Estate Not to Unilaterally Change Location of Right-of-Way — Changes in Easement Ordered Altered to Accommodate Historical Use: The plaintiffs had an easement over a road that subsequently was declared a public road. Developers later purchased a portion of the dominant estate and reconfigured the road to convert an "S" curve into two right angles. The changes to the road made it impossible for the plaintiffs to drive their oversized equipment on the road as they had historically. The District Court ordered the servient estate to increase the radii of the turns in the road to allow the plaintiffs to use the road for their oversized equipment without having to go off the roadway or cross lanes. Gibson v. Paramount Homes, LLC, 2011 MT 112, 360 Mont. 421, 253 P.3d 903.

Covenants Intended to Remain in Effect Until Rejected by Property Owners — Failure of Sufficient Tract Owners to Vote to Amend Covenants: Subdivision property owners entered covenants that would automatically extend for "successive period" of 10 years. The covenants could also be amended by a two-thirds vote of the owners of the original tracts. Some of the owners contended that the covenant extension language was ambiguous because it was not clear if the covenants would be renewed only for a single 10-year period or for successive 10-year periods. The District Court held that the language was not ambiguous, but rather contained a typographical error, and that successive 10-year periods applied. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Taken as a whole the covenant language intended that the covenants remain in effect until affirmatively rejected by the property owners. In this case, five of the eight original tract owners voted to amend the covenants, so without the required two-thirds vote, the covenants remained unamended. Brewer v. Hawkinson, 2009 MT 346, 353 M 154, 221 P3d 643 (2009). See also Creveling v. Ingold, 2006 MT 57, 331 M 322, 132 P3d 531 (2006).

Contract Interpretation Applicable to Restrictive Covenants — How Ambiguity Resolved — Restrictive Covenants Strictly Construed: General rules of contract interpretation apply to restrictive covenants, and any person having an interest under a restrictive covenant may seek declaratory relief concerning any question of construction arising under the covenant. When a restrictive covenant has been reduced to writing, the intent of the parties is to be ascertained, when possible, from the writing alone, and when the language of a covenant is clear, a court must apply the language as written. Restrictive covenants are strictly construed, and ambiguities in covenants are resolved to allow free use of property. The determination of whether an ambiguity exists in a restrictive covenant is a question of law for a court to decide, but mere disagreement between the parties as to interpretation of a restrictive covenant does not automatically create an ambiguity. Creveling v. Ingold, 2006 MT 57, 331 M 322, 132 P3d 531 (2006), followed in Czajkowski v. Meyers, 2007 MT 292, 339 M 503, 172 P3d 94 (2007). See also Newman v. Wittmer, 277 M 1, 917 P2d 926 (1996), and Toavs v. Sayre, 281 M 243, 934 P2d 165 (1997).

No Ambiguity in Restrictive Covenant Prohibiting Placement of Trailers and Mobile Homes Upon Property — Development of Recreational Vehicle Park Precluded: A restrictive covenant provided that no trailers or mobile homes were to be placed upon the property conveyed by a deed. The District Court held that the term "placed upon" contemplated permanent placement, and that temporary placement was therefore not precluded. The court also held that the covenant disallowed only trailer houses or mobile homes used for residences. The court thus concluded that the covenant did not disallow development of the property as a campground for recreational vehicles and travel trailers. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that language in a restrictive covenant should be understood in its ordinary and popular sense. It is not the role of a court to insert modifying language into clearly written and unambiguous written instruments, and the unambiguous language in the covenant contained no words to indicate the parties' intent to allow temporary trailers or mobile homes not used as residences. The District Court erred in modifying the covenant language to allow trailers to be placed on the property, so the conclusion that a campground for recreational vehicles and travel trailers was allowable was reversed. Creveling v. Ingold, 2006 MT 57, 331 M 322, 132 P3d 531 (2006).

Process for Amending Restrictive Covenant to Be Strictly Followed: Myers contended that a subdivision corporation did not follow the proper method for amending a restrictive covenant disallowing the rental of subdivision property for less than 30 days. The District Court disagreed, holding that the amendment was properly adopted and restrained Myers from renting the property for less than 30 days. Myers appealed. The Supreme Court held that because restrictive covenants must be strictly construed, when a covenant is amended to impose an impediment on use of the property, the method prescribed for amending the covenant must also be strictly followed. In this case, Myers established that the prescribed amendment method was not used, so the Supreme Court reversed the judgment. Point Serv. Corp. v. Myers, 2005 MT 322, 329 M 502, 125 P3d 1107 (2005).

Rules for Interpretation of Restrictive Covenants: Restrictive covenants are construed under the same rules of construction as other contracts. Declarations of covenants are read on their four corners as a whole, and terms are construed in their ordinary or popular sense. Bordas v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2004 MT 342, 324 M 263, 102 P3d 1219 (2004), following Windemere Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McCue, 1999 MT 292, 297 M 77, 990 P2d 769 (1999), and followed in Point Serv. Corp. v. Myers, 2005 MT 322, 329 M 502, 125 P3d 1107 (2005).

Potential Access Rights Merged With Deeds and Extinguished — Applicability of Contract Law Doctrine of Merger: Prior to Gehring's consent to sell 360 acres to APS Corporation (APS) in 1970, they entered an agreement that included a provision on access rights, whereby Gehring purported to grant future purchasers access to other land owned by Gehring for certain recreational purposes. After being told by the Gehring Ranch Corporation that they would not be allowed access to Gehring's land for recreation, the successors in interest to APS sought to enforce the agreement, alleging that they had been improperly excluded from the land and that the agreement created an easement over Gehring's land. The District Court granted summary judgment for the Gehring Ranch Corporation, noting that the agreement did not identify Gehring's other lands upon which an easement was purportedly created. The court also held that any agreement prior to execution of the deeds was merged with the deeds and that because the deeds transferring title did not provide for access, any access rights promised in the agreement were lost. The decision was appealed, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The clause in the agreement was part of a larger agreement to transfer property in the future, and Gehring did not intend to create an easement, but at most intended to provide for potential access privileges if certain conditions, such as creation of a property owners' association and adoption of rules governing the use of the recreational privileges, were met. The Supreme Court cited Urquhart v. Teller, 1998 MT 119, 288 M 497, 958 P2d 714 (1998), in applying the contract law doctrine of merger, holding that the deeds contained all the rights of the parties and that because no access privileges were mentioned in the deeds, any potential access rights referred to in the agreement merged with the deeds and were lost. Richman v. Gehring Ranch Corp., 2001 MT 293, 307 M 443, 37 P3d 732 (2001).

Agricultural-Use Only Covenant Running With the Land — Covenant Enforceable Against Subsequent Owners Who Had Notice of Covenant: The Turners placed an agricultural-use only restrictive covenant on a 12.3-acre parcel of property, which lay within the city limits of Helena, in order to sever it from a 14.5-acre parcel and avoid subdivision review. A private residence was located on the retained parcel. After dividing the property, the Turners sold the retained parcel to another party and quit-claimed the remaining 12.3-acre parcel to the Hamptons. Greg Hampton had owned the parcel prior to its acquisition by the Turners, who had originally agreed to reconvey the parcel to Hampton under an agreement that stemmed from ongoing divorce proceedings between Hampton and his former wife. Hampton had previously sought to divide the property with a restrictive covenant in the same manner as the Turners, but Hampton's certificate of survey was rejected because Hampton was not the titled owner at the time. Shortly after the 12.3-acre parcel was quit-claimed to them, the Hamptons sought to have the county lift the covenant, but the Board of County Commissioners refused to revoke the covenant. It was undisputed that the parcel was never used for any agricultural purposes and that the parcel was in a mostly residential area coupled with undeveloped open space. On appeal, the Hamptons did not question the legality of the process by which the county chose not to lift the covenant, but rather questioned whether the covenant was one that ran with the land, thereby binding the subsequent owners of both the covenantor and covenantee. Despite the fact that Hampton claimed to be unaware of the covenant when it was quit-claimed, the District Court concluded that Hampton was well aware of the covenant and took the property subject to the covenant as would anyone else. A narrow interpretation of the agricultural-use covenant requires a covenantor and a covenantee, and the county does not satisfy that requirement; nevertheless, the Turners' estate in the retained land was benefited in that neither the Turners nor their subsequent grantee was required to undergo subdivision review. Thus, the District Court did not err in determining that the Turners placed a valid agricultural-use only covenant on the 12.3-acre parcel that ran with the land. The Hamptons' argument that no "transaction" occurred, because the conveyance should have been simultaneous with the placement of the covenant, did not comport with the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act, which requires county approval of the exemption prior to the sale and conveyance of any divided property. That the county, as a party to the covenant, may choose to enforce the agricultural-use restriction was a foreseeable event that the Hamptons were willing to risk for the sake of taking title to the parcel. No material facts remained in dispute as to whether the Hamptons had notice of the restrictive covenant, so the covenant was enforceable against them as a matter of law. Hampton v. Lewis & Clark County, 2001 MT 81, 305 M 103, 23 P3d 908 (2001).

No Duty of County to Determine Whether Land Transaction Constituted Attempt to Evade Subdivision Act Review: A county has no affirmative duty to analyze or investigate an exemption claimed under 76-3-207 beyond the duty to accept for review a certificate of survey or other evidence establishing the claimed exemption, nor must any defined threshold of evidence be met in order for the county to accept a claimed exemption. Hampton v. Lewis & Clark County, 2001 MT 81, 305 M 103, 23 P3d 908 (2001).

Lack of Legal Description of Tracts in Covenant Amendment Not Fatal When Landowners Provided Actual Notice of Amendment: A supermajority of subdivision property owners authorized an amendment creating new and unexpected restrictions not contained or contemplated in the original declaration of restrictive covenants. Some landowners who disagreed with the amendment appealed, contending that it was invalid because it did not contain a legal description of the affected property. The District Court found the argument unpersuasive because the amendment referred to a previous amendment that did contain a legal description. The Supreme Court agreed, noting further that none of the appellants denied that they had actual notice of the amendment, so their claims of inadequate notice failed. Windemere Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McCue, 1999 MT 292, 297 M 77, 990 P2d 769, 56 St. Rep. 1173 (1999). See also Poncelet v. English, 243 M 481, 795 P2d 436, 47 St. Rep. 1342 (1990).

Original Declaration of Restrictive Covenants Broad Enough to Authorize New or Unexpected Restrictions: A supermajority of subdivision property owners authorized an amendment creating new and unexpected restrictions not contained or contemplated in the original declaration of restrictive covenants, resulting in assessment against subdivision landowners of the costs of paving a common road. Strictly construing the original amendment language, the District Court ruled that the clause in the covenants allowing amendment was broad enough to authorize new or unexpected restrictions. The Supreme Court agreed. Under the rule of strict construction, covenants should not be extended by implication or enlarged by construction. In this case, the drafters of the original covenants used universal language to describe the kinds of changes that could be made, clearly providing that each aspect of the covenants, conditions, restrictions, and uses was subject to amendment by a supermajority. Further, under the universal language, it was unnecessary that amendments to the restrictive covenants be connected to a provision in the original covenants. Windemere Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McCue, 1999 MT 292, 297 M 77, 990 P2d 769, 56 St. Rep. 1173 (1999), following Sunday Canyon Property Owners Ass'n v. Annett, 978 SW 2d 654 (Tex. App. 1998), and distinguishing Lakeland Property Owners Ass'n v. Larson, 459 NE 2d 1164 (Ill. App. 1984), Caughlin Ranch Homeowners Ass'n v. Caughlin Club, 849 P2d 310 (Nev. 1993), and Boyles v. Hausmann, 517 NW 2d 610 (Nebr. 1994).

Contract Provisions Merged Into Deed — Covenants Not Intended to Be Collateral Extinguished by Unrestricted Deed: A contract for the sale of property can contain a valid covenant running with the land, but generally, all provisions in a sale contract are merged into the warranty deed, founding the purchaser's rights in the deed covenants rather than in the executed contract, unless the parties intend for an agreement in a contract for sale to be collateral. Covenants relating to title, quantity, and possession of land are generally not collateral and thus merge into the deed. In the present case, the parties intended for the contract for deed and attendant restrictions to merge into the warranty deed, so the general rule of merger applied. The District Court did not err in refusing to enforce the covenants contained in the contract for deed. Urquhart v. Teller, 1998 MT 119, 288 M 497, 958 P2d 714, 55 St. Rep. 461 (1998), followed in Richman v. Gehring Ranch Corp., 2001 MT 293, 307 M 443, 37 P3d 732 (2001), and Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Olson, 2002 MT 158, 310 M 374, 50 P3d 1086 (2002).

Road Maintenance Assessments Within Scope of Declaration of Covenants — Past-Due Assessments Owing: Jacksons acknowledged that a subdivision declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions was in effect when they purchased their property but contended that the articles of incorporation and bylaws, which allowed for assessments for certain purposes, were recorded after the purchase and thus were not binding. Jacksons paid annual assessments for the years 1992-94 for road maintenance and snow removal, but stopped paying in 1995. The District Court's findings that the assessments were in concert with the overall intent of the declaration and were used for road-related purposes were not clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court affirmed the Jacksons' responsibility for past-due assessments plus interest and remanded for a determination of whether the articles of incorporation and bylaws applied to the Jacksons. Stageline Estates Homeowners' Ass'n, Inc. v. Jackson, 1998 MT 98, 288 M 405, 958 P2d 52, 55 St. Rep. 384 (1998).

Restrictive Covenant Prohibiting Mobile Homes — Application to Manufactured Home — "Mobile Home" Used in Ordinary and Popular Sense: Wittmers purchased a 26- by 60-foot manufactured home that was capable of being put on wheels and moved it to a subdivision in Gallatin County. The plaintiffs brought an action to restrain Wittmers from maintaining the home within the subdivision because it was in violation of a restrictive covenant that prohibited the use of "mobile homes". The Supreme Court held that the covenant was not ambiguous and that the term "mobile home", which was undefined in the covenants, should be understood in its ordinary and popular sense. The Supreme Court noted that other statutory definitions of the term "mobile home" could be looked to for guidance in determining the meaning of the term for the purposes of the covenants and that those other definitions include structures such as Wittmers'. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly construed the term "mobile home" to include the Wittmers' manufactured home because their home fell within other definitions of the term "mobile home", because the Supreme Court had previously construed the term to include homes such as the Wittmers' in two other cases before the court, and because the Wittmers' home had the characteristics of a mobile home. Newman v. Wittmer, 277 M 1, 917 P2d 926, 53 St. Rep. 516 (1996).

Reasonableness Standard Applicable to Actions of Architectural Committee: The power of approval or disapproval by an architectural committee must be governed by the applicable covenants and guidelines and must be exercised objectively, honestly, and reasonably. A committee may not subjectively impose its whims or aesthetic tastes on lot owners. The determination of whether the power was exercised reasonably or arbitrarily is a factual question to be determined in light of the circumstances. Whether a committee's disapproval of a builder's choice of roofing tile and exterior color was reasonable within the context of the applicable restrictive covenants was a question of fact, precluding summary judgment. Trieweiler v. Spicher, 254 M 321, 838 P2d 382, 49 St. Rep. 711 (1992), citing Gosnay v. Big Sky Owners Ass'n, 205 M 221, 666 P2d 1247 (1983).

No Express Warranties Found in Repair Contracts, Protective Covenants, and Preliminary Declaration: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of express warranties in failing to originally construct and later repair construction defects in fireplaces in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky, Montana, in accordance with applicable fire and building codes. The plaintiffs based their claim of express warranty upon the repair contracts, claiming that the contracts called for the repairs to be done according to applicable plumbing, electrical, and building codes. Plaintiffs also based their claim of express warranty on protective covenants that require compliance with the same codes and on the preliminary declaration for the condominiums that required compliance with those codes. The plaintiffs contended that the declaration ran with the land because it had to be recorded. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, dismissing Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly found that no express warranties existed. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990).

Failure to Create Home Owners' Association Not Breach of Protective Covenants: Property buyers claimed sellers breached the contractual protective covenants by failing to establish a home owners' association. The argument was discounted upon finding that: (1) the contractual conditions requiring establishment were not met at the time buyers defaulted on payments; (2) there was no deadline for establishment; (3) the provision for enforcement of covenants did not declare the entire contract terminated in the event of a covenant violation as it did for default on payments; and (4) buyers never gave notice to sellers that they considered failure to establish a home owners' association a violation of the contract. Burgess v. Shiplet, 230 M 387, 750 P2d 460, 45 St. Rep. 293 (1988).

Restrictive Covenant Allowing Disapproval of House Plans Based on "Harmony of External Design" — Specific Objective Standards Required: A restrictive covenant that allowed a design review committee to disapprove house plans and prevent construction based on "harmony of external design" was held to be too vague to be enforceable absent some general plan or scheme defining the standard of approval or an objective standard of design. Town & Country Estates Ass'n v. Slater, 227 M 489, 740 P2d 668, 44 St. Rep. 1257 (1987), contrasted in Jarrett v. Valley Park, Inc., 277 M 333, 922 P2d 485, 53 St. Rep. 671 (1996).

Community Home for Developmentally Disabled as "Single Family Dwelling": Because restrictive covenants are to be strictly construed to allow free use of property, a "community home" for five developmentally disabled children supervised by full-time paid houseparents as defined by 53-20-302 is a single housekeeping unit allowed within the intent of restrictive covenants requiring a subdivision to be composed of homes of "one unit single family dwellings". State ex rel. Child & Family Services, Inc. v. District Court, 187 M 126, 609 P2d 245 (1980).

Breach of Restrictive Covenant — Effect on Default: When lots within a legal subdivision are sold pursuant to a contract for deed, the sellers' breach of a restrictive covenant, occurring prior to the contracted due date, and relating to a 30-foot setback requirement on sellers' adjacent lot, does not excuse the buyer from his duty to make payment by the due date, and his right to recover damages is precluded by his failure to make such payment. Reinke v. Biegel, 185 M 31, 604 P2d 315 (1979).

Process for Amending Restrictive Covenant to Be Strictly Followed: Myers contended that a subdivision corporation did not follow the proper method for amending a restrictive covenant disallowing the rental of subdivision property for less than 30 days. Covenants to Be Read as Whole: The same rules of construction apply to interpreting protective covenants as apply to interpreting contracts. Therefore, such covenants must be read as a whole in order to ascertain their meaning, rather than reading any one covenant or part of a covenant in isolation. Gosnay v. Big Sky Owners Ass'n, 205 M 221, 666 P2d 1247, 40 St. Rep. 1229 (1983), followed in Jarrett v. Valley Park, Inc., 277 M 333, 922 P2d 485, 53 St. Rep. 671 (1996), and Tipton v. Bennett, 281 M 379, 934 P2d 203, 54 St. Rep. 229 (1997).

District Court's Failure to Enforce Restrictive Covenants Error: Landowners built a fence on their property in violation of a restrictive covenant after they had been denied permission to do so by the subdivision's architectural commission. Landowners had also requested and been denied permission to build a stable and to keep horses on their land. The District Court ruled that landowners were entitled to retain the fence, to build the stable, and to keep horses. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the evidence indicated that the architectural committee's actions had been governed by the restrictive covenants and were not an abuse of discretion. Gosnay v. Big Sky Owners Ass'n, 205 M 221, 666 P2d 1247, 40 St. Rep. 1229 (1983). See also Jarrett v. Valley Park, Inc., 277 M 333, 922 P2d 485, 53 St. Rep. 671 (1996).

Evidence of Changes External to Subdivision Relevant to Question of Violation of Restrictive Covenant: In an action by subdivision property owners for a preliminary injunction enjoining the use of a building for any purpose other than as a single-family dwelling pursuant to restrictive covenants, evidence as to changes in the character of the subdivision caused by developments in neighboring land is relevant to the question of whether the restrictions on the use of the dwelling are being violated. The evidence is admissible on the question of whether the character of the neighborhood has changed so radically as to render enforcement of the restrictions inequitable. Porter v. K & S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836, 38 St. Rep 648 (1981).

Creation of a Negative Easement Notwithstanding Absence of a Conveyance: A written agreement in the form of a court settlement not to use property as a restaurant and bar creates a valid and enforceable covenant which runs with the land and which is binding on each of the parties and their successors in interest notwithstanding absence of a conveyance of the estate to which the covenant pertains or words to that effect in the settlement agreement. The agreement was expressly intended to constitute a covenant running with the land and to bind the present owners, heirs, and assigns and was entered into voluntarily. A negative easement, as was created here, can be created by a grant (conveyance) or agreement; the agreement being construed as a grant is binding upon purchasers of the servient tenement who have actual or constructive notice of it. Reichert v. Weeden, 190 M 95, 618 P2d 1216, 37 St. Rep. 1788 (1980).

Restrictive Covenant Waived: Because plaintiffs voluntarily and intentionally waived their right to enforce against defendants a restrictive covenant prohibiting livestock by acquiescence in the presence of horses, they were estopped to assert the covenant against defendants. Kelly v. Lovejoy, 172 M 516, 565 P2d 321 (1977).

Restrictive Covenant as to Mobile Home — Includes Modular Home: Court erred in not granting plaintiff an injunction to prevent defendant from installing a modular home when a grant deed contained a restrictive covenant that provided no trailers or mobile homes could be used as a permanent residence. De Laurentis v. Vainio, 169 M 520, 549 P2d 461 (1976), followed in Newman v. Wittmer, 277 M 1, 917 P2d 926, 53 St. Rep. 516 (1996).

Lease With Right of First Refusal: Clause in lease providing lessee with right of first refusal if lessor should decide to sell was covenant that ran with land during term of lease and was apportioned among heirs of deceased lessor according to their respective interest in whole of property and bound them in same manner as if they had personally entered into covenant. Case Notes

Covenants Intended to Remain in Effect Until Rejected by Property Owners — Failure of Sufficient Tract Owners to Vote to Amend Covenants: Subdivision property owners entered covenants that would automatically extend for "successive period" of 10 years. The covenants could also be amended by a two-thirds vote of the owners of the original tracts. Some of the owners contended that the covenant extension language was ambiguous because it was not clear if the covenants would be renewed only for a single 10-year period or for successive 10-year periods. The District Court held that the language was not ambiguous, but rather contained a typographical error, and that successive 10-year periods applied. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Taken as a whole the covenant language intended that the covenants remain in effect until affirmatively rejected by the property owners. In this case, five of the eight original tract owners voted to amend the covenants, so without the required two-thirds vote, the covenants remained unamended. Brewer v. Hawkinson, 2009 MT 346, 353 M 154, 221 P3d 643 (2009). See also Creveling v. Ingold, 2006 MT 57, 331 M 322, 132 P3d 531 (2006).

No Ambiguity in Restrictive Covenant Prohibiting Placement of Trailers and Mobile Homes Upon Property — Development of Recreational Vehicle Park Precluded: A restrictive covenant provided that no trailers or mobile homes were to be placed upon the property conveyed by a deed. The District Court held that the term "placed upon" contemplated permanent placement, and that temporary placement was therefore not precluded. The court also held that the covenant disallowed only trailer houses or mobile homes used for residences. The court thus concluded that the covenant did not disallow development of the property as a campground for recreational vehicles and travel trailers. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that language in a restrictive covenant should be understood in its ordinary and popular sense. It is not the role of a court to insert modifying language into clearly written and unambiguous written instruments, and the unambiguous language in the covenant contained no words to indicate the parties' intent to allow temporary trailers or mobile homes not used as residences. The District Court erred in modifying the covenant language to allow trailers to be placed on the property, so the conclusion that a campground for recreational vehicles and travel trailers was allowable was reversed. Creveling v. Ingold, 2006 MT 57, 331 M 322, 132 P3d 531 (2006).

Recorded Waiver of Annexation Protest by Prior Property Owner — Present Owner Precluded From Protesting Annexation: In 1966, the city of Whitefish adopted a policy that a landowner outside the city boundary had to agree to waive the right to protest future annexation in order to continue to receive city water and sewer services. The waivers were properly recorded and later used by the city to invalidate annexation protests by current landowners in 1998. The District Court concluded that the waivers constituted a covenant running with the land and that the current owners were precluded from protesting the proposed annexation. On appeal, the current owners argued that the right to protest in 7-2-4710 resided with the current property owner and that the statutory consent to annexation authorized by 7-13-4314 only applied to the initiation of services and could not transfer to subsequent purchasers. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under 7-1-113, a self-governing entity may act even when there are controlling state laws as long as the local government's actions are not inconsistent with or lower or less stringent than state requirements. The purpose of 7-13-4314 is to ensure that property owners outside a municipality can request utility services and to ensure that the local government can later require annexation in exchange for utilities. Creating a covenant that runs with the land furthers this purpose. In addition, this section also provides that every covenant made for the direct benefit of the property runs with the land. The waivers directly benefited the property and were allowable, so the District Court was affirmed. Gregg v. Whitefish City Council, 2004 MT 262, 323 M 109, 99 P3d 151 (2004). See also State ex rel. Swart v. Molitor, 190 M 515, 621 P2d 1100 (1981).

Agricultural-Use Only Covenant Running With the Land — Covenant Enforceable Against Subsequent Owners Who Had Notice of Covenant: The Turners placed an agricultural-use only restrictive covenant on a 12.3-acre parcel of property, which lay within the city limits of Helena, in order to sever it from a 14.5-acre parcel and avoid subdivision review. A private residence was located on the retained parcel. After dividing the property, the Turners sold the retained parcel to another party and quit-claimed the remaining 12.3-acre parcel to the Hamptons. Greg Hampton had owned the parcel prior to its acquisition by the Turners, who had originally agreed to reconvey the parcel to Hampton under an agreement that stemmed from ongoing divorce proceedings between Hampton and his former wife. Hampton had previously sought to divide the property with a restrictive covenant in the same manner as the Turners, but Hampton's certificate of survey was rejected because Hampton was not the titled owner at the time. Shortly after the 12.3-acre parcel was quit-claimed to them, the Hamptons sought to have the county lift the covenant, but the Board of County Commissioners refused to revoke the covenant. It was undisputed that the parcel was never used for any agricultural purposes and that the parcel was in a mostly residential area coupled with undeveloped open space. On appeal, the Hamptons did not question the legality of the process by which the county chose not to lift the covenant, but rather questioned whether the covenant was one that ran with the land, thereby binding the subsequent owners of both the covenantor and covenantee. Despite the fact that Hampton claimed to be unaware of the covenant when it was quit-claimed, the District Court concluded that Hampton was well aware of the covenant and took the property subject to the covenant as would anyone else. A narrow interpretation of the agricultural-use covenant requires a covenantor and a covenantee, and the county does not satisfy that requirement; nevertheless, the Turners' estate in the retained land was benefited in that neither the Turners nor their subsequent grantee was required to undergo subdivision review. Thus, the District Court did not err in determining that the Turners placed a valid agricultural-use only covenant on the 12.3-acre parcel that ran with the land. The Hamptons' argument that no "transaction" occurred, because the conveyance should have been simultaneous with the placement of the covenant, did not comport with the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act, which requires county approval of the exemption prior to the sale and conveyance of any divided property. That the county, as a party to the covenant, may choose to enforce the agricultural-use restriction was a foreseeable event that the Hamptons were willing to risk for the sake of taking title to the parcel. No material facts remained in dispute as to whether the Hamptons had notice of the restrictive covenant, so the covenant was enforceable against them as a matter of law. Hampton v. Lewis & Clark County, 2001 MT 81, 305 M 103, 23 P3d 908 (2001).

No Duty of County to Determine Whether Land Transaction Constituted Attempt to Evade Subdivision Act Review: A county has no affirmative duty to analyze or investigate an exemption claimed under 76-3-207 beyond the duty to accept for review a certificate of survey or other evidence establishing the claimed exemption, nor must any defined threshold of evidence be met in order for the county to accept a claimed exemption. Hampton v. Lewis & Clark County, 2001 MT 81, 305 M 103, 23 P3d 908 (2001).

District Court's Failure to Enforce Restrictive Covenants Error: Landowners built a fence on their property in violation of a restrictive covenant after they had been denied permission to do so by the subdivision's architectural commission. Landowners had also requested and been denied permission to build a stable and to keep horses on their land. The District Court ruled that landowners were entitled to retain the fence, to build the stable, and to keep horses. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the evidence indicated that the architectural committee's actions had been governed by the restrictive covenants and were not an abuse of discretion. Gosnay v. Big Sky Owners Ass'n, 205 M 221, 666 P2d 1247, 40 St. Rep. 1229 (1983).

Rescission of Lease — Claim for Wrongful Retention of Fixtures Properly Dismissed: In an action for damages caused by breach of a lease, the District Court did not err in dismissing the defendants' counterclaim for wrongful retention of certain fixtures added to the property by the defendants. As a matter of law, the plaintiff cannot be unjustly enriched because a fixture, by definition, is a part of real property to be retained by the owner of the premises at the expiration of the lease. Certain fixtures may be removed but only during "the continuance of his [the tenant's] term". As no effort was made by the defendants to remove the fixtures until 9 months after vacating the premises, the defendants' counterclaim was properly rejected. Ragen v. Weston, 191 M 546, 625 P2d 557, 38 St. Rep. 456 (1981).

Apartment Attached to Rented Premises: Where tenant built a small apartment attached to rented premises with the intention that it be permanent and without an agreement with the lessor that he would be allowed to remove any of the items which went into the construction and where the improvement was so attached that removal injured the premises, the property and chattels used in building the apartment became fixtures as a matter of law and lessor who removed them after tenant left the premises was not guilty of conversion. Sanders v. Butte Motor Co., 142 M 524, 385 P2d 263 (1963).

Manner of Attachment: While question of whether personal property has become affixed to the land is one concerning the intention of the affixer, it is presumed that when the property is affixed it is intended to become a part of the realty. Generally, the manner in which the attachment is made, the adaptability of the thing attached to the use to which the realty is applied, together with the intention of the one making the attachment, determine whether the thing attached is realty or personalty. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 117 M 467, 161 P2d 526 (1945).

Tanks:

Two 12,000-gallon tanks weighing 4 tons each, installed on realty by owner of the realty for use in connection with oil business and held in place by their weight without being otherwise attached, became part of the realty. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 117 M 467, 161 P2d 526 (1945).

Two 15,000-gallon tanks installed by defendant on realty which defendant mistakenly believed that it owned and used by defendant for 5 years in the oil business conducted on the land were part of the realty and became plaintiff's property upon plaintiff's establishing its title to the land. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 117 M 467, 161 P2d 526 (1945).

Two 15,000-gallon tanks purchased under conditional sales contract and affixed to realty by owner and used in owner's oil business retained their character of personal property under provisions of conditional sales contract. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 117 M 467, 161 P2d 526 (1945).

Fence: Where one places a fence on the land of another without an agreement permitting him to do so, it belongs to the owner of the land unless he chooses to require its removal, the presumption, disputable in nature, being that one in possession of land is also the owner of the fixtures thereon. Schmuck v. Beck, 72 M 606, 234 P 477 (1925).

Railroad: Whether rails furnished by a railroad company to a mining company and laid by the latter upon its property to serve its own purposes were trade fixtures within meaning of this section depended upon relation between the parties at time rails were laid and intention of parties with respect to them. Helena & Livingston Smelting & Reduction Co. v. N. Pac. Ry., 62 M 281, 205 P 224, 21 ALR 1080 (1922).

Bridge: A person who enters upon and voluntarily constructs a bridge so as to connect portions of an existing public highway separated by a river is not the owner of the bridge, because to all intents and purposes it belongs to the public. State ex rel. Donlan v. Bd. of County Comm'rs,

Bank Claim to Property Alleged as Fixtures — Inferior to Owners' Property Rights: Mills took out a loan to acquire personal property to be used in a roller-skating facility, including a removable heating system, and paid off the loan about 18 months later. Mills later sold the roller-skating facility, including the heating system, to Davises. The transaction was financed through the Little Horn State Bank. The contract provided that in case Davises defaulted, possession of the real and personal property would return to Mills and Davises would retain no further interest. Davises defaulted and entered an agreement and release with the bank whereby the property was deeded to the bank in consideration of the bank satisfying the mortgage debt. Mills later offered to sell the heating system to the bank, but the bank refused and advised Mills that the bank claimed the property as fixtures pursuant to Davises' mortgage, whereupon Mills removed the heating system. However, because Mills were at all times the owners of the personal property, the bank obtained no more interest than that held by Davises. Therefore, the bank's claim to the heating system as fixtures was inferior and subject to the property rights of Mills. Little Horn St. Bank v. Mill, 233 M 372, 760 P2d 91, 45 St. Rep. 1563 (1988).

Ambiguity of Lease Concerning Fixtures — Conformity to General Principles: Kevin Cumiskey leased a restaurant from Elizabeth Bradley. The lease provided that Cumiskey could make improvements and alterations to the premises that were to remain Cumiskey's property. Fixtures were also to be Cumiskey's. Cumiskey was to insure Bradley's interest, which he failed to do. The restaurant was severely damaged through suspected arson. The insurer brought a declaratory judgment action, and Bradley counterclaimed for damages or loss on the basis of the failure to insure. Damages were an issue at trial, but the trial court granted summary judgment for Bradley on the issue of liability. The Supreme Court, on appeal, held that the District Court had properly found the terms on fixtures and improvements in the lease ambiguous and used an appropriate rule of construction to interpret these clauses. The lease was prepared by an attorney for Cumiskey. Cumiskey testified he intended to use the lease to coerce Bradley into selling him the property. The court properly construed the ambiguity against Cumiskey, the person causing it, and found that the specific provision controlled the general provision and that such interpretation was in conformance with general landlord and tenant law in Montana. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cumiskey, 204 M 350, 665 P2d 223, 40 St. Rep. 891 (1983).

Case Notes

Property Boundary Properly Established Following Accretion and Avulsion of River: The District Court found that the meander channel of the Sun River between plaintiffs' and one defendant's property moved south by accretion from where it was depicted in a 1906 government survey into a channel depicted in a 1937 aerial photograph and that the channel moved north by avulsion to its present channel in 1916. The court further concluded that the Sun River between plaintiffs' and another defendant's property also moved north by avulsion in 1948. The record amply supported the 1906 accretion that created the lots in question, at which time the property boundary moved with the water line. However, when the river avulsed to its present location in 1916, the property boundary did not move. Likewise, when the river avulsed north in 1948, the property boundary also did not move, so the District Court properly determined the boundaries between the lots after considering the avulsion and accretion of the river, and judgment was affirmed. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Access Right of Riparian Owner Not Destroyed by Changing Water Level: A riparian owner has a right of access to the water, and his access cannot be destroyed by the changing of the water level by gradual recession. He has the right to preserve his contact with the water by appropriating the accretions of the land that form along the shore and are exposed by reliction. Land formed by accretion or reliction becomes part of the shore, and the riparian owner acquires title to the water. He has a share in the land left exposed by the receding of the lake. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Division of Relicted Exposed Shoreline — General Principle: The general principle that governs how a relicted exposed shoreline is divided between lot owners on a lake is that any division must be equitable and proportional so far as to give each owner a share of the land to be divided relative to his portion of the original shoreline. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Severed Mineral Estate — Subject to Accretion and Erosion: The mineral interests in land bordering the Yellowstone River on the east were severed from the surface estate in 1938. The original survey of the area was done in 1884. Since the time of the original survey, the Yellowstone River has gradually moved eastward. In a quiet title action, a question of first impression was presented, viz., whether a severed mineral estate bordering a navigable waterway is subject to the doctrines of accretion and erosion. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court's reliance on Nilson v. Tenneco Oil Co., 614 P2d 36 (Okla. 1980). The court held that a severed mineral estate is subject to the doctrines of accretion and erosion, and that prior exception by a riparian owner on one side of a navigable waterway will not work to divest the state (owner of the land underlying the waterway) or another riparian owner of ownership in lands underlying navigable waterways or minerals situated in accreted lands. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 205 M 200, 667 P2d 406, 40 St. Rep. 1214 (1983).

Accretions Included in Conveyance: If a conveyance describes adjoining riparian land, then accretions or the right thereto, unless excepted or reserved, pass to a purchaser although the accretions are not described in the conveyance. Jackson v. St., 181 M 257, 593 P2d 432 (1979), followed in Filler v. McDaniel, 230 M 10, 747 P2d 1365, 44 St. Rep. 2211 (1987).

Large Excess of Land Left Between Shore and Meander Line When Surveyed — Remains Public Domain: Where shown in condemnation action by United States that lands in question were in place when survey made and large body of unsurveyed land in controversy lay between meander line and low watermark of Missouri River, such lands (and accretions thereto) remained and continued to be public domain, and where river subsequently changed its channel, when ice broke up in spring, by cutting across an oxbow loop, the abandoned bed belonged to the state under 70-1-202. U.S. v. Eldredge, 33 F. Supp. 337 (D.C. Mont. 1940).

Accreted Lands — Definition:

Accreted lands are additions to the area of land by reason of the gradual deposit of solid material by water, producing dry land which before was covered by water, along the banks of a stream, whether navigable or not, belonging to the riparian owner. Unless excepted or reserved, accretions to land pass to purchaser although not described in deed. Smith v. Whitney, 105 M 523, 74 P2d 450 (1937).

Under this section and 70-18-204, accreted lands, that is, additions to the area of real estate from the gradual deposit by water of solid material, whether mud, sand, or sediment, producing dry land which before was covered by water along the banks of a navigable or nonnavigable stream, belong to the riparian owner. Bode v. Rollwitz, 60 M 481, 199 P 688 (1921).

Meander Lines — Water the Real Boundary: The general rule is that meander lines run in surveying fractional portions are not run as boundaries of the tract but for defining sinuosities of the banks of stream to ascertain quantity of the upland. The title of the grantee of such land is not limited to the meander line, and the water constitutes the real boundary line. Smith v. Whitney, 105 M 523, 74 P2d 450 (1937).

Tax Sale — Right Acquired by Purchaser: Accreted lands are included in the assessment of lands described in accordance with government survey, even though the assessment is limited by its terms to the number of acres specified in the survey, and the tax deed purchaser acquires the same title to such lands, whether described or not, as he does to the upland adjoining described by the survey. Smith v. Whitney, 105 M 523, 74 P2d 450 (1937).

70-18-203. Island formed in navigable stream.

Case Notes

Title to Minnie Island Vested in State: Minnie Island formed in the channel of the Yellowstone River, a navigable stream under the criteria of Mont. Coalition for Stream Access v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163 (1984), sometime between 1889 and 1916. Although no longer completely surrounded by water, the District Court correctly found that the island was not formed by accretion and therefore was not subject to an adjacent landowner's claim of ownership. Absent title or prescription to the contrary, title to Minnie Island vested in the state. Edwards v. Severin, 241 M 168, 785 P2d 1022, 47 St. Rep. 169 (1990).

70-18-204. Island formed in nonnavigable stream.

Case Notes

Accreted Land — Belongs to Riparian Owner: Under 70-18-201 and this section, accreted lands, that is, additions to the area of real estate from the gradual deposit by water of solid material, whether mud, sand, or sediment, producing dry land which before was covered by water along the banks of a navigable or nonnavigable stream, belong to the riparian owner. Bode v. Rollwitz, 60 M 481, 199 P 688 (1921).

70-18-206. Sudden change in river or stream.

CHAPTER 19
REAL PROPERTY ACTIONS GENERALLY
LIMITATIONS AND ADVERSE POSSESSION

Chapter Case Notes

Sufficient Evidence to Support Public Access to Land Via Old County Road: Plaintiff sued to quiet title to any interest in a property that once constituted an old county road right-of-way and that had fallen into disuse. The District Court held that the public, including the state, had access to a particular section of land via the right-of-way, which was never formally abandoned. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court's ruling was supported by an 1893 petition for the roadway, a 1902 USGS map, a 1915 railroad map, a 1938 aerial photograph, testimony by the state's expert witness, and a viewing of the property by the District Court Judge. The Supreme Court declined to reweigh the evidence, and despite conflicting evidence, the evidence before the District Court was substantial and credible and supported the District Court's ruling. Only A Mile, LLP v. St., 2010 MT 99, 356 Mont. 213, 233 P.3d 320.

Ambiguous Deeds of Conveyance — Intent of Parties Properly Considered: A dispute arose in a quiet title action based on subdivision surveys that differed from the original government survey. The District Court held that the property belonged to defendants, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Inconsistencies between the original plat and the location of the subdivision surveyor's monuments created an ambiguity. References to quarter section lines and quarter corners in the original survey were definite and ascertainable, and the subdivision surveyor's improperly placed monuments were considered false particulars frustrating the conveyance. The District Court properly applied Brown's Boundary Control and Legal Principles (4th Ed. 1995) to determine that the subdivision surveyor's monuments conflicted with the government's original monument and correctly considered the intent of the parties in interpreting the surveys and conveyances. Further, the original plat was part of the deeds of conveyance in defendants' chain of title, so the District Court correctly allowed the certificate of dedication into evidence. Olson v. Jude, 2003 MT 186, 316 M 438, 73 P3d 809 (2003).

Use of Original Survey for Reference — Proper Determination of Tract Boundary: A dispute arose in a quiet title action based on subdivision surveys that differed from the original government survey. When surveyors use corner sections and lines to base measurements and plot tracts, it is essential that they properly identify and authenticate the original monument. Original corners established by a government survey, if those corners can be found, or places where they were originally established, if those places can be definitely determined, are conclusive without regard to whether they were located correctly or not and must remain the true corners or monuments by which to determine the boundaries. The footsteps of the original surveyor should be followed, so far as discoverable on the ground by monuments, and it is immaterial if the lines run by the original surveyor are incorrect. Olson v. Jude, 2003 MT 186, 316 M 438, 73 P3d 809 (2003). See also Vaught v. McClymond, 116 M 542, 155 P2d 612 (1945), and Helehan v. Ueland, 223 M 228, 725 P2d 1192 (1986).

Acceptance of Payments Irrelevant When Service of Notice Insufficient: The real estate contract entered into by the Ahrens and Cottle provided that all notices between the parties be delivered personally or by registered mail. When Cottle failed to make several underlying payments to the bank, the Ahrens made the payments to the bank and subsequently, in November 1993, filed suit to cancel the contract for deed and for possession of the property. In December, Cottle cured the default by making the late payments to the bank. The lower court held that the Ahrens had waived their right to default by allowing Cottle to make payments curing the default. The Supreme Court held that the payments were irrelevant because the Ahrens had never served notice of default on Cottle as required by the contract and therefore could not accelerate the contract and seek to regain possession of the property. Ahrens v. Cottle, 271 M 339, 896 P2d 1127, 52 St. Rep. 485 (1995).

Failure to Comply With Contract Notice Provisions: The real estate contract entered into by the Ahrens and Cottle provided that all notices between the parties be delivered personally or by registered mail. When Cottle failed to make several underlying payments to the bank, the Ahrens posted a notice of default on Cottle's back door. The Supreme Court held that although Montana case law has held that failure to adhere to technical requirements of notice is immaterial if an individual has knowledge of the notice, in the present case, the posting of the notice was a material flaw in service. Ahrens v. Cottle, 271 M 339, 896 P2d 1127, 52 St. Rep. 485 (1995), distinguishing Hares v. Nelson, 195 M 463, 637 P2d 19 (1981), and LeClair v. Reitner, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740 (1988).

Landowner Testimony — Value of Property: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, the purchaser was allowed to estimate the value of the resort he purchased from the defendant seller. A landowner has the right to testify as to the value of his property. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Conflicting Surveys: At a trial between two adjacent landowners over the exact location of the boundary, conflicting findings of several surveyors were submitted into evidence. The District Court accepted the defendant's survey, and the Supreme Court affirmed, finding substantial credible evidence that defendant's surveyor was not only experienced but also an experienced surveyor of the property in question, having surveyed the same section line in 1949 and 1976. Helehan v. Ueland, 223 M 228, 725 P2d 1192, 43 St. Rep. 1679 (1986).

Part 1
General Provisions

70-19-101. Action defined.

Case Notes

Release of Real Estate Commission Dependent Upon Outcome of Property Dispute — No Cause of Action Absent Actual Interest in Property: Goodman Realty placed its $10,000 real estate commission in escrow to indemnify Smiths in the event that a particular drainfield easement did not exist. Because release of the commission depended on the resolution of the easement dispute between Smiths and Monson, Goodman Realty argued that its pecuniary interest in the outcome of the dispute created a cause of action between Goodman Realty and Monson. However, Goodman Realty alleged no interest in the property of either Smiths or Monson, its only interest being the release of the indemnification sum, which was wholly unrelated to the property interests at issue. Goodman Realty's complaint did not allege that any legal duty was breached by Monson. Dismissal of the complaint for failure to clearly state a cause of action was proper. Goodman Realty, Inc. v. Monson, 267 M 228, 883 P2d 121, 51 St. Rep. 1074 (1994).

70-19-102. Action affecting title or possession — filing as constructive notice.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Lis Pendens Action Not Affecting Title Inappropriate: A lis pendens action that does not affect the possession of, title to, or interest in real property is not authorized pursuant to this section. West v. The Club at Spanish Peaks, LLC, 2008 MT 183, 343 M 434, 186 P3d 1228 (2008), following Paulson v. Lee, 229 M 164, 745 P2d 359 (1987).

Authorized Notice of Lis Pendens Not Subject to Slander of Title Action: Where the underlying action affected title to or possession of property, notice of lis pendens was proper. Because the notice was authorized, it was privileged and not subject to a slander of title action. The defense of privilege in filing the notice was improperly denied. Paulson v. Lee, 229 M 164, 745 P2d 359, 44 St. Rep. 1864 (1987).

Claim of Title or Right of Possession Not Required if Title or Right of Possession Affected — Lis Pendens Authorized: In an action to stop construction, sale, or lease of a four-unit dwelling, the party filing a notice of lis pendens was not required to show an actual claim of title to or right of possession of the property. The relief sought would have affected title to or right of possession of the property; therefore, the notice of lis pendens was authorized under this section. Paulson v. Lee, 229 M 164, 745 P2d 359, 44 St. Rep. 1864 (1987).

Lis Pendens — Purpose — Application: The purpose underlying lis pendens statutes is to provide a better form of notice of pending litigation to those interested in the subject property. The doctrine applies to all persons acquiring an interest in the subject of the litigation during the pendency of the action. Fox v. Clarys, 227 M 194, 738 P2d 104, 44 St. Rep. 1004 (1987), followed in Baston v. Baston, 2010 MT 207, 357 Mont. 470, 240 P.3d 643.

Assignability of Judgment on Appeal: The Supreme Court rejected appellants' contention that since a judgment on appeal is not final, it is not assignable. The court distinguished Montana's lis pendens statute from that of other states which specifically prohibit assignment of an interest in the subject matter of a case on appeal. Janke v. Smyk, 210 M 206, 683 P2d 942, 41 St. Rep. 1011 (1984).

Publication of Lis Pendens Absolutely Privileged: Where plaintiff sought specific performance against a corporation to perform a written option to lease land and filed a lis pendens, it was error for the court not to grant plaintiff summary judgment on defendant's cross-complaint requesting damages for slander of title because the filing of a lis pendens is absolutely privileged without reference to the merits of the underlying action. Hauptman v. Edwards, Inc., 170 M 310, 553 P2d 975 (1976).

Affirmative Defenses: Affirmative defenses are not necessarily claims for affirmative relief as contemplated by this section. White v. Connor, 138 M 1, 354 P2d 722 (1960).

70-19-201. Actions concerning mining claims governed by local rules.

Case Notes

Conflict With Statute: A custom among miners in a certain district that 20 days' labor should constitute $100 worth of work is in conflict with section 2324, Revised Statutes of the United States (30 U.S.C. 28); the test is not the number of days' work performed but the worth or reasonable value of the labor performed or improvements made. Penn v. Oldhauber, 24 M 287, 61 P 649 (1900).

70-19-202. Abuse of property held jointly or in common — action — mining property.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Breach of Joint Venture Fiduciary Trust — Award of Investment Plus Interest Affirmed: Kelly and Rust agreed to purchase land, subdivide it, and sell it at a profit. Rust advanced Kelly $4,000 as one-half the purchase price. Kelly paid the $4,000 balance and recorded the deed, but did not include Rust on the recorded deed. Rust moved from the area and later attempted, through his agent, to purchase Kelly's interest in the land. The agent was told the land was already sold, so Rust brought an action to recover his investment plus interest. The trial court properly held that: (1) the parties had entered into a joint venture; (2) Kelly was required in equity to hold the property in a constructive trust; (3) Kelly breached the joint venture fiduciary duty and attempted to deprive Rust of his interest in the property; and (4) Rust was entitled to return of his $4,000 investment plus interest. Rust v. Kelly, 228 M 220, 741 P2d 786, 44 St. Rep. 1471 (1987).

Unlawful Detainer by Tenant in Common — Amendment of Pleading Properly Denied: Where the plaintiff and her sister leased farmland they owned as tenants in common to the defendant for a 6-year period and the sister conveyed her interest in the property to the defendant shortly before the expiration of the lease, the court did not err, in an action by the plaintiff brought in 1974 for an accounting of rents and profits from the defendant, in refusing to allow the plaintiff to plead and prove an unlawful detainer against the defendant. Leave of court should not be granted to allow amendments that present theories totally inapplicable to the case. As a tenant in common is an owner of an undivided interest in the property, a claim of unlawful detainer may not be asserted against a cotenant, but only against a tenant for a term less than life. A cotenant is allowed to possess and use commonly held property, and an action will lie for waste but not unpermitted use. Fry v. Heble, 191 M 272, 623 P2d 963, 38 St. Rep. 228 (1981).

Willful and Malicious Deprivation of Use of Property — Damages: In an action for actual and punitive damages for removal of a gate and approach to property of which plaintiff was a cotenant with defendant's wife, the Supreme Court found substantial evidence to support the findings of fact and conclusions of law determining the existence of a willful and malicious deprivation of the use of the property as well as the amount of damages (actual damages of $230 and punitive damages of $1000). Toeckes v. Baker, 188 M 109, 611 P2d 609 (1980).

Redemption From Tax Sale: Where a mining company neglected to pay its taxes, a cotenant, having a right to operate the mining property and pay all expenses of such operation and account to other cotenants, under 15-18-101 (repealed, 1987), had sufficient interest in patented mining claims, separately assessed to the mining company, to permit her to redeem the property from a tax sale. Dudley v. Higgins, 141 M 140, 375 P2d 689 (1962), followed in Kneedler v. League Wide, Inc., 1999 MT 80, 294 M 101, 979 P2d 163, 56 St. Rep. 334 (1999).

Action for Profits: An action for the reasonable value of the use and occupation of a city lot is maintainable by one cotenant against another as to the net profits resulting from such occupation, whether they be the result of rents received from third persons holding under one cotenant or from a profitable use of the common property by the cotenant himself. Ayotte v. Nadeau, 32 M 498, 81 P 145 (1905).

Contracts Between Tenants: Tenants in common may contract with reference to the use of the common property. This is particularly the case under the statute, since their respective interests partake in great measure of the nature of estates in severalty. Ayotte v. Nadeau, 32 M 498, 81 P 145 (1905).

Retroactive Application:

This act is inapplicable to a cotenancy created prior to its passage. Ayotte v. Nadeau, 32 M 498, 81 P 145 (1905).

The provisos of this act apply to cotenants whose estates were in existence when the law was passed, and as to such estates, the act is an attempt to disturb or destroy vested rights and is therefore inoperative and void. Butte & Boston Consol. Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 25 M 41, 63 P 825 (1901).

Mining Property:

Each tenant in common has the right to have mining property stand as it is until it is finally partitioned, and there must be a clear showing to justify a court in invading this right and mining the property through a receiver. Heinze v. Kleinschmidt, 25 M 89, 63 P 927 (1901).

To be excepted from liabilities for injury under this section, a cotenant, entering upon mining property and enjoying the rights given by the proviso, must comply strictly with the obligations attached to the privilege of such entry. Butte & Boston Consol. Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 24 M 125, 60 P 1039 (1900).

Unless a working cotenant brings himself squarely within the provisos of this act, the law preserves to his nonworking cotenant exactly the same actions against such working cotenant as he had before the act was in force. Butte & Boston Consol. Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 24 M 125, 60 P 1039 (1900).

Where one cotenant occupies mining property in compliance with the provisions of this act, the statute does not always give to another cotenant an equal right to mine elsewhere on the same claim. Butte & Boston Consol. Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 24 M 125, 60 P 1039 (1900).

Injunction:

A cotenant not joining in the operation of a mine and suing for damages for the removal of ore therefrom through another mine owned by his tenant in common, to which plaintiff had no right of access, was entitled to an injunction pendente lite to restrain such removal, though defendant offered to account for ore extracted therefrom. Butte & Boston Consol. Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 24 M 125, 60 P 1039 (1900).

A cotenant, whose estate was created before the 1899 amendment to this section became operative, is entitled to restrain by injunction such mining and removal of ore from the common property by his cotenant as is therein prohibited, provided that the remedy at law is inadequate and the threatened injury irreparable. Butte & Boston Consol. Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 24 M 125, 60 P 1039 (1900).

70-19-203. Adverse claims under acts of congress.

Compiler's Comments

Federal Statute — Adverse Claims: 30 U.S.C. 30, 17 Stat. 93.

Case Notes

Res Judicata: Where in an adverse suit arising out of a patent proceeding to mining ground, the subject matter was land—millsites—and in a later one the question was whether mill tailings deposited on such sites were personal property, a judgment of dismissal on the merits entered in the former on failure of plaintiff to plead further after demurrer to the complaint had been sustained was not res judicata in the second suit, the subject matter in litigation of the two suits not having been the same. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

Pleadings: This section applies especially to adverse claims in patent proceedings and seems to contemplate a special action, equitable in its nature. It has not, however, changed the rule of pleading established by previous decisions, and the fact of the filing of the claim in the land office within the prescribed time and the bringing of the action within the prescribed limitation must be alleged or the complaint will not support the judgment. Thornton v. Kaufman, 35 M 181, 88 P 796 (1907).

Quiet Title Action Distinguished: By the adoption of this section, the Legislature recognized the distinction between ordinary actions to determine adverse claims, authorized by the statute in relation to suits to quiet title, and adverse claims to determine the right of the contestant to a patent. Thornton v. Kaufman, 35 M 181, 88 P 796 (1907).

Amendment of Complaint: An action under this section proceeds to judgment as other actions, and the court may permit amendments to the complaint so as to make it state a cause of action, even after the 30 days prescribed in the federal statute have expired. Woody v. Hinds, 30 M 189, 76 P 1 (1904).

Equitable Action: Where the complaint in an action to determine an adverse claim to a mining location set up the filing of plaintiff's adverse claim, as provided by this section, after defendant had applied for a patent, and prayed that defendant be required to set forth the nature of his claim to the ground and that all adverse claims of defendant might be determined by the judgment of the court and the answer denied plaintiff's ownership and possession and prayed that defendant be adjudged to be the owner and entitled to possession of the premises sued for, the suit was one of equitable cognizance and not an action at law. Mares v. Dillon, 30 M 117, 75 P 963 (1904).

Land Office Proceedings Required: This section clearly implies that in an action to determine an adverse claim to a mining location, it is useless for the court to proceed to judgment, unless it appears that an application for patent has been made and that an adverse claim has been filed and allowed in the proper land office. Hopkins v. Butte Copper Co., 29 M 390, 74 P 1081 (1904).

Intervention: One who has not filed his adverse claim under the act of Congress cannot intervene in an action to determine adverse claims to a location, though he claims an interest in the premises adverse to plaintiff and defendant. Murray v. Polglase, 23 M 401, 59 P 439 (1899), explained in Poore v. Kaufman, 44 M 248, 119 P 785 (1911).

Possession Not Required: One who has made an agreement to convey and has given possession to the party to whom conveyance is to be made can maintain action, despite state law limiting actions to parties in possession or their tenants. Wolverton v. Nichols, 119 US 485, 30 L Ed 474, 7 S Ct 289 (1886), reversing 5 M 89, 2 P 308 (1883).

Specific Statutory Provisions: Where there are specific limitations concerning placer mines and quartz lodes, these control the general provisions relating to real estate. Davis v. Clark, 2 M 310 (1875).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Arbitrarily Fixed Cost Erroneous: An order granting an inspection of the underground workings of mining property in controversy, which arbitrarily fixed the amount to be paid by plaintiff to defendant for lowering and hoisting plaintiff's agents engaged in such inspection at a certain sum, without hearing any evidence as to the actual cost, was erroneous. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 30 M 206, 76 P 206 (1904).

Failure of Order to Provide for Compensation Defective: An order granting an inspection is a defective order which fails to provide for the compensation contemplated by this section. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 29 M 105, 74 P 132 (1903).

Adjudication of Costs: A finding that an inspection and survey were necessary to enable a party to properly present his case was an adjudication of costs attendant on procuring the order for the survey. King v. Allen, 29 M 5, 73 P 1107 (1903).

Witness Fees as Proper Costs: Under this section and 25-10-201, fees paid a witness testifying on the hearing for an order of inspection and survey, fees paid a witness at the hearing of an order to show cause, fees for summoning such witness, and the expense of preparing a map are prima facie proper items of costs. King v. Allen, 29 M 5, 73 P 1107 (1903).

Costs of Survey and Inspection — Paid by Petitioner: The costs of obtaining the order under this section, as well as the costs of the survey and inspection, should be paid by the petitioner. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Court, 26 M 396, 68 P 570, 69 P 103 (1902).

Equitable Jurisdiction: Equity has no jurisdiction, independent of statute and in the absence of a suit to order inspection of property. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Court, 26 M 396, 68 P 570, 69 P 103 (1902).

Facilities Used for Inspection: In an order granted under this section, the court may provide that all appliances in use to facilitate ingress and egress be made available to the person making the inspection, the additional expense being paid by the petitioner. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Court, 26 M 396, 68 P 570, 69 P 103 (1902).

Interest in Property Required: This section is not applicable where the petitioner asserts no interest in the property of which inspection is sought or through which entry is necessary to inspect adjoining property. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Court, 26 M 396, 68 P 570; 26 M 412, 68 P 1134, rehearing denied, 69 P 103 (1902); State ex rel. Geyman v. District Court, 26 M 433, 68 P 797 (1902).

Necessity for Inspection: Inspection should not be granted of a mine not described in the petition, and the order for inspection and survey of a mine for protection of petitioner's interest therein or in another mine should be limited to the necessities of the case and explicitly state how far it may go. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Court, 26 M 396, 68 P 570, 69 P 103 (1902).

Owner's Right to Follow a Lode Into Another Claim Not an Interest in the Other Claim: To entitle one under this section to an inspection of a claim for the purpose of ascertaining or enforcing his right or interest in another claim, he must have an interest in the first claim, and the right of one owning a claim to follow a lode having its apex therein into another claim is not such an interest in the latter claim as to authorize his inspection and survey of it. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Court, 26 M 396, 68 P 570, 69 P 103 (1902).

Constitutionality: The authority bestowed by this section does not empower the District Court to grant an order that may be made unjust or oppressive, nor does it deprive the adverse party of his property without due process of law. Therefore it is not unconstitutional, even though it does not require the interest of the petitioner to be defined and permits such examination before the commencement of any action by the parties, without bond, since such proceeding is the proper mode of securing the best evidence, and even though it does not provide for an appeal from such order, as the proceedings may be reviewed by the Writ of Certiorari. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. v. Mont. Co., 9 M 288, 23 P 510 (1890), affirmed in 152 US 160, 38 L Ed 398, 14 S Ct 506 (1894).

No Express Federal Reservation of Public Road Pursuant to Land Patent — Easement by Reference Reversed: The District Court held that the federal government expressly reserved a public road across patented mining claims by referring in an 1896 federal land patent to a mineral survey that depicted a road labeled "ROAD". Citing Leo Sheep Co. v. U.S., 440 US 668 (1979), the Supreme Court disagreed. Plaintiff cited no authority for the proposition that a reference in a federal land patent to a mineral survey that depicts a road labeled "ROAD" qualified as an express reservation under federal law. Rather, the inference prompted by the presence of certain other express reservations in the patent and the absence of an express reservation for a particular right-of-way was that no right-of-way was reserved. The intent to create an easement must be clearly and unmistakably communicated on the referenced plat or certificate of survey, using labeling or other express language, and an easement may not be inferred or implied from an unlabeled or inadequately described swath of land or other depiction appearing on a certificate of survey. Additionally, the Supreme Court has recognized the creation of privately held easements only by reference and has never applied the doctrine to create a public road, and the court declined to do so in this case. Nothing in the field notes or in the patent evidenced an intent by the federal government to reserve a public road across a patented mining claim, and the District Court erred in finding that the road traversing the mining claim was a public road pursuant to an express easement by reservation created in the mining survey and referenced in the conveying documents of the mining claim. The District Court was reversed. Our Lady of the Rockies, Inc. v. Peterson, 2008 MT 110, 342 M 393, 181 P3d 631 (2008).

Failure to Establish Public Use: Plaintiff failed to establish use by the public of the exact route claimed over public land for the 10-year period prior to 1927, when a U.S. patent was issued to defendant. The District Court erred in finding that the road was in place, was in use, and was a granted public road pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 932 (repealed 1976). Parker v. Elder, 233 M 75, 758 P2d 292, 45 St. Rep. 1305 (1988).

Receipt From Land Office: In an action of ejectment to recover possession of a mining claim, a receipt issued by the receiver of the U.S. land office, which failed to show that plaintiff had made the purchase or was entitled to patent, was not such a certificate as is referred to in this section and was valueless as evidence, but its admission in evidence was without prejudice where plaintiff's title was amply sustained by other proof. Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910).

Part 4
Limitations and Adverse Possession

Part Case Notes

Accrual of Adverse Use Prohibited When Property Owned by Government: Because a private party cannot obtain a prescriptive easement against the federal government, a private party's adverse use of property did not begin to run until the federal government conveyed title to the property to a private entity. Burcalow Family, LLC v. Corral Bar, Inc., 2013 MT 345, 372 Mont. 498, 313 P.3d 182.

Permission to Use Dock Granted by Prior Owner — Whether Permission Carries Over to Subsequent Owners to Be Evaluated on Case-by-Case Basis — No Prescriptive Easement: In urging the Supreme Court to find that they had established an easement by prescription to a dock owned by the plaintiff, the defendants urged the court to follow the rule outlined in Han Farms, Inc. v. Molitor, 2003 MT 153, 316 Mont. 249, 70 P.3d 1238, which declared that one owner's grant of permission does not continue by default to the next owner. After reviewing significant case law regarding the transferability of permission for use, the court declined to adopt the defendants' argument and overruled the proposition in Han Farms that permission can never carry over from one owner to another after the sale of the servient property. Rather, the court reiterated that based on a thorough reading of its permissive use cases, the court will always consider the nature of the initial permission and attendant circumstances to analyze whether permission exists. Pedersen v. Ziehl, 2013 MT 306, 372 Mont. 223, 311 P.3d 765.

Adequate Showing of Prescriptive Easement — No Showing of Permissive Use Absent Owner's Knowledge of Ownership: Bertelsen owned two parcels of property adjacent to a county road that he leased to a propane business beginning in 1987. The county road was subsequently abandoned, so all that separated Bertelsen's property from a federal highway was a triangular piece of land upon which the state Department of Transportation held an easement but which was otherwise undeveloped. The propane company constructed some improvements on the triangular parcel. While researching property in the area, Slauson discovered that the triangular parcel was owned by a third party, Edwards, who was not even aware that she owned it. Slauson acquired the property from Edwards and had the state discharge its easement and then approached Bertelsen and the propane company and offered to lease the parcel to Bertelsen. Bertelsen asserted the right to continued use of the property, and Slauson sued to enforce his property rights and to recover compensation and damages from Bertelsen. At trial, Bertelsen argued that he had acquired the property through adverse possession or that he had a prescriptive easement that allowed the propane company to continue using the property. The District Court found that Bertelsen had not paid taxes on the parcel, so there was no adverse possession, but held that Bertelsen and the propane company had established a prescriptive easement to maintain the improvements and to transact the company's business on the parcel. Slauson appealed, questioning whether the use was open, notorious, and adverse. The Supreme Court found that the company used the property for public access and as a parking lot, which adequately provided previous owner Edwards with notice of use. Having established open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and uninterrupted use for the statutorily required 5-year period, Bertelsen was entitled to the presumption of adverse use, and Slauson was required to prove that the use was permissive in order to overcome the presumption. Slauson could not prove permissive use because Edwards did not know that she owned the parcel and thus could not have granted permission for its use. Bertelsen therefore established a prescriptive easement, and the District Court was affirmed. Slauson v. Bertelsen Family Trust, 2006 MT 314, 335 M 43, 151 P3d 866 (2006).

Following the 2006 decision, a dispute arose between Slauson and the plumbing company that used the prescriptive easement. Slauson asserted that the company trespassed and used Slauson's property in unauthorized ways, and the company countersued for interference with the scope of the easement. The District Court granted the company $418.60 for landscaping that Slauson had removed and awarded Slauson $430 for costs of removing snow that the company piled on Slauson's property outside the easement. Both parties appealed, but the Supreme Court held that neither party established any error in the District Court's rulings and affirmed. Slauson v. Marozzo Plumb. & Heating, LLC, 2009 MT 333, 353 M 75, 219 P3d 509 (2009).

Incorrect Finding of Prescriptive Easement for Road and Residence — Moving of Residence Not Required: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement had been established for a road that strayed into an adjoining parcel and for a residence, the corner of which also extended into the adjoining parcel. The Supreme Court found the record full of contradictory assertions and findings, but noted that because the actual location of the road was concealed from the owner by way of maps and misrepresentations as to its true location, the record did not come close to establishing the elements of hostility or open and notorious use by clear and convincing evidence to establish a prescriptive easement for the road. Further, the owner of the residence conceded that the corner of the foundation and eaves encroached onto the adjoining parcel. Never having paid taxes on the land in question, the owner could not prevail on a claim of adverse possession to obtain title to the ground under the encroachment, so a finding of a prescriptive easement for the residence was also in error. However, because the property owner indicated at trial and in appeal briefs that he was willing to work something out regarding the encroachment, the Supreme Court concluded that to require removal of the encroachment would be extreme and declined to order that the residence be moved from its foundation. Gelderloos v. Duke, 2004 MT 94, 321 M 1, 88 P3d 814 (2004).

No Public Prescriptive Use of Mining Road Never Declared Public Road — Prescriptive Easement Established and Not Extinguished by Reverse Adverse Possession: Owners of a road used since 1936 for mining access claimed a public prescriptive use. The road was never formally declared a public road or used for the statutorily required period of time sufficient to establish a prescriptive easement. Thus, the existence of a public prescriptive easement depended on the exploratory use that took place when the mine was not in full operation, recreational use by the public, and county road maintenance. However, even taken together, this evidence did not rise to the level of public prescriptive use. The District Court did not err in finding that no public prescriptive easement existed over the road. However, while the evidence did not qualify as a public easement, it did qualify as a private easement in plaintiff's favor. Virtually unrestricted use of the road between 1936 and 1961 met the requirements of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, uninterrupted use for the required statutory period. Further, defendant's act of locking a gate across the road and providing plaintiff a key and access with permission was not a distinct and positive assertion unequivocally hostile and adverse to plaintiff sufficient to extinguish plaintiff's easement by reverse adverse possession. Brimstone Min., Inc. v. Glaus, 2003 MT 236, 317 M 236, 77 P3d 175 (2003). See also Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990).

Retaining Wall and Dock Not Considered Substantial Enclosure to Establish Possessory Adverse Use: The Jameses built a dock and retaining wall on property that a later survey revealed was on Habel's property. Habel filed a quiet title action, and the Jameses counterclaimed that they had acquired a prescriptive easement for the dock and retaining wall by adverse use for the statutory period. The District Court agreed and ruled that a nonpossessory prescriptive easement existed for the dock and retaining wall. Habel appealed, arguing that the dock and retaining wall were permanent structures that clearly marked the boundaries of the land enclosed by the structures and that the Jameses had thus acquired a possessory interest in the enclosed land. The Supreme Court noted that 70-19-410 does not specify what kind of structure satisfies the requirement to "protect by substantial enclosure" in order to consider the property to be possessed and occupied for purposes of adverse possession, but concluded that a structure or fixture may constitute a substantial enclosure if it indicates the boundaries of the adverse occupancy in a manner that clearly demonstrates the extent of the use of the property. The District Court's findings that the land was only partially enclosed by the dock and retaining wall and did establish a possessory use of the property itself were not clearly erroneous. A complete possession or occupation of the land was not present in this case because the Jameses' construction and maintenance of the dock and retaining wall were limited uses consistent with a nonpossessory interest, which constituted a burden on Habel's property, not a complete possession or occupation. The District Court was affirmed. Habel v. James, 2003 MT

99, 315 M 249, 68 P3d 743 (2003), distinguishing Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136 (1983).

Reverse Adverse Possession — Public Prescriptive Easement Extinguished by Relocation of Road and Public Acquiescence With Locked Gates for Thirty Years: Dome Mountain Ranch's predecessor in interest relocated a road in 1965 and installed locked gates and no trespassing signs. Public access was limited to occasional, seasonal recreational use by permission or when the gates were unlocked, until Park County officially declared the road a county road in 1994. Dome Mountain Ranch claimed that the 5-year statutory period of reverse adverse possession concluded in 1970, so it was not required to show a clear intent by the county to abandon the road in proving its claim of reverse adverse possession. Title to a public road may not be obtained by adverse possession, and there must be a clear showing of intent to abandon a county road. Mere nonuse, even for extended periods of time, is generally insufficient in itself to indicate an intent to abandon. Likewise, mere nonuse or lack of maintenance by the county is not sufficient to indicate an intent to abandon, absent notice and a public hearing. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right in a prescriptive easement must not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. Seasonal recreational use, use by neighbors visiting neighbors, and use by persons cutting Christmas trees and gathering firewood are generally not sufficient to establish use by the public over a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly. In this case, the Supreme Court agreed with Dome Mountain Ranch that reverse adverse possession applied. The relocation of the road, coupled with the public's acquiescence with locked gates for almost 30 years, extinguished the county's public prescriptive easement, if one ever existed. Dome Mtn. Ranch, LLC v. Park County, 2001 MT 289, 307 M 420, 37 P3d 710 (2001), following Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), and McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794 (2000).

No Proof of Adverse Possession Absent Evidence of Property Taxes: The District Court found that plaintiffs had proved their claim to a disputed parcel of property and established an adverse possession claim, based in part on historical payment of property taxes. Defendant 360 Ranch contended that the District Court's conclusion that plaintiffs had paid property taxes on the property was error and that defendant's records showed that defendant had actually paid taxes on the parcel. Plaintiffs maintained that 70-19-411 does not require payment of taxes on all property to which adverse possession is claimed, but only of all taxes legally levied and assessed. The tax assessments indicated that plaintiffs were assessed taxes on property east of "the road", but it was not clear which of two roads through the parcel was indicated. The Supreme Court held that because the record provided insufficient evidence to show that plaintiffs paid taxes on the property in question, the District Court's conclusion that plaintiffs had proved a claim for adverse possession was incorrect and reversible error. Tester v. Tester, 2000 MT 130, 300 M 5, 3 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 538 (2000).

Public Use for Statutory Period Coupled With Assumption of Adverse Control — Public Prescriptive Easement Established: An easement by prescription is created by operation of law through open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use for 5 years. Following the same criteria, applied to public prescriptive easements in Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990), the Supreme Court noted that to establish the existence of a public road by prescription, it must be shown that the public followed a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly for the prescribed statutory period, together with an assumption of control adverse to the owner. To be open and notorious, the use of a claimed right must give the landowner actual knowledge of the claimed right or be of such a character as to raise a presumption of notice. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right may not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. To be adverse, the use or assumption of control of a claimed right must be exercised under a claim of right and not as a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the landowner. Regular maintenance of a roadway by the party asserting a prescriptive easement is evidence of adverse rather than permissive use. Because a public prescriptive easement is "public", the element of exclusivity is not required in establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement. In the present case, the county presented sufficient evidence establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement on German Gulch Road, including a history of open public use and county maintenance of the road, an absence of evidence that the public ever abandoned use of the road, and the fact that plaintiff never erected gates, barriers, or signs on the road to create the impression of permissive use or established permissive use through neighborly accommodation. Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996).

Transfer of Land to Corporation or Trust in Which Grantor Has Interest — Color of Title Not Created: Relying on St. v. King, 87 SE 167 (W. Va. 1915), and St. v. Altizer Coal Land Co., 128 SE 286 (W. Va. 1925), the Supreme Court held that a grantor cannot create color of title in land in which that grantor has no interest by transferring or deeding the land to a corporation or trust in which that grantor has an interest. Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Presumption of Adverse Use Established Through Preliminary Requirements for Prescriptive Right: After a claimant has established the preliminary requirements for a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises. The burden then shifts to the owner of the land on which the prescriptive easement is claimed to establish permissive use or license. If an owner establishes that the use is permissive, no easement can be acquired. In the present case, no genuine issue of material fact existed with regard to defendant's open, notorious, continuous, uninterrupted, and exclusive use of a road access for the statutory period; thus, the presumption of adverse use was applicable. Plaintiff failed to raise material facts regarding whether the use was permissive, including questions of permission or license, control of access by use of a gate, and neighborly accommodation. Defendant was therefore entitled to summary judgment based on adverse use as a matter of law. Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724, 51 St. Rep. 1459 (1994), distinguishing Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993). See also Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2012 MT 264, 367 Mont. 67, 289 P.3d 156, and Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2013 MT 338, 372 Mont. 463, 313 P.3d 179.

Former Curative Statute Inapplicable When Road Not Laid Out by Public or Dedicated or Abandoned to Public: Former 32-103, R.C.M. (repealed 1965 but in effect when a private road was established) read: "All highways, roads, lanes, streets, alleys, courts, places and bridges laid out or erected by the public or now traveled or used by the public, or if laid out or erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public, or made such by the partition of real property, are public highways." The District Court inappropriately applied this curative statute in declaring that the road was converted from a public easement into a county road because the road was never laid out or erected by the public or dedicated or abandoned to the public or made such by partition, nor was there ever a public prescriptive easement established through public use. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 794 (1993).

Reverse Adverse Possession and Inconsistent Use: A landowner's blocking of a road was a hostile act that established reverse adverse possession because the state and local government and the public cooperated and adhered to a walk-in policy that had been in existence on the land for about 17 years. The decision by County Commissioners to deny a petition to establish the disputed road as a county road confirmed acquiescence in the fact that the road was a private road. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 794 (1993), distinguished in Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724, 51 St. Rep. 1459 (1994).

Adverse Possession Inapplicable to Title to Public Roads: The general rule in Montana law is that title to public roads may not be obtained by adverse possession. Baertsch v. Lewis & Clark County, 256 M 114, 845 P2d 106, 49 St. Rep. 1162 (1992), following Billings v. Pierce Packing Co., 117 M 255, 161 P2d 636 (1945).

No Adverse Possession of Royalty Interest by Color of Title Found — Estoppel Applied: Defendants in an action to quiet title to a royalty interest argued that they held color of title to the interest by virtue of an invalid tax deed and subsequent conveyances. However, defendants also argued that the reservation of a royalty interest by Rosebud County, their ultimate grantor, was invalid. Citing Russell v. Texas Co., 238 F2d 636 (1956), the Supreme Court held that the defendants could not attack a royalty reservation in a title under and through which defendants claimed adverse possession by color of title. The court held that defendants were estopped from attacking Rosebud County's royalty reservation and that because defendants' grant expressly subjects them to the county's reservation of a royalty interest, defendants had no color of title to their royalty. Stanford v. Rosebud County, 251 M 128, 822 P2d 1074, 48 St. Rep. 1124 (1991).

No Adverse Possession of Royalty Interest by Use and Occupancy Found — Burden of Proof Unmet: Defendants in an action to quiet title to certain royalty interests argued that they established adverse possession. Citing Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136 (1983), the Supreme Court noted that adverse possession must rely upon possession that is actual, visible, exclusive, hostile, and continuous for the required statutory period. Because the defendants failed to produce evidence that they possessed or had taken any of the proceeds from the royalty, which was held by the clerk of court, the Supreme Court held that adverse possession did not apply. Stanford v. Rosebud County, 251 M 128, 822 P2d 1074, 48 St. Rep. 1124 (1991).

Elements of Adverse Possession Not Shown: Once the true boundary line became known in 1971, defendants made only one demand for the property in dispute, which was rebuffed, and made no additional claim adverse to plaintiffs until 1983. Defendants never occupied the property prior to 1983, when they built a garage over the survey line, or paid taxes on the property. Plaintiffs brought an action for ejectment and rents in 1985. The District Court correctly held that defendants never occupied the property in a manner establishing adverse possession or an easement. Smithers v. Hagerman, 244 M 182, 797 P2d 177, 47 St. Rep. 1483 (1990), followed in Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Failure to Establish Public Use: Plaintiff failed to establish use by the public of the exact route claimed over public land for the 10-year period prior to 1927, when a U.S. patent was issued to defendant. The District Court erred in finding that the road was in place, was in use, and was a granted public road pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 932 (repealed 1976). Parker v. Elder, 233 M 75, 758 P2d 292, 45 St. Rep. 1305 (1988).

When Easement Rights Not Extinguished by Adverse Possession or Prescriptive Easement: Both adverse possession and prescriptive easement require proof of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, and continuous possession or use for 5 years. The Supreme Court found insufficient evidence of extinguishment of easement rights by adverse possession or prescriptive right to a gate when: (1) there was not consistent testimony that appellant intended to eliminate all access to the easement; (2) he stated he would have given lot owners keys to the gate if they had wished to improve the access road; (3) there was limited entry around the gate by snowmobile, motorcycle, or on foot; (4) the gate was sometimes left open; (5) a declaration of restrictions remained on file stating the easement right; (6) "no trespassing" signs were not placed near the gate for at least 4 years after the gate was installed; and (7) appellant never affirmatively conveyed to the lot owners at any date certain his intention that they not go beyond the gate. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986).

Prescriptive Easement — No Proof of Permissive Use: The District Court's finding that a prescriptive easement had been established was proper where testimony of claimant's witnesses indicated open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the road and the landowner offered no evidence to establish permissive use other than his uncorroborated assertions. Thomas v. Barnum, 211 M 137, 684 P2d 1106, 41 St. Rep. 1266 (1984).

Water Rights by Prescription — Hostile Use Required: Where the plaintiffs brought an action against the decedent's estate, claiming a prescriptive right to water diverted by the decedent's descendants, the District Court did not err in holding that the requirement of hostile use of the water would be applied to determine whether the water had been acquired by prescription. Without such a requirement, the holder of a water right could be deprived of that right without notice. In the case before the court, use of the water could not be said to be hostile unless the defendants were deprived of the water in question at a time when they actually had need of it. Language in the opinion in Cook v. Hudson, 110 M 263, 103 P2d 137 (1940), appearing to abrogate the requirement of hostile use, is expressly disapproved. Grimsley v. Estate of Spencer, 206 M 184, 670 P2d 85, 40 St. Rep. 1585 (1983).

Easement by Prescription Extinguished: Although a landowner's predecessors in interest may have obtained a prescriptive easement to use an irrigation ditch, the landowner's subsequent actions in apparent recognition that his use was permissive are incompatible with the nature of a prescriptive easement and have extinguished any easement by prescription. Robertson v. Hughes, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1041 (1983).

Permissive Use Not Basis for Easement by Prescription: When use of an easement begins as a permissive use, it cannot ripen into a prescriptive right no matter how long it continues, unless there is a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to the owner. Robertson v. Hughes, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1041 (1983).

Enclosure by Fence — Improper Grant of Land Outside Fence: Since plaintiffs obtained title through adverse possession under a deed by, among other things, enclosing a piece of land with a fence, they could be granted title by the court only to what was enclosed by the fence, and the District Court was ordered to change the award to delete land outside the fence. Castles v. Lawrence, 203 M 421, 662 P2d 589, 40 St. Rep. 545 (1983), rehearing denied, 40 St. Rep. 718 (1983).

Survey Costs in Boundary Disputes: Survey costs for the portion of a party's property not related to the boundary dispute were held not chargeable to the other party to the dispute despite the fact that the survey was prompted by the dispute. Nott v. Booke, 194 M 251, 633 P2d 678, 38 St. Rep. 1507 (1981).

Summary Judgment for Prescriptive Public Easement — Estoppel From Denying County Ownership: Where the purchasers of real property brought an action for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and breach of a statutory and equitable obligation to maintain a county road against the sellers of the property, and the county, the previous property owner, and the sellers in turn filed a cross-complaint for indemnity against the previous owner, the trial court did not err in denying the county's motion for summary judgment and granting the motions of the plaintiffs and sellers for summary judgment. On a motion for summary judgment, the movant has the burden of establishing prima facie the absence of any genuine issue of material fact, and when the movant does so, the party opposing the motion must come forward with substantial evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact. The sellers presented evidence in support of their motion showing a prescriptive public easement and estoppel against the county and former owner. The county failed to present evidence to meet their burden. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

Plaintiff Losing Quiet Title Action — No Attorneys' Fees: Under 25-10-101 and 25-10-102, attorneys' fees may be awarded as a matter of course to the party receiving a favorable judgment involving real property. Thus, when plaintiff filed a quiet title action and ended up losing possession of the property, he was not entitled to attorneys' fees unless awarded by discretion of the court under 25-10-103, and the court properly decreed that each party pay his own costs. Stimatz v. St., 189 M 179, 615 P2d 228 (1980).

Adverse Possession — Color of Title — Good Faith: The burden of proving adverse possession under color of title is on the defendant in a quiet title action. Under Montana law, an instruction which purports to convey land or the right to its possession is sufficient color of title as a basis for adverse possession if the claim is made in good faith. When a party's "title" was based on a quitclaim deed from an individual who was known by all parties concerned to have no interest whatsoever in the property, the court concluded that there was not a trace of good faith and no color of title. Further, the party asserting adverse possession must succeed on the strength of his own title and cannot rely on the weakness of his adversary. Russell Realty Co. v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980), followed in Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Quiet Title Action — Punitive Damages and Attorney Fees Awards: Lack of good faith in an adverse possession case will not necessarily support a punitive damages award for slander of title. Testimony of failure to recognize the opposing party in a quiet title action from a previous business transaction and of reliance on the Secretary of State's information that the party corporation had no registered agent for service of process, although part of the determination of a lack of good faith, was sufficient to rebut an allegation of malice as required for the award of punitive damages. There being no statutory or contractual provision for attorney fees in this case, a common-law exception would be required for such an award. Without proof that the defendant acted fraudulently, maliciously, or with bad faith toward the plaintiff in a quiet title action, attorney fees will not be awarded. A decision denying attorney fees will not be disturbed absent abuse of discretion by the trial court. Russell Realty Co. v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980).

GENERAL

Adequate Showing of Prescriptive Easement — No Showing of Permissive Use Absent Owner's Knowledge of Ownership: Bertelsen owned two parcels of property adjacent to a county road that he leased to a propane business beginning in 1987. The county road was subsequently abandoned, so all that separated Bertelsen's property from a federal highway was a triangular piece of land upon which the state Department of Transportation held an easement but which was otherwise undeveloped. The propane company constructed some improvements on the triangular parcel. While researching property in the area, Slauson discovered that the triangular parcel was owned by a third party, Edwards, who was not even aware that she owned it. Slauson acquired the property from Edwards and had the state discharge its easement and then approached Bertelsen and the propane company and offered to lease the parcel to Bertelsen. Bertelsen asserted the right to continued use of the property, and Slauson sued to enforce his property rights and to recover compensation and damages from Bertelsen. At trial, Bertelsen argued that he had acquired the property through adverse possession or that he had a prescriptive easement that allowed the propane company to continue using the property. The District Court found that Bertelsen had not paid taxes on the parcel, so there was no adverse possession, but held that Bertelsen and the propane company had established a prescriptive easement to maintain the improvements and to transact the company's business on the parcel. Slauson appealed, questioning whether the use was open, notorious, and adverse. The Supreme Court found that the company used the property for public access and as a parking lot, which adequately provided previous owner Edwards with notice of use. Having established open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and uninterrupted use for the statutorily required 5-year period, Bertelsen was entitled to the presumption of adverse use, and Slauson was required to prove that the use was permissive in order to overcome the presumption. Slauson could not prove permissive use because Edwards did not know that she owned the parcel and thus could not have granted permission for its use. Bertelsen therefore established a prescriptive easement, and the District Court was affirmed. Slauson v. Bertelsen Family Trust, 2006 MT 314, 335 M 43, 151 P3d 866 (2006).

Following the 2006 decision, a dispute arose between Slauson and the plumbing company that used the prescriptive easement. Slauson asserted that the company trespassed and used Slauson's property in unauthorized ways, and the company countersued for interference with the scope of the easement. The District Court granted the company $418.60 for landscaping that Slauson had removed and awarded Slauson $430 for costs of removing snow that the company piled on Slauson's property outside the easement. Both parties appealed, but the Supreme Court held that neither party established any error in the District Court's rulings and affirmed. Slauson v. Marozzo Plumb. & Heating, LLC, 2009 MT 333, 353 M 75, 219 P3d 509 (2009).

Failure to Prove Elements of Prescriptive Easement — Effective Easement of No Avail to Nonadjoining Landowner: Sunday claimed a prescriptive easement across Harboways' property based on the existence of an alleged road. However, testimony at trial was conflicting as to the time of use, extent of use, and location of the road at issue, which Harboways claimed was nothing more than an indistinct two-rut trail. The District Court examined the history of the property both before and after its acquisition by Harboways and found that neither Sunday nor Sunday's predecessors in interest established a prescriptive easement on any of the tracts owned by Harboways prior to Harboways' purchase of the property, so absent proof of the statutory elements of a prescriptive easement, Sunday did not have an easement across Harboways' property. The court did find that a 30-foot easement surrounded one of Harboways' parcels, but the parcel did not abut Sunday's land, nor was Sunday's land a dominant tenement with benefit of the easement, so Sunday was not entitled to use the easement. Sunday v. Harboway, 2006 MT 95, 332 M 104, 136 P3d 965 (2006).

Mere Denial of Public Nature of Road Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Public Prescriptive Easement Affirmed: The District Court found that the elements of a prescriptive easement over a road on defendants' property were satisfied and granted summary judgment to plaintiff county. Defendants contended that disputed issues of fact existed regarding proof of a prescriptive easement, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The county proved that use of the road was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for the statutorily required period. The only evidence in support of defendants' position was a conclusory hearsay statement claiming that the previous owners had indicated that the road was not public. Defendants' mere denial of the public nature of the road was insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to withstand summary judgment. Powell County v. 5 Rockin' MS Angus Ranch, Inc., 2004 MT 337, 324 M 204, 102 P3d 1210 (2004), following Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002).

Incorrect Finding of Prescriptive Easement for Road and Residence — Moving of Residence Not Required: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement had been established for a road that strayed into an adjoining parcel and for a residence, the corner of which also extended into the adjoining parcel. The Supreme Court found the record full of contradictory assertions and findings, but noted that because the actual location of the road was concealed from the owner by way of maps and misrepresentations as to its true location, the record did not come close to establishing the elements of hostility or open and notorious use by clear and convincing evidence to establish a prescriptive easement for the road. Further, the owner of the residence conceded that the corner of the foundation and eaves encroached onto the adjoining parcel. Never having paid taxes on the land in question, the owner could not prevail on a claim of adverse possession to obtain title to the ground under the encroachment, so a finding of a prescriptive easement for the residence was also in error. However, because the property owner indicated at trial and in appeal briefs that he was willing to work something out regarding the encroachment, the Supreme Court concluded that to require removal of the encroachment would be extreme and declined to order that the residence be moved from its foundation. Gelderloos v. Duke, 2004 MT 94, 321 M 1, 88 P3d 814 (2004).

Two-Month Lapse in Use of Road Insufficient to Demonstrate Intent of Abandonment — Summary Grant of Prescriptive Easement Reversed: The District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on a prescriptive easement, based on the fact that plaintiffs did not continuously use a road for an entire 5-year period because they were out of state for 2 months, demonstrating an interruption or abandonment of the claimed easement. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the District Court misinterpreted the meaning of continuous and uninterrupted use, and the Supreme Court agreed. For purposes of a prescriptive easement, continuous use is use that is made often enough to constitute notice of the claim to the potential servient owner. Further, uninterrupted use is not interrupted by the act of the owner of the land or by voluntary abandonment by the party claiming the right. During the 5-year period in question, defendant did nothing to interrupt plaintiffs' use of the roads in question. The fact that plaintiffs were in Missouri for 2 months and did not use the road during that time may have cast some doubt on whether there was continuous use of the road, but a genuine issue of material fact remained as to whether plaintiffs continuously used the road. Because a question of genuine fact remained, summary judgment was improper, and the Supreme Court reversed for further proceedings, including plaintiffs' claims for infliction of emotional distress and punitive damages. Cook v. Hartman, 2003 MT 251, 317 M 343, 77 P3d 231 (2003). See also Restatement (Third) of Property, Servitudes 2.17.

No Public Prescriptive Use of Mining Road Never Declared Public Road — Prescriptive Easement Established and Not Extinguished by Reverse Adverse Possession: Owners of a road used since 1936 for mining access claimed a public prescriptive use. The road was never formally declared a public road or used for the statutorily required period of time sufficient to establish a prescriptive easement. Thus, the existence of a public prescriptive easement depended on the exploratory use that took place when the mine was not in full operation, recreational use by the public, and county road maintenance. However, even taken together, this evidence did not rise to the level of public prescriptive use. The District Court did not err in finding that no public prescriptive easement existed over the road. However, while the evidence did not qualify as a public easement, it did qualify as a private easement in plaintiff's favor. Virtually unrestricted use of the road between 1936 and 1961 met the requirements of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, uninterrupted use for the required statutory period. Further, defendant's act of locking a gate across the road and providing plaintiff a key and access with permission was not a distinct and positive assertion unequivocally hostile and adverse to plaintiff sufficient to extinguish plaintiff's easement by reverse adverse possession. Brimstone Min., Inc. v. Glaus, 2003 MT 236, 317 M 236, 77 P3d 175 (2003). See also Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990).

Failure to Prove Unity of Ownership — No Implied Easement by Necessity: As a general rule, creation of an implied easement by necessity requires that the easement be granted over the grantor's land and never over the land of a third party or a stranger to the title. Here, the easement claimed by plaintiffs ran across property not owned by plaintiffs' grantor at the time of the grant, so plaintiffs were unable to prove unity of ownership necessary to establish an implied easement by necessity. Kullick v. Skyline Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2003 MT 137, 316 M 146, 69 P3d 225 (2003), following Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590 (1984).

Conflicting Evidence Regarding Prescriptive Easement for Ditch Maintenance — District Court Affirmed: Plaintiff alleged that defendant's access to plaintiff's property for ditch maintenance must be limited to the historic use of the ditch bank. The District Court was presented with conflicting evidence regarding how open defendant's use of plaintiff's property was and determined that plaintiff knew or should have known that defendant was accessing the ditch by various routes across plaintiff's property and that the access was not permissive. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that defendant had a prescriptive easement, and that finding was not disturbed on appeal. Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

Prescriptive Easement Properly Granted — Terms Defined: To establish an easement by prescription, the party claiming the easement must show open and notorious, exclusive, continuous, uninterrupted, and adverse use of the claimed easement for a 5-year period. Open and notorious use means a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to and brought to the attention of the owner. Exclusive use means that the right of the claimant must rest upon its own foundations and not depend on a like right in any other person. Continuous use means use that is made often enough to constitute notice of the claim to the potential servient owner. Uninterrupted use means use that is not interrupted by the act of the owner of the land or by voluntary abandonment by the party claiming the right. Adverse use means use exercised under a claim of right and not as a mere privilege or license revocable at the pleasure of the owner of the land. A claim must be known to and acquiesced in by the owner of the land. A party claiming the easement has the burden of proving each element of prescription by clear and convincing evidence. If the party claiming easement establishes all of the elements, then the burden falls on the opposing party to show that the use was permissive rather than adverse. In the present case, there was no evidence of concealment of the regular use or maintenance of a road for several decades, which was adequate to provide plaintiffs with notice that there was a claim to use of the road. Because no permissive use was shown, and because the use was sufficiently open and notorious to establish a claim, the District Court did not err in granting defendants a prescriptive easement over plaintiffs' property. Brumit v. Lewis, 2002 MT 346, 313 M 332, 61 P3d 138 (2002), distinguishing Cope v. Cope, 158 M 388, 493 P2d 336 (1971), and Amerimont, Inc. v. Gannett, 278 M 314, 924 P2d 1326 (1996). See also Rappold v. Durocher, 257 M 329, 849 P2d 1017 (1993), and Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724 (1994).

Use of Private Road Permissive by Neighborly Accommodation — Public Prescriptive Easement Not Established: Plaintiffs sought an easement of record from defendants regarding the rural road crossing plaintiffs' property, but defendants refused. Plaintiffs then sought a declaratory judgment that the road was a public road established by prescriptive use, asserting that the road was a public thoroughfare established by common-law dedication as evidenced by a 1916 petition for the opening of a school and a 1948 petition to establish a road. The District Court found that the 1916 and 1948 petitions did not establish an offer evidencing an intention to dedicate the road to the public and that use of the road was instead permissive through neighborly accommodation. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. All elements of a prescriptive easement must be proved by clear and convincing evidence because one who has legal title should not be forced to give up what is rightfully theirs without the opportunity to know that the title is in jeopardy and to fight for it. Once a claimant establishes the elements of a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises, and the burden shifts to the landowner to establish that the use was permissive. If permissive use is shown, no easement can be acquired because the theory of prescriptive easement is based on adverse use. Use of a neighbor's land based upon mere neighborly accommodation or courtesy is not adverse and cannot ripen into a prescriptive easement. Rather, in addition to use, generally some circumstance or act tending to indicate that the use was not merely permissive is required. The presence of gates or other obstructions, to be opened and closed by parties passing over the land, has always been considered strong evidence in support of a mere license to the public to pass over the designated way. The facts here showed that use of the road was permissive and at the pleasure of the landowners, so no public prescriptive easement existed. Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002). See also Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), Hitshew v. Prescriptive Easement Established for One of Two Exits on Loop Road — Other Exit Considered Abandoned: Renner accessed his property by crossing Nemitz's property in two different places in order to form a loop driveway at Renner's house. The west easement was not at issue, but both the existence and location of an approximately 100-foot easement over the east side of the loop was contested. A series of interactions between the parties eventually led to Nemitz building a fence across the east side of the loop and Renner filing a claim to establish an easement over the east side of the loop. At trial, both parties presented testimony regarding use of the east side loop, including testimony regarding two possible exits on the loop. The District Court did not distinguish between the two exits, but found a prescriptive easement for the entire east side loop, held that the easement was not abandoned and that Nemitz's activities did not extinguish the easement, and granted Renner an easement for both exits of the east side loop, ordering all obstructions removed. Nemitz appealed. The District Court found clear and convincing evidence that a prescriptive easement existed for the east side loop based on testimony of its use from 1948 to 1974, and after reviewing the record, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's findings of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the easement. However, it was not clear from the testimony regarding use between 1948 and 1974 whether both exits met the requirements of a prescriptive easement, and that lack of specificity indicated that it was error for the District Court to find a prescriptive easement for both exits, but the error was harmless based on evidence regarding use from 1975 to 1995. Renner's predecessor in interest during that period continued to use the loop as in prior years and never sought permission and so could not be characterized as having abandoned the east loop easement. Testimony was undisputed that the left exit was used until 1995, but the right exit was not used past 1982, and testimony of Renner's predecessor in interest established that use of the right exit was intended to be subordinate to Nemitz's use, so it was error for the District Court to find that the right exit was not abandoned. The Supreme Court noted that extinguishment did not apply to the left exit because only 3 years passed between the time Renner acquired the property and when the claim was filed. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed the easement on the left exit and the order requiring removal of the fence across that exit, but reversed the part of the order requiring removal of the fence across the abandoned right exit. Renner v. Nemitz, 2001 MT 202, 306 M 292, 33 P3d 255 (2001), distinguishing Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 501, 668 P2d 1029 (1983).

Public Use for Statutory Period Coupled With Assumption of Adverse Control — Public Prescriptive Easement Established: An easement by prescription is created by operation of law through open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use for 5 years. Following the same criteria, applied to public prescriptive easements in Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990), the Supreme Court noted that to establish the existence of a public road by prescription, it must be shown that the public followed a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly for the prescribed statutory period, together with an assumption of control adverse to the owner. To be open and notorious, the use of a claimed right must give the landowner actual knowledge of the claimed right or be of such a character as to raise a presumption of notice. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right may not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. To be adverse, the use or assumption of control of a claimed right must be exercised under a claim of right and not as a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the landowner. Regular maintenance of a roadway by the party asserting a prescriptive easement is evidence of adverse rather than permissive use. Because a public prescriptive easement is "public", the element of exclusivity is not required in establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement. In the present case, the county presented sufficient evidence establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement on German Gulch Road, including a history of open public use and county maintenance of the road, an absence of evidence that the public ever abandoned use of the road, and the fact that plaintiff never erected gates, barriers, or signs on the road to create the impression of permissive use or established permissive use through neighborly accommodation. Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996).

Presumption of Adverse Use Under Claim of Right — No Evidence of Neighborly Accommodation: Tanners and others purchased property on Flathead Lake. Tanners and the others obtained access to their property by driving on roads located on Daly's property to the north. When Daly erected a fence across the roads and blocked access to their property, Tanners and the others brought suit, alleging that they had acquired an easement by prescription for the use of several of the roads. The Supreme Court held that Tanners had established a presumption of adverse use under a claim of right based upon the 1932 deed of their predecessors in interest. Because Daly claimed that Tanners' use of the roads was by her permission or neighborly accommodation, the Supreme Court held that Daly had the burden of proving permissive use. The Supreme Court referred to testimony in the record from which the jury could have found that no permission had been granted by Daly. Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

Presumption of Adverse Use Established Through Preliminary Requirements for Prescriptive Right: After a claimant has established the preliminary requirements for a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises. The burden then shifts to the owner of the land on which the prescriptive easement is claimed to establish permissive use or license. If an owner establishes that the use is permissive, no easement can be acquired. In the present case, no genuine issue of material fact existed with regard to defendant's open, notorious, continuous, uninterrupted, and exclusive use of a road access for the statutory period; thus, the presumption of adverse use was applicable. Plaintiff failed to raise material facts regarding whether the use was permissive, including questions of permission or license, control of access by use of a gate, and neighborly accommodation. Defendant was therefore entitled to summary judgment based on adverse use as a matter of law. Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724, 51 St. Rep. 1459 (1994), distinguishing Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993). See also Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2012 MT 264, 367 Mont. 67, 289 P.3d 156, and Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2013 MT 338, 372 Mont. 463, 313 P.3d 179.

Reverse Adverse Possession and Inconsistent Use: A landowner's blocking of a road was a hostile act that established reverse adverse possession because the state and local government and the public cooperated and adhered to a walk-in policy that had been in existence on the land for about 17 years. The decision by County Commissioners to deny a petition to establish the disputed road as a county road confirmed acquiescence in the fact that the road was a private road. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 794 (1993), distinguished in Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724, 51 St. Rep. 1459 (1994).

No Private Prescriptive Easement When Use Always Permissive: When the use of a road over which a party claimed an easement had always been permissive, no private easement by prescription could exist given the facts that the road was not a county road and that there was no easement by implication or necessity due to a lack of commonality of ownership. Keebler v. Harding, 247 M 518, 807 P2d 1354, 48 St. Rep. 282 (1991), followed in Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 794 (1993), Greenwalt Family Trust v. Kehler, 267 M 508, 885 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1130 (1994), and Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996). However, see Mildenberger v. Galbraith, 249 M 161, 815 P2d 130, 48 St. Rep. 621 (1991).

Acts Inconsistent With Existence of Private Easement: In a case regarding a prescriptive easement, the plaintiffs had asked the defendant owners for permission to use the road over the defendants' property and the plaintiffs had told others that they did not have an easement over the defendants' property. The Supreme Court ruled that the plaintiffs' actions were inconsistent with a prescriptive easement and, that, additionally, if an easement had existed, it was statutorily extinguished by the plaintiffs' inconsistent acts. Downing v. Grover, 237 M 172, 772 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 713 (1989), followed in Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 794 (1993), and Greenwalt Family Trust v. Kehler, 267 M 508, 885 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1130 (1994).

Strangers to Record Title Barred From Quiet Title Action: The District Court properly barred a quiet title claim after finding that plaintiff and his predecessor in interest were both complete strangers to the record title of an oil and gas lease and thus were not seized of the lease. Bretz v. Ayers, 232 M 132, 756 P2d 1115, 45 St. Rep. 936 (1988).

No Prescriptive Easement, Easement by Implication, or Easement by Necessity: In action by landowner to quiet title to real property he purchased from another, a neighbor sought to establish an easement over the land. The Supreme Court upheld the lower court judgment, ruling: (1) a prescriptive easement was not established because neighbor's use of the land was not continuous; (2) an easement by implication did not arise because unity of ownership did not exist and intent of the parties was not established; and (3) an easement by necessity did not exist because it was not originally under common ownership. Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590, 41 St. Rep. 2521 (1984), followed in Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247, 53 St. Rep. 216 (1996), Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Prescriptive Easement — Occasional Recreational Use: Occasional use of a road by hunters and campers falls short of the extent and type of use necessary to result in a prescriptive easement. Oates v. Knutson, 182 M 195, 595 P2d 1181 (1979).

Recordkeeping Insufficient to Establish Prescriptive Easement: The existence of county records to the effect that the road in question was a county road was not sufficient to initiate acquisition of a prescriptive right. Prescriptive easements are acquired by adverse use, not by keeping records. Oates v. Knutson, 182 M 195, 595 P2d 1181 (1979).

Public Highway:

Public highway was established by prescription on evidence that members of public had used road openly for more than 50 years without ever having obtained permission from owners, that previous owner had considered road a public highway, that road had been maintained by county for some 24 years, and that public had never been denied use of road. Kostbade v. Metier, 150 M 139, 432 P2d 382 (1967). See also Johnson v. McMillan, 238 M 393, 778 P2d 395, 46 St. Rep. 1362 (1989).

Under this section and 70-19-404, a prescriptive right can be built upon public use of land for street purposes, jurisdiction having been acquired by the city authorities and maintained for the statutory period. Stettheimer v. Butte, 60 M 111, 198 P 455 (1921).

A public highway may be established by prescription, without color of title, by proof of travel over it by the public as a public highway for the statutory period. Lockey v. Bozeman, 42 M 387, 113 P 286 (1910); Pope v. Alexander, 36 M 82, 92 P 203 (1907); Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Butte & Boston Consol. Min. Co., 25 M 427, 65 P 420 (1901); St. v. Auchard, 22 M 14, 55 P 361 (1898). See Barnard Realty Co. v. Butte, 48 M 102, 136 P 1064 (1913).

Easement by Prescription: Plaintiffs, who acquired prescriptive easement in road across property of defendants by use for 35 years before defendants acquired title to the land and attempted to obstruct use, were entitled to enjoin defendants from interfering with use of right-of-way over road. Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91 (1962).

Elements of Easements by Prescription: To establish the existence of an easement by prescription, the party so claiming must show open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the easement claimed for the full statutory period. Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91 (1962).

Title by Prescription: Title to an easement acquired by prescription is as effective as though evidenced by a deed. Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91 (1962).

Fence as Act of Possession: This section applies to a case where a fence was erected prior to the government survey and with intent to claim all within the fence even though a subsequent patent based on the survey lines does not include all to the fence. Thibault v. Flynn, 133 M 461, 325 P2d 914 (1958).

Intermittent Use of Ditch: Title by prescription to a ditch conveying water may be obtained by use thereof whenever water is needed. Te Selle v. Storey, 133 M 1, 319 P2d 218 (1957).

Transfer of Prescriptive Title: Where deed to defendant after describing property by legal subdivisions contained clause: "Together with all the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances, water rights and water ditches to the same belonging", if defendant's predecessor used the ditch for more than the statutory period, there was title in him by prescription which passed to defendant by deed, and it was of no consequence that the deed did not specifically mention the ditch right as an appurtenance. Te Selle v. Storey, 133 M 1, 319 P2d 218 (1957).

Presumption Based on Legal Title:

Where plaintiff's complaint alleges that "plaintiff is now the owner, entitled to possession", there is a presumption under 70-19-404 that the person establishing a legal title to the property is in possession thereof within the time required by law, and it is up to the other party to overcome the presumption with proof. Warren v. Warren, 127 M 259, 261 P2d 364 (1946).

Where the predecessor of the owner of a ditch right had acquired title to the right-of-way therefor over the public domain by grant from the United States, it will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary, under 70-19-404, in an action to enjoin its use by another, that the owner had been possessed thereof within the time required by law and that the occupation by the other party had been in subordination to the legal title, as against the contention that the right was barred by this section in that neither plaintiff nor his predecessor had been in possession or seized of the ditch within the statutory period next preceding the commencement of the action. Rodda v. Best, 68 M 205, 217 P 669 (1923).

Disability of Minority: In a suit to quiet title commenced in 1927 in which defendants, as heirs of their ancestor, alleged ownership in themselves by cross-complaint, plaintiff bank pleaded the bar by reason of its adverse possession of the property since 1915 under a Sheriff's certificate of sale, at which time defendants' ancestor was living; he died shortly thereafter. The cause of action of defendants having accrued during the lifetime of their ancestor and plaintiff having been in the open, notorious, and unmolested possession from 1915 to the commencement of the action, defendants' cause of action was barred, the fact that defendants were laboring under the disability of minority at the time of the accrual of the action not excusing them from bringing suit within the statutory period after such accrual, the provisions of 70-19-413 in that behalf being inapplicable. Commercial Bank & Trust Co. v. Jordan, 85 M 375, 278 P 832, 65 ALR 968 (1929).

Burden of Proof: In an action to quiet title to a tract of land in which the defense was adverse possession, the defendant had the burden of establishing by a preponderance of evidence that the plaintiff was not possessed of the land for the statutory period or that the defendant had held it adversely for that length of time. Bearmouth Placer Co. v. Passerell, 73 M 306, 236 P 673 (1925).

MINERAL AND WATER RIGHT

Mineral Estate as Dominant Estate — Surface Estate as Subservient Estate: The original owner of the subject property had initially transferred the property and retained the mineral rights. A number of years later, the original owner quitclaimed the mineral rights to "the owner or owners of the land". Fifty years later, the plaintiffs argued that the subsequent transfer of the mineral rights did not merge the two estates because they were equal estates and therefore the plaintiffs did not have to bring their action until extraction began. They had done so within the 5-year period required by statute. The Supreme Court ruled that the mineral estate is the dominant estate and that when it was transferred, the two estates merged. It was at that time that the plaintiffs had to initiate their action. Hunter v. Rosebud County, 240 M 194, 783 P2d 927, 46 St. Rep. 2048 (1989).

Mineral Rights — Insufficient Adverse Possession Evidence: Defendant's daughter testified that in 1975 she and defendant dug holes along creek and panned for gold, and defendant testified that he had been testing for gold since 1975. One witness for plaintiff owners of the surface rights and title testified that those plaintiffs first became aware of mining activity in 1979, another testified that there were no signs of mining prior to 1976, and another testified that he saw no signs of mining prior to 1977. Owners of the surface and mineral rights joined in a quiet title action in 1981 against defendant, who sought to establish adverse possession. The evidence did not establish the required adverse possession for the 5-year period prior to the suit and did not show actual possession of the mineral interest by openly operating the mine for that 5-year period. McGuiness v. Maynard, 202 M 484, 658 P2d 1104, 40 St. Rep. 230 (1983).

Mineral Interest — No Proof of Possession: In an action to quiet title to certain royalty interests claimed by Rosebud County, the county argued that the plaintiffs were barred by the Statute of Limitations from claiming ownership of the royalty interest. The Supreme Court held that the county failed to overcome the presumption created by 70-19-404 that plaintiffs were in possession within the required period. Since the county failed to prove all the elements of adverse possession, the Statutes of Limitations in this section and 70-19-402 are not applicable. King v. Rosebud County, 193 M 268, 631 P2d 711, 38 St. Rep. 1145 (1981).

Mineral and Surface Rights: Where there was a reserved right of entry for mining purposes in another person, the owner of the surface rights could not acquire any right by adverse possession unless he could show possession of the mine independent of the possession of the surface of the land for grazing or other purposes. Lehfeldt v. Adams, 130 M 395, 303 P2d 934 (1956).

Detriment Required for Adverse User of Water: In order to acquire a prescriptive right to the use of water in an adjudicated stream, the use must have been detrimental to the one whose title and right are said to have been destroyed and may not be predicated upon use that had in no way lessened the source of water for other decreed rights or tended to destroy them. Woodward v. Perkins, 116 M 46, 147 P2d 1016 (1944).

Presumption Based on Possession: Where, in a water right suit, one from whom plaintiff's immediate predecessor acquired the possession of land under a squatter's claim, after operating it with plaintiff's predecessor presumably as a partner, left the land and never returned and no one ever appeared to contest plaintiff's right to the water used in connection with the land, the statutory presumptions declared by 26-1-602(8), (11), (12), and (27), relative to ownership of property, were sufficient to sustain plaintiff's title, notwithstanding break in chain from original appropriator. Cook v. Hudson, 110 M 263, 103 P2d 137 (1940).

TIME LIMIT

Lack of Statutory Five-Year Period Renders Question of Adverse Possession Moot: The plaintiffs blocked a road crossing their property in May of 1985 and brought a quiet title action in April 1988. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that prior to May 1985, the defendants' use of the road was permissive. The Supreme Court held that the period from May 1985 to April 1988 was less than the statutory 5-year period required to establish a prescriptive easement and that therefore the question of whether the use was permissive or adverse was not relevant. Brown v. Tintinger, 245 M 373, 801 P2d 607, 47 St. Rep. 2179 (1990).

Plaintiffs' Claim to Mineral Estate Barred by Laches: The original owner of the subject property had initially transferred the property and retained the mineral rights. A number of years later, the original owner quitclaimed the mineral rights to "the owner or owners of the land". Fifty years later, the plaintiffs argued that the subsequent transfer of the mineral rights did not merge the two estates because they were equal estates and therefore the plaintiffs did not have to bring their action until extraction began. They had done so within the 5-year period required by statute. The plaintiffs contended that the doctrine of laches could not apply to their interest in the mineral rights. The Supreme Court held that the mineral rights were the dominant estate and that therefore the two estates had merged when the original owner made a second transfer consisting of the mineral rights. The court then stated that in the following 50 years, the plaintiffs had no contact with the property and paid no taxes on the property. The court ruled that the doctrine of laches did apply and that the plaintiffs' suit was barred. Hunter v. Rosebud County, 240 M 194, 783 P2d 927, 46 St. Rep. 2048 (1989).

Statutory Period for Prescriptive Easement: The burden is on the easement claimant to show open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the easement claimed for the full statutory period, citing Taylor v. Petranek, 173 M 433, 568 P2d 120 (1977), and Rathbun v. Robson, 203 M 319, 661 P2d 850 (1983). The statutory period is 5 years under this statute. Clemans v. Martin, 221 M 483, 719 P2d 787, 43 St. Rep. 994 (1986). See also Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996).

Five-Year Occupancy Period — Suspension by Litigation: In 1954, the plaintiff moved to his ailing brother's ranch to care for his brother and the ranch. After his brother's death in 1969, a purported holographic will leaving the ranch to the plaintiff was contested by the deceased brother's personal representative. In 1978, the will was declared invalid. The plaintiff, who had remained in possession of the ranch during this time, then brought a quiet title action based on adverse possession. However, the period for adverse possession had not run because the personal representative had contested the plaintiff's right to the ranch through the litigation process, and during the pendency of that litigation, the period for adverse possession was suspended. Craddock v. Berryman, 198 M 155, 645 P2d 399, 39 St. Rep. 835 (1982).

Partition Statute Not Statute of Limitations — Real Property Statute Applicable: Two brothers were partners in a ranching operation. One brother died and the surviving brother purchased the deceased brother's interest from his estate in 1940. In 1973 the deceased partner's sons found a note from their mother stating they had a one-third interest in the property. In April, 1978, they instituted action for partition of the property, claiming they were cotenants. Plaintiffs contended that 70-29-101, which states no time limit, was the applicable Statute of Limitations. Section 70-29-101 is not a Statute of Limitations but merely sets forth the right of a cotenant in possession to file a partition action. Section 70-19-401 is the applicable Statute of Limitations, a 5-year period for the recovery of an interest in real property. The action was barred by 70-19-401. Glennie v. Glennie Ranches, 184 M 77, 601 P2d 699 (1979).

Action for Quiet Title: Plaintiffs were not barred from commencing an action for quiet title even though they were not possessed of the premises during the 5 years before commencement. It was sufficient for plaintiffs to have been in legal seisin by having a perfect and complete title for those years. Stephens v. Hurly, 172 M 269, 563 P2d 546 (1977), followed in Gue v. Olds, 245 M 117, 799 P2d 543, 47 St. Rep. 1906 (1990).

Permissive Use: Where the original use of an easement for a ditch was by permission of the landowner, the statutory period prescribed by this section did not start to run without some specific indication of a use adverse or hostile to the landowner's title. Drew v. Burggraf, 141 M 405, 378 P2d 232 (1963).

Statute of Limitations:

In an action to quiet title, the fact that a county, which was named party defendant several months after the action was commenced, may have been entitled to assert the Statute of Limitations as a defense did not make the same defense available to the plaintiff against a cross-complaint filed before the lapse of the statutory period following the plaintiff's acquisition of a tax title. Marek v. Smith, 132 M 73, 314 P2d 864 (1957).

Where new parties are brought into a case and between the commencement of the suit and the time when they are brought in the period of limitations has expired, the new parties may plead the Statute of Limitations for themselves, but the plea is not available to the original defendants. Marek v. Smith, 132 M 73, 314 P2d 864 (1957).

Ejectment and Mesne Profits: The period of limitation for an action in ejectment, with claim for mesne profits—the value and use of the property during the period of its wrongful withholding—was 10 years, under this section and 27-2-214. Kurth v. Le Jeune, 83 M 100, 269 P 408 (1928).

Action Barred: Under this section and 70-19-402, where it appeared in an action to quiet title that plaintiff had not been seized or in possession of the land in question for the statutory period prior to the commencement of the action, his right to maintain it was barred. Thompson v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 78 M 170, 253 P 313 (1927).

70-19-402. Action or defense arising out of title to property or profits — possession within 5 years required.

Case Notes

Adverse Possession Claim Not Interrupted by Suit Seeking Establishment of Easement: Parker maintained an adverse possession claim for 5 years. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. (Tungsten), argued that its prior lawsuit interrupted the 5-year period and tolled the adverse possession action. In that suit, Tungsten requested that title to an easement over a portion of the property be quieted in its favor, and the suit remained pending for 1 ½ years during the adverse possession period. The Supreme Court agreed that the 5-year period is tolled during the pendency of an action to establish title to the property that conflicts with the title claimed by the adverse claimant. However, in this case, Tungsten did not challenge Parker's title to the property, but rather sought to establish an easement over it, so the prior action did not interrupt the 5-year adverse possession period. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Parker, 2001 MT 117, 305 M 329, 27 P3d 429 (2001), distinguishing Flathead Lumber Corp. v. Everett, 127 M 291, 263 P2d 376 (1953), Brown v. Cartwright, 163 M 139, 515 P2d 684 (1973), and Craddock v. Berryman, 198 M 155, 645 P2d 399 (1982).

Payment of Taxes Not Yet Due Not Required to Sustain Adverse Possession Claim: Pursuant to 70-19-411, a party claiming adverse possession must occupy the property continuously for 5 years and must have paid all legally levied and assessed taxes on the property. Parker received notice for property taxes due on October 31, 1997, but the taxes were not paid. The 5-year period of adverse possession commenced when Parker received the defective tax deeds on November 24, 1992, so the 5-year adverse possession period would have expired on November 24, 1997. The District Court held that because the 1997 taxes were assessed prior to November 24, 1997, and were unpaid, Parker's claim for adverse possession failed. Parker maintained that the adverse possession language in 70-19-411 should be interpreted in combination with the statutory provisions for levy, notice, and payment of taxes in the tax code in Title 15. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to 15-10-305, real estate taxes are levied and assessed on the second Monday in October, while 15-16-102 provides that one-half of each year's property taxes is payable on or before November 30 and the other one-half is payable on or before May 31 of the following year. Therefore, although the 1997 taxes were levied prior to the expiration of the 5-year adverse possession period on November 25, 1997, the taxes were not delinquent until November 30, 1997, 1 week after the adverse possession period ended. The Supreme Court concluded that 70-19-411 does not require the payment of taxes that are not yet due in order to sustain a claim of adverse possession. Thus, the District Court erred in concluding that Parker did not meet the requirements of 70-19-411, and the decision was reversed. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Parker, 2001 MT 117, 305 M 329, 27 P3d 429 (2001).

Elements of Adverse Possession Not Shown: Once the true boundary line became known in 1971, defendants made only one demand for the property in dispute, which was rebuffed, and made no additional claim adverse to plaintiffs until 1983. Defendants never occupied the property prior to 1983, when they built a garage over the survey line, or paid taxes on the property. Plaintiffs brought an action for ejectment and rents in 1985. The District Court correctly held that defendants never occupied the property in a manner establishing adverse possession or an easement. Smithers v. Hagerman, 244 M 182, 797 P2d 177, 47 St. Rep. 1483 (1990), followed in Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Strangers to Record Title Barred From Quiet Title Action: The District Court properly barred a quiet title claim after finding that plaintiff and his predecessor in interest were both complete strangers to the record title of an oil and gas lease and thus were not seized of the lease. Bretz v. Ayers, 232 M 132, 756 P2d 1115, 45 St. Rep. 936 (1988).

Quiet Title Action — Limitation of Actions: Some causes of action do not clearly fall within the provisions of the specific Statutes of Limitation found in this Code. Normally, the residual Statute of Limitations in 27-2-215 (renumbered 27-2-231) would then be applicable. This is not the case, however, when the cause concerns real estate. Under 70-19-402, it appears that seizure or possession within the 5 years prior to the commencement of the action is the only limitation imposed by statute on plaintiff in this case, who sued to quiet title. Since she was seized of a mineral interest during that period, she was entitled to wait until her title was questioned before filing suit. The running of time (here, more than 25 years) tends to strengthen rather than destroy title determined by decree. Peterson v. Hopkins, 210 M 429, 684 P2d 1061, 41 St. Rep. 1140 (1984).

Mineral Interest — No Proof of Possession: In an action to quiet title to certain royalty interests claimed by Rosebud County, the county argued that the plaintiffs were barred by the Statute of Limitations from claiming ownership of the royalty interest. The Supreme Court held that the county failed to overcome the presumption created by 70-19-404 that plaintiffs were in possession within the required period. Since the county failed to prove all the elements of adverse possession, the Statutes of Limitations in this section and 70-19-401 are not applicable. King v. Rosebud County, 193 M 268, 631 P2d 711, 38 St. Rep. 1145 (1981).

Action for Quiet Title: Plaintiffs were not barred from commencing an action for quiet title even though they were not possessed of the premises during the 5 years before commencement. It was sufficient for plaintiffs to have been in legal seisin by having a perfect and complete title for those years. Stephens v. Hurly, 172 M 269, 563 P2d 546 (1977).

Proving Title by Adverse Possession — Burden Upon Claimant: Where defendants establish they are successors to owner of legal title, burden of producing evidence is then cast upon plaintiffs to establish their adverse possession. Horacek v. Hudson, 167 M 394, 538 P2d 1019 (1975).

Mineral and Surface Rights: Where there was a reserved right of entry for mining purposes in another person, the owner of the surface rights could not acquire any rights by adverse possession unless he could show possession of the mine independently of the possession of the surface of the land for grazing or other purposes. Lehfeldt v. Adams, 130 M 395, 303 P2d 934 (1956).

Tolling of Statute by Action:

Since a person in adverse possession can acquire no new right as against the plaintiffs by the mere fact that they remain in possession during the pendency of the action, it follows that a pleading of adverse possession by defendants for the statutory period is insufficient to constitute a defense unless it is alleged that the period was complete before the commencement of the action, and the trial court erred in sustaining a motion for judgment on the pleadings and in entering judgment thereon for defendants. Flathead Lumber Corp. v. Everett, 127 M 291, 263 P2d 376 (1953).

The bringing of an action against one in adverse possession disputing his title arrests the running of the statute. Flathead Lumber Corp. v. Everett, 127 M 291, 263 P2d 376 (1953).

Conveyance in Trust: Where daughter deeded property to mother to be held in trust for her and later mother deeded property to another daughter with the understanding that it was to be held for the benefit of the first daughter, the possession of the mother and the second daughter was the possession of and for the first daughter and therefore an action by the first daughter to recover the property was not barred. Opp v. Boggs, 121 M 131, 193 P2d 379 (1948), distinguished in Barrett v. Zenisek, 132 M 229, 315 P2d 1001 (1957).

70-19-404. Presumption of possession within prescribed period — adverse possession as exception.

Case Notes

Accrual of Adverse Use Prohibited When Property Owned by Government: Because a private party cannot obtain a prescriptive easement against the federal government, a private party's adverse use of property did not begin to run until the federal government conveyed title to the property to a private entity. Burcalow Family, LLC v. Corral Bar, Inc., 2013 MT 345, 372 Mont. 498, 313 P.3d 182.

Permission to Use Dock Granted by Prior Owner — Whether Permission Carries Over to Subsequent Owners to Be Evaluated on Case-by-Case Basis — No Prescriptive Easement: In urging the Supreme Court to find that they had established an easement by prescription to a dock owned by the plaintiff, the defendants urged the court to follow the rule outlined in Han Farms, Inc. v. Molitor, 2003 MT 153, 316 Mont. 249, 70 P.3d 1238, which declared that one owner's grant of permission does not continue by default to the next owner. After reviewing significant case law regarding the transferability of permission for use, the court declined to adopt the defendants' argument and overruled the proposition in Han Farms that permission can never carry over from one owner to another after the sale of the servient property. Rather, the court reiterated that based on a thorough reading of its permissive use cases, the court will always consider the nature of the initial permission and attendant circumstances to analyze whether permission exists. Pedersen v. Ziehl, 2013 MT 306, 372 Mont. 223, 311 P.3d 765.

Continuous, Not Constant, Use for Statutory Period Sufficient to Establish Prescriptive Easement — Prescription Elements Satisfied: Defendant asserted that the District Court erred in holding that plaintiffs had established a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, arguing that the use was not hostile and that the use did not meet the continuous use requirement because it was sporadic and infrequent. The Supreme Court affirmed on both issues. Plaintiffs testified that defendant threatened in various conversations to fence off the property, indicating that defendant considered plaintiffs' use to be hostile to his property interest. Additionally, use does not need to be constant in order to satisfy the continuous use requirement. Plaintiffs used the right-of-way whenever they desired, without interference by defendant, for at least 30 years, so the use was considered continuous and uninterrupted. Plaintiffs satisfied the statutory requirements and were properly granted a prescriptive easement. Wolf v. Owens, 2007 MT 302, 340 M 74, 172 P3d 124 (2007).

No Harm in Reference in Findings of Fact to Historic Public Use of Disputed Road Over Which Private Easement at Issue: In determining whether a prescriptive easement existed across defendants' property, the District Court referenced the fact that the road in question had been used for certain public purposes for many years. Defendants contended that because this case did not present a public easement issue, the court erred by entering findings of fact related to public use of the disputed road. The Supreme Court held that because the public use findings were not addressed in the conclusions of law and judgment, served only to give credibility to plaintiffs' private claim, and had no other legal effect, there was no harm in referencing evidence of historic public use of a road over which the private easement was at issue. Clark v. Heirs & Devisees of Dwyer, 2007 MT 237, 339 M 197, 170 P3d 927 (2007).

Failure to Prove Elements of Prescriptive Easement — Effective Easement of No Avail to Nonadjoining Landowner: Sunday claimed a prescriptive easement across Harboways' property based on the existence of an alleged road. However, testimony at trial was conflicting as to the time of use, extent of use, and location of the road at issue, which Harboways claimed was nothing more than an indistinct two-rut trail. The District Court examined the history of the property both before and after its acquisition by Harboways and found that neither Sunday nor Sunday's predecessors in interest established a prescriptive easement on any of the tracts owned by Harboways prior to Harboways' purchase of the property, so absent proof of the statutory elements of a prescriptive easement, Sunday did not have an easement across Harboways' property. The court did find that a 30-foot easement surrounded one of Harboways' parcels, but the parcel did not abut Sunday's land, nor was Sunday's land a dominant tenement with benefit of the easement, so Sunday was not entitled to use the easement. Sunday v. Harboway, 2006 MT 95, 332 M 104, 136 P3d 965 (2006).

State Law Controlling as to Ownership for Purposes of Federal Drug Forfeiture of Real Property — Right, Title, and Interest Found in Daughter of Convicted Drug Dealer — Daughter's Forfeiture Reversed: Victor "Big Vic" Nava was convicted in federal court of federal criminal offenses based upon his dealing in methamphetamines. The government also obtained forfeiture of two pieces of real estate under 21 U.S.C. 853, based upon the jury's conclusion that the property was used in the drug dealing and the District Court's conclusion that Victoria, daughter of Big Vic, who was record owner of the two properties, had failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that she had held right, title, and interest to the properties. For this reason, the District Court denied Victoria's motion to set aside the forfeiture. The court of appeals held that title must be determined by state law and not federal common law or else ownership for state law purposes would be thrown into question and "havoc" at the state courthouse (with the recordation of property rights) would be the result. The court of appeals held that Victoria's evidence that she had received the property in a purchase or a gift from her father, held record title to the property, lived at the property, and taken out a second mortgage on the property was sufficient against the evidence by the government that Victoria was unemployed, that some witnesses thought her father owned the property, that Victor had made a statement in a plea bargain that he owned it, and that Victor had made some tax payments on the property for Victoria. The court of appeals therefore reversed the forfeiture order of the District Court. U.S. v. Nava, 404 F3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2005).

Incorrect Finding of Prescriptive Easement for Road and Residence — Moving of Residence Not Required: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement had been established for a road that strayed into an adjoining parcel and for a residence, the corner of which also extended into the adjoining parcel. The Supreme Court found the record full of contradictory assertions and findings, but noted that because the actual location of the road was concealed from the owner by way of maps and misrepresentations as to its true location, the record did not come close to establishing the elements of hostility or open and notorious use by clear and convincing evidence to establish a prescriptive easement for the road. Further, the owner of the residence conceded that the corner of the foundation and eaves encroached onto the adjoining parcel. Never having paid taxes on the land in question, the owner could not prevail on a claim of adverse possession to obtain title to the ground under the encroachment, so a finding of a prescriptive easement for the residence was also in error. However, because the property owner indicated at trial and in appeal briefs that he was willing to work something out regarding the encroachment, the Supreme Court concluded that to require removal of the encroachment would be extreme and declined to order that the residence be moved from its foundation. Gelderloos v. Duke, 2004 MT 94, 321 M 1, 88 P3d 814 (2004).

No Public Prescriptive Use of Mining Road Never Declared Public Road — Prescriptive Easement Established and Not Extinguished by Reverse Adverse Possession: Owners of a road used since 1936 for mining access claimed a public prescriptive use. The road was never formally declared a public road or used for the statutorily required period of time sufficient to establish a prescriptive easement. Thus, the existence of a public prescriptive easement depended on the exploratory use that took place when the mine was not in full operation, recreational use by the public, and county road maintenance. However, even taken together, this evidence did not rise to the level of public prescriptive use. The District Court did not err in finding that no public prescriptive easement existed over the road. However, while the evidence did not qualify as a public easement, it did qualify as a private easement in plaintiff's favor. Virtually unrestricted use of the road between 1936 and 1961 met the requirements of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, uninterrupted use for the required statutory period. Further, defendant's act of locking a gate across the road and providing plaintiff a key and access with permission was not a distinct and positive assertion unequivocally hostile and adverse to plaintiff sufficient to extinguish plaintiff's easement by reverse adverse possession. Brimstone Min., Inc. v. Glaus, 2003 MT 236, 317 M 236, 77 P3d 175 (2003). See also Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990).

Conflicting Evidence Regarding Prescriptive Easement for Ditch Maintenance — District Court Affirmed: Plaintiff alleged that defendant's access to plaintiff's property for ditch maintenance must be limited to the historic use of the ditch bank. The District Court was presented with conflicting evidence regarding how open defendant's use of plaintiff's property was and determined that plaintiff knew or should have known that defendant was accessing the ditch by various routes across plaintiff's property and that the access was not permissive. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that defendant had a prescriptive easement, and that finding was not disturbed on appeal. Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

Prescriptive Easement Properly Granted — Terms Defined: To establish an easement by prescription, the party claiming the easement must show open and notorious, exclusive, continuous, uninterrupted, and adverse use of the claimed easement for a 5-year period. Open and notorious use means a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to and brought to the attention of the owner. Exclusive use means that the right of the claimant must rest upon its own foundations and not depend on a like right in any other person. Continuous use means use that is made often enough to constitute notice of the claim to the potential servient owner. Uninterrupted use means use that is not interrupted by the act of the owner of the land or by voluntary abandonment by the party claiming the right. Adverse use means use exercised under a claim of right and not as a mere privilege or license revocable at the pleasure of the owner of the land. A claim must be known to and acquiesced in by the owner of the land. A party claiming the easement has the burden of proving each element of prescription by clear and convincing evidence. If the party claiming easement establishes all of the elements, then the burden falls on the opposing party to show that the use was permissive rather than adverse. In the present case, there was no evidence of concealment of the regular use or maintenance of a road for several decades, which was adequate to provide plaintiffs with notice that there was a claim to use of the road. Because no permissive use was shown, and because the use was sufficiently open and notorious to establish a claim, the District Court did not err in granting defendants a prescriptive easement over plaintiffs' property. Brumit v. Lewis, 2002 MT 346, 313 M 332, 61 P3d 138 (2002), distinguishing Cope v. Cope, 158 M 388, 493 P2d 336 (1971), and Amerimont, Inc. v. Gannett, 278 M 314, 924 P2d 1326 (1996). See also Rappold v. Durocher, 257 M 329, 849 P2d 1017 (1993), and Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724 (1994).

Use of Private Road Permissive by Neighborly Accommodation — Public Prescriptive Easement Not Established: Plaintiffs sought an easement of record from defendants regarding the rural road crossing plaintiffs' property, but defendants refused. Plaintiffs then sought a declaratory judgment that the road was a public road established by prescriptive use, asserting that the road was a public thoroughfare established by common-law dedication as evidenced by a 1916 petition for the opening of a school and a 1948 petition to establish a road. The District Court found that the 1916 and 1948 petitions did not establish an offer evidencing an intention to dedicate the road to the public and that use of the road was instead permissive through neighborly accommodation. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. All elements of a prescriptive easement must be proved by clear and convincing evidence because one who has legal title should not be forced to give up what is rightfully theirs without the opportunity to know that the title is in jeopardy and to fight for it. Once a claimant establishes the elements of a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises, and the burden shifts to the landowner to establish that the use was permissive. If permissive use is shown, no easement can be acquired because the theory of prescriptive easement is based on adverse use. Use of a neighbor's land based upon mere neighborly accommodation or courtesy is not adverse and cannot ripen into a prescriptive easement. Rather, in addition to use, generally some circumstance or act tending to indicate that the use was not merely permissive is required. The presence of gates or other obstructions, to be opened and closed by parties passing over the land, has always been considered strong evidence in support of a mere license to the public to pass over the designated way. The facts here showed that use of the road was permissive and at the pleasure of the landowners, so no public prescriptive easement existed. Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002). See also Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), Hitshew v. Failure to Show Adverse Use — No Prescriptive Easement Established: Ray sued Bromenshenk and Zimmerman to quiet title to a prescriptive easement across their properties. The District Court found that Ray did not have a prescriptive easement across either property and granted defendants an injunction restraining Ray from running wastewater across the properties. Ray appealed. The Supreme Court examined the record and concluded that Ray's use of Bromenshenk's property was not adverse, so no prescriptive easement existed across that property. Further, Zimmerman's blockage of the ditch running across the Zimmerman property resulted in an interruption of Ray's adverse use, so Ray's use of the ditch was not continuous and uninterrupted for the requisite 5-year period. Thus, no prescriptive easement existed regarding the Zimmerman property either. The District Court was affirmed. Ray v. Nansel, 2002 MT 191, 311 M 135, 53 P3d 870 (2002). See also Hays v. De Atley, 65 M 558, 212 P 296 (1923), Te Selle v. Storey, 133 M 1, 319 P2d 218 (1957), and Albert v. Hastetter, 2002 MT 123, 310 M 82, 48 P3d 749 (2002).

Limited Prescriptive Easement Established — Obvious Use Viewed as Open and Notorious: Albert filed an action to determine a claim for a prescriptive easement and quiet title to a road across Hastetter's property. Hastetter raised the affirmative defense of estoppel, claiming that Albert recognized Hastetter's legitimate title to the road by requesting an easement in an earlier letter and that the use was permissive and subject to Hastetter's consent. The trial court found that Albert had a prescriptive easement that was limited to the historical use of providing access and moving cattle to and from Albert's pasture. Hastetter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Albert established the elements for a prescriptive easement during the statutory 5-year period, and thus enjoyed the presumption that his use was adverse to Hastetter's interest. Although the servient landowner must know about and acquiesce to the user's claim of right, Montana law does not require that a prescriptive easement claimant verbally communicate a hostile intent. Open and notorious use can be established by showing that the condition of use was so obvious that the owner was not deceived and should have known of the claimant's use. Further, Albert had used the road to move cattle periodically since 1958 and had used the road to check the condition of fences and gates. Given the obvious use of the gates to control livestock, the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it refrained from scrutinizing the gates as evidence of permissive use. Albert v. Hastetter, 2002 MT 123, 310 M 82, 48 P3d 749 (2002), followed in Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Public Use for Statutory Period Coupled With Assumption of Adverse Control — Public Prescriptive Easement Established: An easement by prescription is created by operation of law through open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use for 5 years. Following the same criteria, applied to public prescriptive easements in Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990), the Supreme Court noted that to establish the existence of a public road by prescription, it must be shown that the public followed a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly for the prescribed statutory period, together with an assumption of control adverse to the owner. To be open and notorious, the use of a claimed right must give the landowner actual knowledge of the claimed right or be of such a character as to raise a presumption of notice. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right may not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. To be adverse, the use or assumption of control of a claimed right must be exercised under a claim of right and not as a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the landowner. Regular maintenance of a roadway by the party asserting a prescriptive easement is evidence of adverse rather than permissive use. Because a public prescriptive easement is "public", the element of exclusivity is not required in establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement. In the present case, the county presented sufficient evidence establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement on German Gulch Road, including a history of open public use and county maintenance of the road, an absence of evidence that the public ever abandoned use of the road, and the fact that plaintiff never erected gates, barriers, or signs on the road to create the impression of permissive use or established permissive use through neighborly accommodation. Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996).

Public Road by Prescription — Adversity Satisfied by County Newspaper Publication — Intermittent Maintenance and Neighborly Accommodation Not Substantiated: Swandal Ranch Company (SRC) brought an action to quiet title to a stretch of roadway, known as Wallrock Road, running through the ranch. The District Court held that Park County had established a public easement by prescription. The Supreme Court held that Park County had satisfied the requirements for a prescriptive easement, noting that declaration by the county in 1950 of its intent to create a public road by statutory process and subsequent newspaper publication of the minutes of the County Commissioners' meeting put SRC on notice of the county's interest in Wallrock Road, even though the intent of the Commissioners had been to create the public road by a different process. The Supreme Court also found that county maintenance of the road had not been intermittent and that there was sufficient evidence that use of the road was not by neighborly accommodation. Swandal Ranch Co. v. Hunt, 276 M 229, 915 P2d 840, 53 St. Rep. 361 (1996), followed in Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996).

Possession of Real Property Insufficient to Grant Title Against Good Faith Purchasers — No Adverse Possession Shown: In 1989, the Luloffs bought part of a ranch from the Manweilers by a deed that excluded "Tract B". The Luloffs mistakenly assumed that Tract B was the part of the ranch that had been occupied by the Blackburns for approximately 4 years. When the Luloffs later discovered that Tract B was another part of the ranch, they brought an action to have the Blackburns evicted, and the District Court granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was correctly granted because there was no contract between the Manweilers and the Blackburns satisfying the statute of frauds for the sale of the property to the Blackburns. The Supreme Court held that the Blackburns' mere possession was insufficient against the Luloffs, who had purchased the ranch as bona fide purchasers in good faith, because they were without notice of any claim of title by the Blackburns. The Supreme Court noted that the Blackburns could not make a claim of title because they had mere possession, which did not satisfy the requirements for adverse possession because the Blackburns had not paid taxes upon the property. Luloff v. Blackburn, 274 M 64, 906 P2d 189, 52 St. Rep. 1124 (1995).

Easement by Way of Necessity — Incompatible With Prescriptive Easement: A way of necessity is incompatible with a prescriptive right for the same easement. A prescriptive right never accrues in a way of necessity as long as the necessity continues. There are two basic elements of easements by way of necessity: (1) unity of ownership; and (2) strict necessity. The necessity must exist at the time the unified tracts are severed. The way granted must be over the grantor's land and never over the land of a third party or stranger to the title, and finally there must be strict unity of ownership. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988), followed in Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Hidden Village, Inc., 276 M 268, 915 P2d 845, 53 St. Rep. 379 (1996).

No Implied Easement: Courts are reluctant to find easements by implication because such an action results in depriving a person of the use of his property by imposing a servitude by mere implication. To create an easement by implication from a preexisting use imposed on one part of the property for the benefit of another party, unity of title at the time of the severance thereof is required. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988).

Prescriptive Easement Established — Summary Judgment — Burden of Proof: In a quiet title action, once defendant filed affidavits reciting facts that would fulfill the requirements for a prescriptive easement, it became the duty of the plaintiff not to rest upon mere allegations or denials but to respond by affidavit or otherwise, setting forth specific facts showing there was a genuine issue of material fact for trial. It was the plaintiff's burden to show that defendant's use was permissive. Summary judgment for the defendant was proper due to the plaintiff's failure to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Defendant was under no duty to communicate by word of mouth to the plaintiff or his predecessors in interest that she was using the roadway over plaintiff's property under a claim of right and adversely to them. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988).

No Prescriptive Use of Water Found: The Water Court was correct in holding that Merrimac did not prove its claim of prescriptive use to the waters of Martin Creek and Davis Creek from the 1800s through 1980. Merrimac did not acquire adverse possession through 1973 since the water use was based on an accommodation between the parties. In 1973, the Water Use Act eliminated the right to acquire a water-use right by prescription. Merrimac was not entitled to a fractional share of water on the ground that Merrimac had always used one-third of the waters of Martin Creek and Davis Creek since Merrimac never deprived Hill of his water supply. There was no adverse taking. Hill v. Merrimac Cattle Co., Inc., 211 M 479, 687 P2d 59, 41 St. Rep. 1504 (1984).

No Interest Acquired in Property by Possessory Use Without Payment of Taxes: In 1978, Burlingames acquired a parcel of land adjoining Marjerrisons' land. A survey of Burlingames' property indicated that Marjerrisons' fence enclosed 5 acres of Burlingames' property. Since 1935, Marjerrisons had used the 5-acre parcel, along with their property, for cattle grazing, agriculture, and timber harvesting. Burlingames filed an action to quiet title. The District Court ruled that Burlingames possessed title to the 5-acre parcel but that Marjerrisons had acquired prescriptive easements for grazing, agricultural, and timber harvesting purposes. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, stating that since an easement is a nonpossessory interest and Marjerrisons had complete possession of the parcel for the statutory period, the only interest they could have acquired was full title. Treating Marjerrisons' claim as one for adverse possession, the court then ruled that although their use was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for a 5-year period, they had not paid property taxes on the disputed parcel as required by 70-19-411, and thus have acquired no interest in the property. Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136, 40 St. Rep. 1005 (1983).

Prescriptive Easement — Intent as Central Element: Plaintiffs own a farm surrounded on three sides by the Flathead River and Flathead Lake. After Kerr Dam was built in 1939, the water table in the area began to rise. In 1960 plaintiffs filed suit claiming inverse condemnation of their land and damages due to the rising of the water table. The complaint was amended four times over the years and was finally tried in 1979. Defendant claimed that the cause was barred by prescription and the Statute of Limitations. Defendant failed to establish prescription. Defendant did not show "open and notorious" occupation of the land for any period of time and had consistently denied occupation of the land. Defendant also failed to show an intention to occupy the land. Intention is a central element of prescriptive easements. Blasdel v. Mont. Power Co., 196 M 417, 640 P2d 889, 39 St. Rep. 219 (1982).

Mineral Interest — No Proof of Possession: In an action to quiet title to certain royalty interests claimed by Rosebud County, the county argued that the plaintiffs were barred by the Statute of Limitations from claiming ownership of the royalty interest. The Supreme Court held that the county failed to overcome the presumption created by this section that plaintiffs were in possession within the required period. Since the county failed to prove all the elements of adverse possession, the Statutes of Limitations in 70-19-401 and 70-19-402 are not applicable. King v. Rosebud County, 193 M 268, 631 P2d 711, 38 St. Rep. 1145 (1981).

Establishment of Prescriptive Easement by the Public — Road Across Private Land: Plaintiffs owned land through which a road ran. The public used that road in a continuous and uninterrupted way for over 25 years without objection by the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs sought unsuccessfully to close the road to public use. The plaintiffs' assertion of error in this case concerned only the last element for establishing a prescriptive easement, the exercise of control adverse to the owner. Adverse control is presumed when all other elements have been proved. The undisputed facts supported rather than rebutted this presumption. For example, most members of the public never asked for permission to use the road, and the county graded and maintained the road and laid gravel on the road without the plaintiffs' permission. McClurg v. Flathead County Comm'rs, 179 M 518, 610 P2d 1153 (1980), followed in Rasmussen v. Fowler, 245 M 308, 800 P2d 1053, 47 St. Rep. 2134 (1990), and Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999), and distinguished in Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996).

Use for Less Than Statutory Period: Adverse use for less than full statutory period of 5 years confers no right or interest upon the adverse user, so that there was no consideration for an alleged contract granting an easement over another route. Larson v. Burnett, 158 M 421, 492 P2d 921 (1972).

Easement Established Even When Owner Paid Taxes — Highway: Where county adversely paved and maintained a highway over the land of a private party for a period of more than 10 years, such county acquired an easement by prescription over the land even though the private owner was assessed for and paid taxes on the property during the running of the statutory period. Brannon v. Lewis & Clark County, 143 M 200, 387 P2d 706 (1963).

Burden of Proof: In action by mortgagor to quiet title to grazing lands, burden of proving adverse possession was upon the plaintiff. Bell v. Gussenhoven, 132 M 346, 318 P2d 251 (1957).

Default Judgment Attacked: Upon a motion to set aside a default judgment wherein the person in his affidavit of merits alleged that he was the record owner of the real estate, he set up a prima facie defense to the original action because of the presumption of this section that the person who has legal title is in possession. Holen v. Phelps, 131 M 146, 308 P2d 624 (1957).

Contract as Basis for Occupancy: Possession under contract for deed was subordinate to title of owner. Hinton v. Staunton, 124 M 534, 228 P2d 461 (1951).

Tax Deed Claimant in Occupancy: In action by holder of tax deed to quiet title to mining claim, admitted facts and evidence did not support claim of adverse possession by plaintiff or laches or abandonment by holders of legal title. Co-owners who established legal title to property were presumed to have been in possession within the time required by law, as against claim of adverse possession by other co-owners, and where tax deed was declared void on its face or on ground of defect in affidavit by purchaser and failure to comply with jurisdictional requirements, defense of Statute of Limitations was not available against holders of right to redeem. Fariss v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 31 F. Supp. 571 (D.C. Mont. 1940).

Tax Payment Required: When plaintiff, under this section, shows he is the owner of the record title, he has proved a prima facie case in a suit to quiet title, the burden then being cast upon defendant relying upon adverse possession to prove, inter alia, that he or his predecessor paid all the taxes upon the property (70-19-411). His failure to furnish such proof deprives him of the right to relief. Smith v. Whitney, 105 M 523 74 P2d 450 (1937).

Rebuttal of Presumption: Where plaintiff in attempting affirmatively to prove his possession of lands in dispute in his action in ejectment, in which defendant asserted title by adverse possession, testified that he was last in possession more than 10 years prior to the commencement of the action and then not by reason of ownership but by sufferance of the owner thereof, he by proof to the contrary overcame the presumption that he was in possession "within the time required by law" and destroyed his vital allegation that he was ejected by defendant, and judgment of nonsuit was proper. Miner v. Cook, 87 M 500, 288 P 1016 (1930), distinguished in Smith v. Whitney, 105 M 523, 74 P2d 450 (1937).

Easement Based on Legal Title: Where the predecessor of the owner of a ditch right had acquired title to the right-of-way therefor over the public domain by grant from the United States, it will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary, under this section, in an action to enjoin its use by another, that the owner had been possessed thereof within the time required by law and that the occupation by the other party had been in subordination to the legal title, as against the contention that the right was barred by 70-19-401, in that neither plaintiff nor his predecessor had been in possession or seized of the ditch within the statutory period next preceding the commencement of the action. Rodda v. Best, 68 M 205, 217 P 669 (1923).

Deed as Basis for Occupancy: Where possession of land is held under a deed it is presumed that the grantee entered into possession under it, claiming title only to the land described therein, and that his possession was restricted to the premises granted. N. Pac. Ry. v. Cash, 67 M 585, 216 P 782 (1923).

Occupation Considered Subordinate to Legal Title: Under this section, the occupation of property by one not the owner is considered to have been under and in subordination to the legal title. Blackfoot Land Dev. Co. v. Burks, 60 M 544, 199 P 685 (1921).

Continuation of Title Presumed: The law presumes that a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature, and this presumption controls an occupant of land who, as defendant in an action for possession brought by the record owner, admits that the plaintiff obtained title by deed 15 years before; in such an action, it is proper to deny a motion for a nonsuit made at the close of plaintiff's case. Collins v. Thode, 54 M 405, 170 P 940 (1918).

Ejectment Action: Plaintiff in an action in ejectment having shown legal title in himself, it will be presumed that defendant held possession of the disputed ground in subordination to such legal title. Rude v. Marshall, 54 M 27, 166 P 298 (1917); Peter v. Stephens, 11 M 115, 27 P 403 (1891); Lamme v. Dodson, 4 M 560, 2 P 298 (1883).

Public Highway:

Proof of the establishment of a highway by prescription overcomes the presumption which would otherwise prevail, namely, that the use by the public for a long period of years has been in subordination to the legal title. Lockey v. Bozeman, 42 M 387, 113 P 286 (1910).

This section appears to recognize the doctrine that adverse use by the public for the period named in the Statute of Limitations will establish a highway by prescription, but the title will be confined to the very way traveled during the period, unless an attempt has been made by the proper authorities to erect a highway, when the extent of the title will be measured by the claim exhibited by the proceedings. A highway by prescription does not exist unless the proof establishes that the general public has used the way, without substantial interruption, for the time fixed by the Statutes of Limitation applicable to lands. St. v. Auchard, 22 M 14, 55 P 361 (1898). See also Parker v. Elder, 233 M 75, 758 P2d 292, 45 St. Rep. 1305 (1988).

GENERAL

No Easement by Necessity Absent Showing of Strict Necessity to Access Property: Plaintiff claimed an implied easement by necessity to a road that burdened two properties adjoining that of plaintiff. The District Court applied the criteria in Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135 (1998), for establishing an easement by necessity: (1) unity of ownership; and (2) strict necessity at the time that the tracts are severed. The court held that plaintiff failed to establish unity of ownership and held that no easement by necessity existed. On appeal, plaintiff argued that there was unity of ownership based on original ownership of the tracts by the federal government in 1906 and that when the government granted odd-numbered sections of land to the railroad, the government reserved an implied easement over the odd-numbered sections in order to reach the even-numbered sections, citing Leo Sheep Co. v. U.S., 440 US 668 (1979). The Supreme Court questioned citation of Leo Sheep because that case explicitly held that the doctrine of implied easement by necessity did not apply in that case and that the federal government could not claim an easement by necessity. Nevertheless, even if it was agreed that unity of ownership existed at one time through federal ownership, plaintiff failed to satisfy the second prong of the Hoyem Trust test, in that plaintiff could not prove that strict necessity to access existed in 1906 because no one lived on the property when the tracts were severed, so there was no necessity to reach the property. The District Court was affirmed. Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2007 MT 347, 340 M 294, 174 P3d 481 (2007). The Hoyem Trust criteria for determining the existence of an implied easement by necessity were also applied in McKay v. Wilderness Dev., LLC, 2009 MT 410, 353 M 471, 221 P3d 1184 (2009).

Failure to Prove Elements of Prescriptive Easement — Effective Easement of No Avail to Nonadjoining Landowner: Sunday claimed a prescriptive easement across Harboways' property based on the existence of an alleged road. However, testimony at trial was conflicting as to the time of use, extent of use, and location of the road at issue, which Harboways claimed was nothing more than an indistinct two-rut trail. The District Court examined the history of the property both before and after its acquisition by Harboways and found that neither Sunday nor Sunday's predecessors in interest established a prescriptive easement on any of the tracts owned by Harboways prior to Harboways' purchase of the property, so absent proof of the statutory elements of a prescriptive easement, Sunday did not have an easement across Harboways' property. The court did find that a 30-foot easement surrounded one of Harboways' parcels, but the parcel did not abut Sunday's land, nor was Sunday's land a dominant tenement with benefit of the easement, so Sunday was not entitled to use the easement. Sunday v. Harboway, 2006 MT 95, 332 M 104, 136 P3d 965 (2006).

Public Highway Established Pursuant to 1895 Law — Mere Nonuse by County Not Considered Abandonment — Inapplicability of Prescriptive Easement and Reverse Adverse Possession: The District Court found that the Tucker Gulch Road was clearly defined and in use by the public for at least 27 years prior to enactment of sec. 2600, The Codes and Statutes of Montana (1895), which declared all highways and roads then used by the public as public highways. However, the court went on to hold that it was not a petitioned county road and that there was a prescriptive easement by the public over the road that had been lost through abandonment and by reverse adverse possession when a new road was relocated near the old one. The District Court properly found that Tucker Gulch Road was a public highway; however, mere nonuse or lack of maintenance by the county was insufficient to indicate a clear intent to abandon the road without notice and a public hearing. Moreover, the county's failure to respond to several quiet title actions in which the county was not served and the county's adoption of a resolution naming the road did not indicate an intent to abandon. Abandonment cannot be established by mere implication. The Supreme Court cited Baertsch v. Lewis & Clark County, 256 M 114, 845 P2d 106 (1992), for the general rule that title to a public road may not be obtained by adverse possession. The Supreme Court also cited Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990), and affirmed the District Court's finding that there was not a public prescriptive easement along the relocated new road because most of the nonpermissive use of the new road was by occasional recreationists. The District Court's conclusion that creation of the easement was not specific and that the easements were designed for the access of the owners for activities associated with residential living was in error, however, absent evidence in the access agreement or survey establishing such a restriction. Thus, the grant of unrestricted access to landowners who had owned a mine adjoining the property in question was not in error. McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794, 57 St. Rep. 855 (2000), distinguishing Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), and followed in Lee v. Musselshell County, 2004 MT 64, 320 M 294, 87 P3d 423 (2004).

Public Use for Statutory Period Coupled With Assumption of Adverse Control — Public Prescriptive Easement Established: An easement by prescription is created by operation of law through open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use for 5 years. Following the same criteria, applied to public prescriptive easements in Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990), the Supreme Court noted that to establish the existence of a public road by prescription, it must be shown that the public followed a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly for the prescribed statutory period, together with an assumption of control adverse to the owner. To be open and notorious, the use of a claimed right must give the landowner actual knowledge of the claimed right or be of such a character as to raise a presumption of notice. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right may not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. To be adverse, the use or assumption of control of a claimed right must be exercised under a claim of right and not as a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the landowner. Regular maintenance of a roadway by the party asserting a prescriptive easement is evidence of adverse rather than permissive use. Because a public prescriptive easement is "public", the element of exclusivity is not required in establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement. In the present case, the county presented sufficient evidence establishing the existence of a public prescriptive easement on German Gulch Road, including a history of open public use and county maintenance of the road, an absence of evidence that the public ever abandoned use of the road, and the fact that plaintiff never erected gates, barriers, or signs on the road to create the impression of permissive use or established permissive use through neighborly accommodation. Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751, 53 St. Rep. 453 (1996).

Witness Not Party to Judgment and Not Entitled to Prescriptive Easement: A person who is not a party to the action cannot be a party to the judgment. Therefore, in a prescriptive easement action, witnesses who lived in the area of the disputed road and testified as to their use of the road could not be granted a prescriptive easement because they were not parties to the action. Kessinger v. Matulevich, 278 M 450, 925 P2d 864, 53 St. Rep. 1002 (1996), followed in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000).

Adverse Possession — Quiet Title Action Barred by Laches and Statutes of Limitations: In 1954, Clayton obtained a patent from the United States government for a piece of property. A railroad right-of-way ran through the property, but the patent did not refer to the right-of-way. The railroad had acquired the right-of-way by deed in 1892. The railroad tracks were used by at least one train a day both before and after 1954. Railroad work crews used the right-of-way system during this time. In 1983, Clayton filed an action to quiet title to the right-of-way and a tort claim for trespass and damages. The railroad defended on the grounds of adverse possession, prescription, laches, estoppel, and Statutes of Limitations. The railroad also filed a counterclaim to quiet title to its right-of-way. The District Court granted summary judgment for the railroad, ruling that Clayton's claim was barred by laches and all applicable Statutes of Limitations. The Supreme Court affirmed. The railroad acquired a prescriptive easement either based on a written instrument, under 70-19-407, or by enclosing the land and meeting the other requirements of 70-19-408. Murphy v. Atl. Richfield Co., 221 M 166, 717 P2d 558, 43 St. Rep. 717 (1986), distinguished in Gue v. Olds, 245 M 117, 799 P2d 543, 47 St. Rep. 1906 (1990). See also Johnson v. Estate of Shelton, 232 M 85, 754 P2d 828, 45 St. Rep. 887 (1988).

Quiet Title Action — Record Taken as a Whole: A landowner filed an action to quiet title to a county road established 80 years earlier, claiming that defects in the 1902 proceedings prevented establishment of a statutorily created 60-foot-wide public highway and that the existing public road was acquired by prescriptive use and was limited to the greatest width actually used. The record contained the actual petition to establish a road, signed by more than 20 residents of the area, including the appellant's predecessor in interest. The District Court decreed the road to be a 60-foot-wide declared county right-of-way, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The county is not required to prove on the face of the record that public officials had jurisdiction to create a public road if the record, taken as a whole, shows that a public road was created. Sheldon v. Flathead County, 218 M 270, 707 P2d 540, 42 St. Rep. 1573 (1985).

Doctrine of Agreed Boundary — No Boundary Proven: In 1920, a tenant of Christie's predecessor in interest built a fence which served as the boundary between two adjoining parcels now owned by Christie and Papke. In 1976, Christie had the property surveyed and learned that the fence had been improperly placed and that part of his property had been fenced out. Christie destroyed the 1920 fence and built a new one on the actual boundary line. Papke then destroyed that fence and built another where the 1920 fence had been. Under the doctrine of agreed boundary, Papke brought an action to quiet title in him to the portion in dispute. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's ruling that Papke had not established a claim under the agreed boundary doctrine because in order to establish an agreed boundary line, the evidence must show more than mere acquiescence and occupancy for the statutory period. The evidence must also show that there was uncertainty in the location of the line and that the coterminous owners fixed the line by express or implied agreement. The court ruled that Christie's long acquiescence in the existence of the 1920 fence did not create an implied agreement establishing a boundary. Christie v. Papke, 201 M 200, 657 P2d 88, 39 St. Rep. 2054 (1982), followed in Smithers v. Hagerman, 244 M 182, 797 P2d 177, 47 St. Rep. 1483 (1990).

Adverse Possession — Sufficiency of Damages: The appellants in an adverse possession case alleged there was insufficient evidence of the amount of damages to sustain the verdict against them. The Supreme Court considered delay rental receipts and lost profits. A judgment for damages must be supported by substantial evidence that it is not the product of mere guess or speculation. Substantial damages exist whenever the owner of property is deprived of the use of that property. Recovery of damages would not be denied provided the evidence was sufficient to afford a reasonable basis for determining the specific amount awarded. The court held that there was no uncertainty about the existence of substantial damages here. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 192 M 208, 627 P2d 1199, 38 St. Rep. 574 (1981).

Adverse Possession — Failure to Instruct on Permissive Use: In a case involving alleged adverse possession, one issue on appeal was the failure of the trial court to instruct the jury on permissive use in conjunction with adverse possession. The Supreme Court noted case law that implied acquiescence is not the same as permission. Possession may be adverse even though the owner does not interfere with entry and the possessor understands that there will be no future interference with his possession. Upon review of the trial evidence, the Supreme Court found no evidence of permissive use. It noted that the testator on whose behalf the case was brought had treated the land he possessed as his own, paid taxes on the property, and improved it. In the absence of any evidence supporting this portion of the defendant's case, the Supreme Court found no reversible error could have occurred as a result of the District Court's refusal to give a permissive use instruction. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 192 M 208, 627 P2d 1199, 38 St. Rep. 574 (1981).

Doctrine of Agreed Boundary — Burden of Proof: The standard of proof necessary to invoke the doctrine of agreed boundary is clear and convincing. Where, as here, the evidence does not show more than mere acquiescence by property owners as to placement of a fence and occupancy, petitioner/owner does not adequately establish that he and the other owner agreed to a boundary line. Therefore, the doctrine that adjacent landowners may move the boundary line of their respective parcels by agreement does not apply. Huggans v. Weer, 189 M 334, 615 P2d 922 (1980), following Townsend v. Koukol, 148 M 1, 416 P2d 532 (1966).

Burden of Proof: When the claimant has shown an open, visible, continuous, and unmolested use of the land of another for the period of time sufficient to acquire title by adverse possession, the use will be presumed to be under a claim of right and not by license of the owner. In order to overcome this presumption, the burden is upon the owner to show that the use was permissive. Luoma v. Donohoe, 179 M 359, 588 P2d 523 (1978).

Damages: The District Court did not err in finding a defendant who had claimed a prescriptive easement guilty of intentional trespass and in awarding damages to the plaintiff.

Ordinarily a defendant is liable for trespass even though he has acted in good faith, believing he has the legal privilege of entry. Luoma v. Donohoe, 179 M 359, 588 P2d 523 (1978).

Evidence: The presence of jointly maintained gates is generally considered to be strong evidence of a mere personal license to pass over a right-of-way. However, the presumption attending the presence of gates has only been applied to roads used, in effect, by the general public. Luoma v. Donohoe, 179 M 359, 588 P2d 523 (1978).

Acquiescence: Landowners and their predecessors in interest acquired by prescription an easement for the diversion and conveyance of water validly appropriated from adjoining land where water system had been in existence prior to 1908, had been in continuous use since that time, and had been regularly repaired and maintained with knowledge of and without complaint by previous owners of the adjoining land. The easement encompassed both the waterline and the diversion system. Circumstances of adverse possession were sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry since a casual inspection of premises would have disclosed fenced inclosure with intake system and attached underground waterline. Failure of former owners of adjoining land to object to water system raised inference of acquiescence rather than license. O'Connor v. Brodie, 153 M 129, 454 P2d 920 (1969).

Secondary Easements: Landowners who acquired an easement by prescription for maintenance of waterline and diversion system on adjoining property had right, under doctrine of secondary easement, to fence the diversion work to protect it from livestock and pollution. O'Connor v. Brodie, 153 M 129, 454 P2d 920 (1969).

Transfer of Servient Estate: Prescriptive title once established is not divested by the subsequent transfer of the servient estate. O'Connor v. Brodie, 153 M 129, 454 P2d 920 (1969).

Water Rights:

Defendants failed to establish a prescriptive water right regardless of priority of rights, where depositions which were self-serving declarations were not admissible as ancient documents or public records as exceptions to hearsay rule and no other satisfactory proof of possession or use of the water was shown. King v. Schultz, 141 M 94, 375 P2d 108 (1962).

In order to acquire a prescriptive right to use of water in an adjudicated stream, the use must have been detrimental to the one whose title and right are said to have been destroyed and may not be predicated upon fact that use had in no way lessened source of water for other decreed rights or tended to destroy them. One claiming a right under a decree where his predecessor in interest was a party to the action is estopped from claiming a right by prescription as against any of the decreed rights. Woodward v. Perkins, 116 M 46, 147 P2d 1016 (1944), appeal dismissed in 119 M 11, 171 P2d 997 (1946).

Nature of Title:

The title to an easement acquired by prescription is as effective as though evidenced by a deed. Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91 (1962); Ferguson v. Standley, 89 M 489, 300 P 245 (1931); Stetson v. Youngquist, 76 M 600, 248 P 196 (1926). See also Groshean v. Dillmont Realty Co., 92 M 227, 12 P2d 273 (1932).

A title by prescription is as effective as though evidenced by a deed. Te Selle v. Storey, 133 M 1, 319 P2d 218 (1957).

Owner of Prescriptive Easement — May Enjoin Interference: Plaintiffs, who acquired prescriptive easement in road across property of defendants by use for 35 years before defendants acquired title to the land and attempted to obstruct use, were entitled to enjoin defendants from interfering with use of right-of-way over road. Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91 (1962).

Change From Permissive to Hostile Possession:

While a permissive possession may subsequently become hostile, to make it so there must have been a repudiation of the permissive possession brought home to the owner by actual notice. "Hostile" possession, within this rule, means an invasion of the owner's possession by the claimant without the owner's permission and in violation of the latter's right of property. "Adverse" possession means having opposing interests, having interests for the preservation of which opposition is essential. Price v. W. Life Ins. Co., 115 M 509, 146 P2d 165 (1944).

Possession of real property by permission of the owner and with knowledge of title in him cannot be made the basis of a title by prescription, and though permissive possession may subsequently become hostile, to make it so there must be a repudiation of the permissive possession and of the recognition of ownership implicit therein and the repudiation must be brought home to the owner by actual notice or at least by acts of hostility so manifest and notorious that actual notice must be presumed. Kelly v. Grainey, 113 M 520, 129 P2d 619 (1942).

When Law Presumes a Grant: Where possession of land has been adverse for the statutory period of 10 years, the law raises a presumption of a grant, the presumption arising only, however, where the occupancy would otherwise have been unlawful. If use was permissive in the beginning, it can be changed into a hostile and adverse one only by the most unequivocal conduct on the part of the user. The evidence of adverse possession must be strictly construed against the adverse user, and every reasonable intendment should be made in favor of the true owner. Price v. W. Life Ins. Co., 115 M 509, 146 P2d 165 (1944).

Presumption: Where claimant of a ditch right by prescription has shown an open, visible, continuous, and unmolested use of lands for a period sufficient to acquire title by adverse possession, his use will be presumed to have been adverse and under a claim of right and not by license, the burden of overcoming such presumption being upon the owner of the servient estate. Glantz v. Gabel, 66 M 134, 212 P 858 (1923), followed in Renner v. Nemitz, 2001 MT 202, 306 M 292, 33 P3d 255 (2001).

Pleading: In an action to quiet title to an easement by prescription in a ditch across defendant's land, the complaint alleging, inter alia, continuous and exclusive possession for more than 10 years was sufficient as against objection that it did not allege peaceful possession, the words "continuous and exclusive" comprehending the meaning of "peaceable". Hays v. De Atley, 65 M 558, 212 P 296 (1923).

ELEMENTS

Retaining Wall and Dock Not Considered Substantial Enclosure to Establish Possessory Adverse Use: The Jameses built a dock and retaining wall on property that a later survey revealed was on Habel's property. Habel filed a quiet title action, and the Jameses counterclaimed that they had acquired a prescriptive easement for the dock and retaining wall by adverse use for the statutory period. The District Court agreed and ruled that a nonpossessory prescriptive easement existed for the dock and retaining wall. Habel appealed, arguing that the dock and retaining wall were permanent structures that clearly marked the boundaries of the land enclosed by the structures and that the Jameses had thus acquired a possessory interest in the enclosed land. The Supreme Court noted that 70-19-410 does not specify what kind of structure satisfies the requirement to "protect by substantial enclosure" in order to consider the property to be possessed and occupied for purposes of adverse possession, but concluded that a structure or fixture may constitute a substantial enclosure if it indicates the boundaries of the adverse occupancy in a manner that clearly demonstrates the extent of the use of the property. The District Court's findings that the land was only partially enclosed by the dock and retaining wall and did establish a possessory use of the property itself were not clearly erroneous. A complete possession or occupation of the land was not present in this case because the Jameses' construction and maintenance of the dock and retaining wall were limited uses consistent with a nonpossessory interest, which constituted a burden on Habel's property, not a complete possession or occupation. The District Court was affirmed. Habel v. James, 2003 MT 99, 315 M 249, 68 P3d 743 (2003), distinguishing Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136 (1983).

Burden of Each Party as to Notice to Other Party of Type of Right: Warnack was not required to notify Coneen that Warnack was using a road easement under a claim or right and adversely to Coneen in order to establish a prescriptive easement. Warnack had to show only that the claim and use were known to and acquiesced in by Coneen, at which point Coneen had the burden of showing that the use was permissive. Coneen's assertion that the use was a neighborly accommodation and evidence of a local custom of neighborly accommodation or courtesy relating to many facets of the agricultural endeavors in the area did not meet Coneen's burden, and Warnack's use was based more on an assertion of the user's respective rights than on a neighborly accommodation. Warnack v. Coneen Family Trust, 278 M 80, 923 P2d 1087, 53 St. Rep. 812 (1996).

Uses to Which Easement May Be Put — Established by Uses During Period Easement Is Perfected: The extent of the use of an easement is governed by the character and extent of the use during the period of time necessary to establish the easement. Under the rule, Warnack was entitled to use the road by foot, horseback, and all ordinary modern means of transportation for access and construction of a residence and outbuildings as necessary for agricultural purposes and for hunting, fishing, camping, and other recreation. Montana has not adopted sections 478 and 479 of the Restatement of Property allowing greater use of a prescriptive easement over time. Warnack v. Coneen Family Trust, 278 M 80, 923 P2d 1087, 53 St. Rep. 812 (1996).

Mixed or Common Possession of Land — Possession to Person With Legal Title — No Adverse Possession as Against Legal Title: In reversing a District Court grant of a first priority water right for irrigation on the basis of adverse use, the Supreme Court adopted the rule that in case of a mixed or common possession of land by both parties to a suit, the law adjudges the rightful possession to the party who holds legal title, and no length of time of possession can give title by adverse possession as against the legal title. Mielke v. Daly Ditches Irrigation District, 225 M 172, 731 P2d 927, 44 St. Rep. 129 (1987).

Permissive Use Not Basis for Easement by Prescription: When use of an easement begins as a permissive use, it cannot ripen into a prescriptive right no matter how long it continues, unless there is a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to the owner. Robertson v. Hughes, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1041 (1983).

No Interest Acquired in Property by Possessory Use Without Payment of Taxes: In 1978, Burlingames acquired a parcel of land adjoining Marjerrisons' land. A survey of Burlingames' property indicated that Marjerrisons' fence enclosed 5 acres of Burlingames' property. Since 1935, Marjerrisons had used the 5-acre parcel, along with their property, for cattle grazing, agriculture, and timber harvesting. Burlingames filed an action to quiet title. The District Court ruled that Burlingames possessed title to the 5-acre parcel but that Marjerrisons had acquired prescriptive easements for grazing, agricultural, and timber harvesting purposes. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, stating that since an easement is a nonpossessory interest and Marjerrisons had complete possession of the parcel for the statutory period, the only interest they could have acquired was full title. Treating Marjerrisons' claim as one for adverse possession, the court then ruled that although their use was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for a 5-year period, they had not paid property taxes on the disputed parcel as required by 70-19-411, and thus have acquired no interest in the property. Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136, 40 St. Rep. 1005 (1983).

Prescriptive Easement — Use to Be Adverse: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement existed across defendants' land. The evidence presented established that several of the defendant's neighbors used the road across defendant's land but also testified that defendants had consented to the use. Evidence was also presented that there were gates across the road posted with "No Trespassing" signs. This kind of use is not adverse and does not create a public prescriptive easement. Madison County v. Elford, 203 M 293, 661 P2d 1266, 40 St. Rep. 457 (1983).

Prescriptive Easement — Intent as Central Element: Plaintiffs own a farm surrounded on three sides by the Flathead River and Flathead Lake. After Kerr Dam was built in 1939, the water table in the area began to rise. In 1960 plaintiffs filed suit claiming inverse condemnation of their land and damages due to the rising of the water table. The complaint was amended four times over the years and was finally tried in 1979. Defendant claimed that the cause was barred by prescription and the Statute of Limitations. Defendant failed to establish prescription. Defendant did not show "open and notorious" occupation of the land for any period of time and had consistently denied occupation of the land. Defendant also failed to show an intention to occupy the land. Intention is a central element of prescriptive easements. Blasdel v. Mont. Power Co., 196 M 417, 640 P2d 889, 39 St. Rep. 219 (1982).

Doctrine of Agreed Boundary: The standard of proof necessary to invoke the doctrine of agreed boundary is clear and convincing. When, as here, the evidence does not show more than mere acquiescence by property owners as to placement of a fence and occupancy, petitioner/owner does not adequately establish that he and the other owner agreed to a boundary line. Therefore, the doctrine that adjacent landowners may move the boundary line of their respective parcels by agreement does not apply. Huggans v. Weer, 189 M 334, 615 P2d 922 (1980), following Townsend v. Koukol, 148 M 1, 416 P2d 532 (1966).

Construction of Gate Insufficient to Rebut Presumption of Adverse Use: Construction of a gate through which claimant could pass, which was apparently for the purpose of providing a convenient method of holding sheep after the claimant passed through, is not enough to rebut the presumption that the claimant's use was adverse. Garrett v. Jackson, 183 M 505, 600 P2d 1177 (1979). See also Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2012 MT 264, 367 Mont. 67, 289 P.3d 156, and Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2013 MT 338, 372 Mont. 463, 313 P.3d 179.

Cutting of Fence Indication of Hostile Use: Cutting a fence in order to cross a servient tenement, even when the claimant rewired the fence after passing through, was a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to the rights of the owner. The concern of the claimant that livestock may escape is not inconsistent with his claim of right-of-way. Where the fence was cut without seeking permission and the owner of the servient tenement was only later informed, the District Court was justified in concluding that the use was adverse and hostile. Garrett v. Jackson, 183 M 505, 600 P2d 1177 (1979).

Elements Required to Prove Prescriptive Easement: To establish a prescriptive easement, the owner of the purported dominant tenement must establish open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and unmolested use of the servient tenement for the full statutory period of 5 years required to acquire title by adverse possession. Garrett v. Jackson, 183 M 505, 600 P2d 1177 (1979).

Presumption of Adverse Use When Other Elements Demonstrated — Burden on Servient Owner: The claimant of a prescriptive easement is entitled to rely upon a presumption that his use was adverse to the servient owner's title if he demonstrates by his evidence the other elements of his claim. When the dominant owner makes this preliminary showing of open, notorious, continuous, and unmolested use for the statutory period, the burden falls on the owner of the servient tenement to show that the use was not adverse but merely permissive. Garrett v. Jackson, 183 M 505, 600 P2d 1177 (1979), following Luoma v. Donohoe, 179 M 359, 588 P2d 523 (1978). See also Rappold v. Durocher, 257 M 329, 849 P2d 1017, 50 St. Rep. 293 (1993), Unruh v. Tash, 271 M 246, 896 P2d 433, 52 St. Rep. 425 (1995), and Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996). Unruh was followed in Glenn v. Grosfield, 274 M 192, 906 P2d 201, 52 St. Rep. 1150 (1995).

Possession Alone Not Sufficient: Mere possession of real property, no matter how exclusive and complete, is not sufficient to create a title by prescription; to create such a title the possession must have been adverse; otherwise it will be deemed to have been in subordination to the legal title. The possession of realty, to be "adverse", must be actual and visible, exclusive, hostile, and continued for a period of 10 years. It must be open and notorious or be of such a character as to raise a presumption of notice or so patent that the owner could not be deceived. The claim of the possessor must be so brought home to the owner as to enable the latter to institute action for possession at all times during the running of the Statute of Limitations. Le Vasseur v. Roullman, 93 M 552, 20 P2d 250 (1933), followed in Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Exclusive Use:

No clear and convincing evidence of exclusive use was established when the parties presented evidence they both had used the disputed property to access a creek. Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Occupancy of land under claim to easement does not divest servient owner of title to land over which it extends and need be continuous only in the same sense that the claimant exercise his right without interference at such times as he has need of the use. It need not be exclusive so long as the right does not depend upon a like right in others. Ferguson v. Standley, 89 M 489, 300 P 245 (1931).

The fact that plaintiff in his complaint claimed the right to use the ditch to the extent of one-half of its capacity only, conceding to defendants the right to use the other half, did not have the effect of destroying his allegation that his use was exclusive, the word "exclusive" in such a case meaning not that others had no rights in it but that his right to its use was not dependent on the like right in others and that their use did not interfere with his. Hays v. De Atley, 65 M 558, 212 P 296 (1923), followed in Wareing v. Schreckendgust, 280 M 196, 930 P2d 37, 53 St. Rep. 1362 (1996).

Generally: The occupancy of land for the period of 10 years which under this section ripens into title by prescription must be such as will constitute adverse possession, i.e., actual, visible, hostile, and continuous possession for the full period. The claim of the possessor must invade the title of the owner and be so brought home to him that he is in a position to institute action for possession at all times during the entire 10-year period. Otherwise, the possession is considered to have been under and in subordination to the legal title. Ferguson v. Standley, 89 M 489, 300 P 245 (1931).

Break in Use: One claiming a ditch right over another's land by adverse use must not only be able to show an open, notorious, exclusive, and hostile possession of the easement claimed but also that his possession was continued and uninterrupted for the full statutory period of 10 years. If possession is broken it ceases to be effectual, since, as soon as a break occurs, the law restores the constructive possession of the owner. Scott v. Jardine Gold Min. & Mill. Co., 79 M 485, 257 P 406 (1927).

Continuous Use: Adverse use of an irrigating ditch whenever use of it was necessary, uninterrupted by the owner of the servient estate, was continuous and uninterrupted, continuous use not necessarily implying constant use and continuity of use depending altogether upon the nature and character of the right claimed. Hays v. De Atley, 65 M 558, 212 P 296 (1923).

TACKING OF PRESCRIPTIVE PERIODS

Permissive Use: Permission to use right-of-way granted to former owners of defendant's land is not transferable, and the evidence the court must consider in determining defendant's claim of a prescriptive easement is limited to the defendant's use since acquiring the property. The trial court's findings will not be reversed unless there is a clear preponderance of the evidence against such findings. There was substantial evidence before the court justifying the finding that the use by the defendant and his predecessors was permissive. Luoma v. Donohoe, 179 M 359, 588 P2d 523 (1978).

Title by Prescription Passing by Deed: Where deed to defendant after describing property by legal subdivisions contained clause: "Together with all the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances, water rights and water ditches to the same belonging", if defendant's predecessor used the ditch for more than 10 years there was title in him by prescription which was passed to defendant by deed and it was of no consequence that the deed did not specifically mention the ditch right as an appurtenance. Te Selle v. Storey, 133 M 1, 319 P2d 218 (1957).

Easements — Tacking Applicable: Fact that deeds made no mention of claimed right to easement did not render doctrine of "tacking" inapplicable, the doctrine being permissible when there is a privity between the successive users of the easement, and there is a sufficient privity as to the inchoate easement if the enjoyment thereof was continuous and under the same claim of title. Groshean v. Dillmont Realty Co., 92 M 227, 12 P2d 273 (1932).

Prove Adverse Possession in Himself and in His Predecessor: If a defendant in ejectment proves adverse possession in himself and in his predecessor for the required statutory period, he shows a title absolutely in himself to the disputed land. Rude v. Marshall, 54 M 27, 166 P 298 (1917).

EASEMENT BY PRESCRIPTION

Use of Public Road Created by Prescriptive Use Extends to All Reasonably Foreseeable Uses: Once a public road is established by prescriptive use, the use of that road is not limited to the adverse usage through which the road was acquired, but rather extends to all reasonably foreseeable uses, including foot travel. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Width of Public Right-of-Way Established by Prescription — Portion of Right-of-Way Necessary to Maintain County Road for Public Use — Not Reserved to County: Plaintiff association sued the county because property owners had erected fences along the county road to the ends of a bridge, thereby preventing the public from using the right-of-way access to the river. The parties stipulated that the right-of-way for this portion of the road had been established by prescriptive use. The plaintiff argued that the public's right-of-way extended not only to the road, but to portions along the road necessary to maintain it. The District Court disagreed and ruled that only the county had an easement that exceeded the fences for the purpose of maintaining and repairing the road. The plaintiff appealed and the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the width of a public road right-of-way established by prescriptive easement includes the areas necessary to support and maintain the road and that those areas are not reserved for the county. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the matter to the District Court to determine the actual width of the right-of-way in accordance with its guidelines. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Accrual of Adverse Use Prohibited When Property Owned by Government: Because a private party cannot obtain a prescriptive easement against the federal government, a private party's adverse use of property did not begin to run until the federal government conveyed title to the property to a private entity. Burcalow Family, LLC v. Corral Bar, Inc., 2013 MT 345, 372 Mont. 498, 313 P.3d 182.

Permission to Use Dock Granted by Prior Owner — Whether Permission Carries Over to Subsequent Owners to Be Evaluated on Case-by-Case Basis — No Prescriptive Easement: In urging the Supreme Court to find that they had established an easement by prescription to a dock owned by the plaintiff, the defendants urged the court to follow the rule outlined in Han Farms, Inc. v. Molitor, 2003 MT 153, 316 Mont. 249, 70 P.3d 1238, which declared that one owner's grant of permission does not continue by default to the next owner. After reviewing significant case law regarding the transferability of permission for use, the court declined to adopt the defendants' argument and overruled the proposition in Han Farms that permission can never carry over from one owner to another after the sale of the servient property. Rather, the court reiterated that based on a thorough reading of its permissive use cases, the court will always consider the nature of the initial permission and attendant circumstances to analyze whether permission exists. Pedersen v. Ziehl, 2013 MT 306, 372 Mont. 223, 311 P.3d 765.

Prescriptive Easement Determined by Use During Prescriptive Period: During easement litigation concerning Boadle Bridge, the original bridge burned down and was rebuilt by the defendant with privately owned materials. The Supreme Court found that there was a public prescriptive easement burdening the defendant's land that was not limited to the bridge's physical structure. In 2011, the defendant removed the bridge, asserting that it was his private property, and built a new bridge accessing a private road. The plaintiffs claimed that the defendant had destroyed the bridge in violation of the Supreme Court's decision. The District Court dismissed the case, ruling that the public's easement to a specific bridge included only the one that burned down, although the public retained the right to use any future bridge at the same site. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that although the defendant may own the bridge, a prescriptive easement is not determined by ownership of the property but by use during the prescriptive period. Therefore, the defendant could not remove the bridge or interfere in the public access to it. Pub. Land/Water Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Jones, 2013 MT 31, 368 Mont. 390, 300 P.3d 675.

Private Use of Access Road Not Unexplained — Remand for Findings on Whether Private Use Constituted Prescriptive Easement: The District Court found that private use of an access road was both periodic and unexplained, and the court declined to analyze that use any further. The Supreme Court disagreed that use of the road was unexplained. Two long-time residents testified that persons previously lived on property accessed by that road and that the road was maintained by the early residents and used by them to access the property. Because the use was explained, the question was whether that use satisfied the elements of a prescriptive easement, and the case was remanded for further findings and conclusions. Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2007 MT 347, 340 M 294, 174 P3d 481 (2007).

Sporadic, Infrequent Public Use of Road — Insufficient Evidence of Public Prescriptive Easement or Easement by Grant or Reservation: Citing Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990), plaintiff contended that public use of an access road for logging, cattle grazing, hay harvesting, recreation, and search and rescue operations established a public prescriptive easement or an easement by grant or reservation. The Supreme Court noted that public use of the road was sporadic, infrequent, and of limited duration and thus the use did not meet the requirement in Granite County that the public followed a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly for the prescribed statutory period together with an assumption of control adverse to the owner. Plaintiff's claim of a public prescriptive easement was properly denied. Because no public easement existed, an easement by grant or reservation likewise did not exist. Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2007 MT 347, 340 M 294, 174 P3d 481 (2007).

On remand, the District Court determined that the prescriptive easement was abandoned, and Leisz appealed. The Supreme Court noted that abandonment must be proven with words or acts that indicate a clear intent to abandon and that mere nonuse does not establish abandonment. In this case, Leisz's predecessors took no actions demonstrating a manifestation not to resume beneficial use of the easement or an intent to relinquish possession of the easement, but rather they simply stopped using the easement in favor of a different access. Therefore, the District Court erred in finding abandonment, and that decision was reversed and judgment was entered for Leisz allowing Leisz a prescriptive easement. Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2010 MT 105, 356 Mont. 259, 232 P.3d 419.

Predecessors in Interest Aware of Encroachment — Prescriptive Easement Affirmed: The open and notorious use element necessary to establish a prescriptive easement cannot be satisfied if the owner of the property was deceived as to the location of the alleged easement, but open and notorious use raises a presumption of actual knowledge of the hostile claim to the owner of the servient estate if it is of such character as to be obvious because the owner could not then be deceived. Here, plaintiffs asserted that the statutory period could begin to run only after plaintiffs completed a property survey because no one knew about the encroachment before that time. However, plaintiffs acknowledged that they became immediately aware of the encroachment from the appraisal received upon purchase of the property and admitted that therefore the previous owners must also have known about the encroachment. Absent any evidence that plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest were ever deceived regarding the existence of the encroachment, the District Court did not err in holding that use of the easement was open and notorious. Steiger v. Brown, 2007 MT 29, 336 M 29, 152 P3d 705 (2007).

Adequate Showing of Prescriptive Easement — No Showing of Permissive Use Absent Owner's Knowledge of Ownership: Bertelsen owned two parcels of property adjacent to a county road that he leased to a propane business beginning in 1987. The county road was subsequently abandoned, so all that separated Bertelsen's property from a federal highway was a triangular piece of land upon which the state Department of Transportation held an easement but which was otherwise undeveloped. The propane company constructed some improvements on the triangular parcel. While researching property in the area, Slauson discovered that the triangular parcel was owned by a third party, Edwards, who was not even aware that she owned it. Slauson acquired the property from Edwards and had the state discharge its easement and then approached Bertelsen and the propane company and offered to lease the parcel to Bertelsen. Bertelsen asserted the right to continued use of the property, and Slauson sued to enforce his property rights and to recover compensation and damages from Bertelsen. At trial, Bertelsen argued that he had acquired the property through adverse possession or that he had a prescriptive easement that allowed the propane company to continue using the property. The District Court found that Bertelsen had not paid taxes on the parcel, so there was no adverse possession, but held that Bertelsen and the propane company had established a prescriptive easement to maintain the improvements and to transact the company's business on the parcel. Slauson appealed, questioning whether the use was open, notorious, and adverse. The Supreme Court found that the company used the property for public access and as a parking lot, which adequately provided previous owner Edwards with notice of use. Having established open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and uninterrupted use for the statutorily required 5-year period, Bertelsen was entitled to the presumption of adverse use, and Slauson was required to prove that the use was permissive in order to overcome the presumption. Slauson could not prove permissive use because Edwards did not know that she owned the parcel and thus could not have granted permission for its use. Bertelsen therefore established a prescriptive easement, and the District Court was affirmed. Slauson v. Bertelsen Family Trust, 2006 MT 314, 335 M 43, 151 P3d 866 (2006).

Following the 2006 decision, a dispute arose between Slauson and the plumbing company that used the prescriptive easement. Slauson asserted that the company trespassed and used Slauson's property in unauthorized ways, and the company countersued for interference with the scope of the easement. The District Court granted the company $418.60 for landscaping that Slauson had removed and awarded Slauson $430 for costs of removing snow that the company piled on Slauson's property outside the easement. Both parties appealed, but the Supreme Court held that neither party established any error in the District Court's rulings and affirmed. Slauson v. Marozzo Plumb. & Heating, LLC, 2009 MT 333, 353 M 75, 219 P3d 509 (2009).

Easement Transferred With Transfer of Portion of Dominant Estate — Subdivision of Dominant Tenement Not Considered Increased Burden on Servient Tenement: The District Court found that the creation of a tract and the subsequent sale to Dabney constituted a transfer of a portion of the dominant estate and that the transfer conveyed all easements attached to the property to Dabney, so Dabney had a prescriptive easement to use a road across Leichtfuss's property to access the Dabney property. The court also concluded that Leichtfuss's parcels were not impermissibly burdened by Dabney's use of the road. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a life tenant or lessee generally cannot impose upon land a burden that passes to a remainderman or reversioner, the termination of a dominant estate held in less than fee simple does not automatically extinguish an appurtenant easement. Rather, it is the intent or expectations of the parties to the servitude that determine its duration. In this case, there was no evidence that the parties intended to abandon Dabney's parcel, so Dabney's use of the road was within the scope of the original easement on the parcel, and the easement was apportioned according to the division of the dominant tenement. In addition, Leichtfuss's contention that the apportionment increased the burden on the servient tenement also failed. "Subdivision and conveying away of portions of a dominant estate does not, in and of itself, mean that an additional burden is imposed upon the servient estate." Dabney's use of the parcel was consistent with the predecessor's historical use, and this was not a case in which the easement was suddenly being used to serve additional land or residences or in which the character of the easement's use was changed, so no increased burden to Leichtfuss's parcel was created. Leichtfuss v. Dabney, 2005 MT 271, 329 M 129, 122 P3d 1220 (2005), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751 (1996), and following Burleson v. Kinsey-Cartwright, 2000 MT 278, 302 M 141, 13 P3d 384 (2000).

Extent of Public Easement Not Limited to Contested Portion on Defendant's Property — Prescriptive Easement Properly Found as Matter of Law: A part of Boadle Road that crossed a portion of defendant's property had been chained and closed by defendant's predecessor in interest in 1999. Plaintiff land access association sought to have the road declared a public road and have defendant enjoined from prohibiting public access. The trial court found that Boadle Road was in existence since the early 1900s and that open public use without landowner permission continued unabated until the road was closed in 1999. Defendant contended that because the litigated portion of the road began and ended on his property, the road essentially went nowhere and thus it was pointless for the trial court to find a public prescriptive easement. The Supreme Court disagreed. Nothing supported defendant's contention that an easement cannot begin and end on the servient landowner's estate. The portion of the road on defendant's property was part of a much longer public road, and there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that the public was entitled to a prescriptive easement over the portion of the road in dispute. Neighborly Accommodation as to Use of Gated and Locked Strip of Land for Road Access Was Permissive Use Not Ripening Into Prescriptive Easement: Testimony for both plaintiff and defendant showed that until 1999, there was never any dispute or hostility over defendant's use of a strip of land over plaintiff's property to gain access from a road to defendant's property, that defendant never asked for or was given permission to use the access strip, that the strip had gates at each end that were locked at various times to keep the public out, and that both parties shared the keys to or combinations for the gates' locks. In 1999, an expansion of defendant's use occurred and a dispute arose over the extent of defendant's use. Plaintiff attempted to get defendant to agree in writing to the allowed use, and after failing to do so, plaintiff chained and locked the gate at the road and told defendant that he must get permission to use the access. After each party replaced the locks with its own, plaintiff sued. The Supreme Court ruled that there had been a neighborly accommodation, which is a form of permissive use that is not adverse and cannot ripen into a prescriptive easement, and upheld the District Court's finding to that effect and grant of a permanent injunction against defendant's use of the property. Tomlin Enterprises, Inc. v. Althoff, 2004 MT 383, 325 M 99, 103 P3d 1069 (2004).

Mere Denial of Public Nature of Road Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Public Prescriptive Easement Affirmed: The District Court found that the elements of a prescriptive easement over a road on defendants' property were satisfied and granted summary judgment to plaintiff county. Defendants contended that disputed issues of fact existed regarding proof of a prescriptive easement, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The county proved that use of the road was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for the statutorily required period. The only evidence in support of defendants' position was a conclusory hearsay statement claiming that the previous owners had indicated that the road was not public. Defendants' mere denial of the public nature of the road was insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to withstand summary judgment. Powell County v. 5 Rockin' MS Angus Ranch, Inc., 2004 MT 337, 324 M 204, 102 P3d 1210 (2004), following Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002).

Incorrect Finding of Prescriptive Easement for Road and Residence — Moving of Residence Not Required: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement had been established for a road that strayed into an adjoining parcel and for a residence, the corner of which also extended into the adjoining parcel. The Supreme Court found the record full of contradictory assertions and findings, but noted that because the actual location of the road was concealed from the owner by way of maps and misrepresentations as to its true location, the record did not come close to establishing the elements of hostility or open and notorious use by clear and convincing evidence to establish a prescriptive easement for the road. Further, the owner of the residence conceded that the corner of the foundation and eaves encroached onto the adjoining parcel. Never having paid taxes on the land in question, the owner could not prevail on a claim of adverse possession to obtain title to the ground under the encroachment, so a finding of a prescriptive easement for the residence was also in error. However, because the property owner indicated at trial and in appeal briefs that he was willing to work something out regarding the encroachment, the Supreme Court concluded that to require removal of the encroachment would be extreme and declined to order that the residence be moved from its foundation. Gelderloos v. Duke, 2004 MT 94, 321 M 1, 88 P3d 814 (2004).

No Public Prescriptive Use of Mining Road Never Declared Public Road — Prescriptive Easement Established and Not Extinguished by Reverse Adverse Possession: Owners of a road used since 1936 for mining access claimed a public prescriptive use. The road was never formally declared a public road or used for the statutorily required period of time sufficient to establish a prescriptive easement. Thus, the existence of a public prescriptive easement depended on the exploratory use that took place when the mine was not in full operation, recreational use by the public, and county road maintenance. However, even taken together, this evidence did not rise to the level of public prescriptive use. The District Court did not err in finding that no public prescriptive easement existed over the road. However, while the evidence did not qualify as a public easement, it did qualify as a private easement in plaintiff's favor. Virtually unrestricted use of the road between 1936 and 1961 met the requirements of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, uninterrupted use for the required statutory period. Further, defendant's act of locking a gate across the road and providing plaintiff a key and access with permission was not a distinct and positive assertion unequivocally hostile and adverse to plaintiff sufficient to extinguish plaintiff's easement by reverse adverse possession. Brimstone Min., Inc. v. Glaus, 2003 MT 236, 317 M 236, 77 P3d 175 (2003). See also Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990).

Creation of County Road — Applicability of Curative Statute of 1895: Garrison brought an action against Lincoln County, alleging that the county had no right or interest in a road that crossed Garrison's property. The District Court held that the road was a county road or, alternatively, that even if the road was not a county road, the public had obtained a prescriptive easement covering the road. Garrison appealed, arguing that County Commissioners in 1912 and 1913 failed to strictly comply with the statutory requirements for creating a county road, rendering the road private property, despite the fact that the road was declared public in 1913 and had been used extensively by the public and maintained by the county for over 50 years. The District Court properly relied on Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210 (1981), to conclude that the record taken as a whole presented clear evidence that despite discrepancies in its description or location, a county road was created and that any defects in the procedure used to create the road were remedied by the curative statute 2600 of the Political Code of 1895 that provided that all roads laid out, traveled, or used by the public were considered public highways. Garrison v. Lincoln County, 2003 MT 227, 317 M 190, 77 P3d 163 (2003), distinguishing Pederson v. Dawson County, 2000 MT 339, 303 M 158, 17 P3d 393 (2000).

Burden of Rebutting Claim of Prescriptive Easement by Showing Permissive Use: There was no dispute that plaintiff's use of a road was open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and uninterrupted, but the parties did dispute whether use of the road was hostile. The District Court held that the use was hostile and granted plaintiff a prescriptive easement. On appeal, defendant contended that her predecessor in interest gave permission to plaintiff's predecessor in interest to use the road and cited Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025 (1983), for the proposition that if use of a road begins as a permissive use, it cannot ripen into a prescriptive right unless there is a distinct and positive assertion of a hostile right to the owner. Defendant pointed out that plaintiff did nothing to make a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to defendant. The Supreme Court noted that under Rettig v. Kallevig, 282 M 189, 936 P2d 807 (1997), permissive use is not transferable and distinguished Morrison because in that case, there was ample evidence that the use of the road was permissive. The court then cited Wareing v. Schreckendgust, 280 M 196, 930 P2d 37 (1996), for the rule that once a claimant has established the elements of a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises and the burden shifts to the owner affected by the claim to establish that the claimant's use was permissive. Thus, the burden was not on plaintiff to show that use of the road was hostile, but rather on defendant to show that the use was permissive. Defendant did not meet the burden, and the District Court's conclusion that a prescriptive easement existed across defendant's land was affirmed. Han Farms, Inc. v. Molitor, 2003 MT 153, 316 M 249, 70 P3d 1238 (2003), overruled, to the extent that Han Farms held that permissive use is never transferable, by Pedersen v. Ziehl, 2013 MT 306, 372 Mont. 223, 311 P.3d 765. See also Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2012 MT 264, 367 Mont. 67, 289 P.3d 156, and Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2013 MT 338, 372 Mont. 463, 313 P.3d 179.

Conflicting Evidence Regarding Prescriptive Easement for Ditch Maintenance — District Court Affirmed: Plaintiff alleged that defendant's access to plaintiff's property for ditch maintenance must be limited to the historic use of the ditch bank. The District Court was presented with conflicting evidence regarding how open defendant's use of plaintiff's property was and determined that plaintiff knew or should have known that defendant was accessing the ditch by various routes across plaintiff's property and that the access was not permissive. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that defendant had a prescriptive easement, and that finding was not disturbed on appeal. Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

Prescriptive Easement Properly Granted — Terms Defined: To establish an easement by prescription, the party claiming the easement must show open and notorious, exclusive, continuous, uninterrupted, and adverse use of the claimed easement for a 5-year period. Open and notorious use means a distinct and positive assertion of a right hostile to and brought to the attention of the owner. Exclusive use means that the right of the claimant must rest upon its own foundations and not depend on a like right in any other person. Continuous use means use that is made often enough to constitute notice of the claim to the potential servient owner. Uninterrupted use means use that is not interrupted by the act of the owner of the land or by voluntary abandonment by the party claiming the right. Adverse use means use exercised under a claim of right and not as a mere privilege or license revocable at the pleasure of the owner of the land. A claim must be known to and acquiesced in by the owner of the land. A party claiming the easement has the burden of proving each element of prescription by clear and convincing evidence. If the party claiming easement establishes all of the elements, then the burden falls on the opposing party to show that the use was permissive rather than adverse. In the present case, there was no evidence of concealment of the regular use or maintenance of a road for several decades, which was adequate to provide plaintiffs with notice that there was a claim to use of the road. Because no permissive use was shown, and because the use was sufficiently open and notorious to establish a claim, the District Court did not err in granting defendants a prescriptive easement over plaintiffs' property. Brumit v. Lewis, 2002 MT 346, 313 M 332, 61 P3d 138 (2002), distinguishing Cope v. Cope, 158 M 388, 493 P2d 336 (1971), and Amerimont, Inc. v. Gannett, 278 M 314, 924 P2d 1326 (1996). See also Rappold v. Durocher, 257 M 329, 849 P2d 1017 (1993), and Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724 (1994).

"Prudent Man Test" Properly Applied to Alert Landowner of Existence of Prescriptive Easement for Power Lines and Equipment: Applying the "prudent man test" established in O'Connor v. Brodie, 153 M 129, 454 P2d 920 (1969), and applied in Riddock v. Helena, 212 M 390, 687 P2d 1386 (1984), the District Court did not err in concluding that the existence of transformers and Montana Power Company's open and notorious maintenance of the transformers for overhead utility lines over a 20-year period were sufficient notice to alert the landowner living directly across the street of the open and notorious use necessary for the existence of a prescriptive easement for the utility's underground and overhead power lines and accompanying equipment. Taylor v. Mont. Power Co., 2002 MT 247, 312 M 134, 58 P3d 162 (2002).

No Establishment of Public Road by Common-Law Dedication When Use of Road Permissive: Two elements are required to establish a common-law dedication of a roadway: (1) an offer by the owner evidencing an intention to dedicate the roadway; and (2) an acceptance by the public. The intent of an offer to dedicate must be clear, satisfactory, and unequivocal, and evidence of mere permissive use does not prove an intention to dedicate. In this case, plaintiffs failed to clearly and unequivocally demonstrate defendants' intention to dedicate a private road to the public. A 1916 petition for the opening of a school and a 1948 petition to establish a road did not establish that the owners intended to dedicate the road to the public; rather, use of the road was shown to be permissive, so no common-law dedication was established. Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002), following Descheemaeker v. Anderson, 131 M 322, 310 P2d 587 (1957), and Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 M 379, 962 P2d 583 (1998).

Use of Private Road Permissive by Neighborly Accommodation — Public Prescriptive Easement Not Established: Plaintiffs sought an easement of record from defendants regarding the rural road crossing plaintiffs' property, but defendants refused. Plaintiffs then sought a declaratory judgment that the road was a public road established by prescriptive use, asserting that the road was a public thoroughfare established by common-law dedication as evidenced by a 1916 petition for the opening of a school and a 1948 petition to establish a road. The District Court found that the 1916 and 1948 petitions did not establish an offer evidencing an intention to dedicate the road to the public and that use of the road was instead permissive through neighborly accommodation. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. All elements of a prescriptive easement must be proved by clear and convincing evidence because one who has legal title should not be forced to give up what is rightfully theirs without the opportunity to know that the title is in jeopardy and to fight for it. Once a claimant establishes the elements of a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises, and the burden shifts to the landowner to establish that the use was permissive. If permissive use is shown, no easement can be acquired because the theory of prescriptive easement is based on adverse use. Use of a neighbor's land based upon mere neighborly accommodation or courtesy is not adverse and cannot ripen into a prescriptive easement. Rather, in addition to use, generally some circumstance or act tending to indicate that the use was not merely permissive is required. The presence of gates or other obstructions, to be opened and closed by parties passing over the land, has always been considered strong evidence in support of a mere license to the public to pass over the designated way. The facts here showed that use of the road was permissive and at the pleasure of the landowners, so no public prescriptive easement existed. Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002). See also Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), Hitshew v. Failure to Show Adverse Use — No Prescriptive Easement Established: Ray sued Bromenshenk and Zimmerman to quiet title to a prescriptive easement across their properties.

The District Court found that Ray did not have a prescriptive easement across either property and granted defendants an injunction restraining Ray from running wastewater across the properties. Ray appealed. The Supreme Court examined the record and concluded that Ray's use of Bromenshenk's property was not adverse, so no prescriptive easement existed across that property. Further, Zimmerman's blockage of the ditch running across the Zimmerman property resulted in an interruption of Ray's adverse use, so Ray's use of the ditch was not continuous and uninterrupted for the requisite 5-year period. Thus, no prescriptive easement existed regarding the Zimmerman property either. The District Court was affirmed. Ray v. Nansel, 2002 MT 191, 311 M 135, 53 P3d 870 (2002). See also Hays v. De Atley, 65 M 558, 212 P 296 (1923), Te Selle v. Storey, 133 M 1, 319 P2d 218 (1957), and Albert v. Hastetter, 2002 MT 123, 310 M 82, 48 P3d 749 (2002).

Reverse Adverse Possession — Public Prescriptive Easement Extinguished by Relocation of Road and Public Acquiescence With Locked Gates for Thirty Years: Dome Mountain Ranch's predecessor in interest relocated a road in 1965 and installed locked gates and no trespassing signs. Public access was limited to occasional, seasonal recreational use by permission or when the gates were unlocked, until Park County officially declared the road a county road in 1994. Dome Mountain Ranch claimed that the 5-year statutory period of reverse adverse possession concluded in 1970, so it was not required to show a clear intent by the county to abandon the road in proving its claim of reverse adverse possession. Title to a public road may not be obtained by adverse possession, and there must be a clear showing of intent to abandon a county road. Mere nonuse, even for extended periods of time, is generally insufficient in itself to indicate an intent to abandon. Likewise, mere nonuse or lack of maintenance by the county is not sufficient to indicate an intent to abandon, absent notice and a public hearing. To be continuous and uninterrupted, the use of a claimed right in a prescriptive easement must not be abandoned by the user or interrupted by an act of the landowner. Seasonal recreational use, use by neighbors visiting neighbors, and use by persons cutting Christmas trees and gathering firewood are generally not sufficient to establish use by the public over a definite course continuously and uninterruptedly. In this case, the Supreme Court agreed with Dome Mountain Ranch that reverse adverse possession applied. The relocation of the road, coupled with the public's acquiescence with locked gates for almost 30 years, extinguished the county's public prescriptive easement, if one ever existed. Dome Mtn. Ranch, LLC v. Park County, 2001 MT 289, 307 M 420, 37 P3d 710 (2001), following Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), and McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794 (2000).

Prescriptive Easement Established for One of Two Exits on Loop Road — Other Exit Considered Abandoned: Renner accessed his property by crossing Nemitz's property in two different places in order to form a loop driveway at Renner's house. The west easement was not at issue, but both the existence and location of an approximately 100-foot easement over the east side of the loop was contested. A series of interactions between the parties eventually led to Nemitz building a fence across the east side of the loop and Renner filing a claim to establish an easement over the east side of the loop. At trial, both parties presented testimony regarding use of the east side loop, including testimony regarding two possible exits on the loop. The District Court did not distinguish between the two exits, but found a prescriptive easement for the entire east side loop, held that the easement was not abandoned and that Nemitz's activities did not extinguish the easement, and granted Renner an easement for both exits of the east side loop, ordering all obstructions removed. Nemitz appealed. The District Court found clear and convincing evidence that a prescriptive easement existed for the east side loop based on testimony of its use from 1948 to 1974, and after reviewing the record, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's findings of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the easement. However, it was not clear from the testimony regarding use between 1948 and 1974 whether both exits met the requirements of a prescriptive easement, and that lack of specificity indicated that it was error for the District Court to find a prescriptive easement for both exits, but the error was harmless based on evidence regarding use from 1975 to 1995. Renner's predecessor in interest during that period continued to use the loop as in prior years and never sought permission and so could not be characterized as having abandoned the east loop easement. Testimony was undisputed that the left exit was used until 1995, but the right exit was not used past 1982, and testimony of Renner's predecessor in interest established that use of the right exit was intended to be subordinate to Nemitz's use, so it was error for the District Court to find that the right exit was not abandoned. The Supreme Court noted that extinguishment did not apply to the left exit because only 3 years passed between the time Renner acquired the property and when the claim was filed. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed the easement on the left exit and the order requiring removal of the fence across that exit, but reversed the part of the order requiring removal of the fence across the abandoned right exit. Renner v. Nemitz, 2001 MT 202, 306 M 292, 33 P3d 255 (2001), distinguishing Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 501, 668 P2d 1029 (1983).

Establishment of Public Highway Under United States Revised Statutes Section 2477 — Use Alone Insufficient Under State Law — State Declaration of Existence of Public Highways Inapplicable: The Richters brought an action in District Court to condemn an easement across the land of a neighbor that surrounded their property on three sides, claiming that a public highway had been established, pursuant to United States Revised Statutes section 2477 (R.S. 2477), across public land before that land ultimately passed to their neighbor. The Supreme Court reviewed the purpose of R.S. 2477, as described in Butte v. Mikosowitz, 39 M 350, 102 P 593 (1909), and noted that it had earlier held in St. v. Nolan, 58 M 167, 191 P 150 (1920), that R.S. 2477, later codified as 43 U.S.C. 932, was only an offer by the United States to convey land but that state law determined how that offer was accepted and, in that case, held that at that time there were four ways in which a public highway could be established under Montana law. The Supreme Court then reviewed the history of the Montana statutes governing how the R.S. 2477 offer was accepted by the state and pointed out that in 1895, section 2603 of the Political Code of Montana was adopted providing that use alone was insufficient to establish a public road over private land, although section 2603 was amended in 1913 to delete the prohibition against creating a public highway by use alone. Therefore, between 1895 and 1913, a public road could be established by use only if public authorities with jurisdiction over the property on which the road was claimed took an act tantamount to a declaration that a particular road was a public road. Because the Richters presented no evidence that the County Commissioners with jurisdiction over the road that they claimed to exist upon their neighbor's property had taken any action to declare that road to be a public highway, the Supreme Court held that as a matter of law, the Richters' evidence of use alone was insufficient to establish a public right-of-way upon that land between 1903 and 1907. The Supreme Court also held that section 2600, Political Code of Montana, enacted in 1895, declaring that highways used by the public are public highways, did not create a public highway across what became their neighbor's property because that statute applied only to existing uses at the time of the statute's enactment and Richters' evidence did not demonstrate any use of the road until 1902. Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 M 379, 962 P2d 583, 55 St. Rep. 663 (1998). See also McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794, 57 St. Rep. 855 (2000), and Watson v. Dundas, 2006 MT 104, 332 M 164, 136 P3d 973 (2006).

Evidence Insufficient to Prove Common-Law Dedication of Public Right-of-Way Across Private Property: The Richters brought an action in District Court to condemn an easement across the land of a neighbor that surrounded their property on three sides, claiming that a public highway had been established across what became their neighbor's land after the United States had sold the property to its first private owner. The Supreme Court noted that it had previously held in Kaufman v. Butte, 48 M 400, 138 P 770 (1914), that Montana law required that both an offer by the owner of the land evidencing the owner's intent to dedicate the land for a public right-of-way and an acceptance of that offer by the public had to be demonstrated to prove a common-law easement. Distinguishing McKey v. Hyde Park, 134 US 84 (1890), the Supreme Court held that because the Richters presented no evidence that the first private owner of the land took any action demonstrating an intent to dedicate a public right-of-way across her property, the Richters failed to prove the existence of that right-of-way. Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 M 379, 962 P2d 583, 55 St. Rep. 663 (1998).

Neighborly Accommodation Use of Road for Recreational Purposes — No Public Easement: Use of a road for recreational purposes by defendants and their witnesses under a neighbor's accommodation does not create a public prescriptive easement or a private prescriptive easement. Kessinger v. Matulevich, 278 M 450, 925 P2d 864, 53 St. Rep. 1002 (1996).

Recreational Use of Road — No Presumption of Adverse Use: In a suit to establish prescriptive easement over a road, as a matter of law, use of the road for recreational purposes only could not raise the presumption of adverse use. Kessinger v. Matulevich, 278 M 450, 925 P2d 864, 53 St. Rep. 1002 (1996).

Public Road by Prescription — Adversity Satisfied by County Newspaper Publication — Intermittent Maintenance and Neighborly Accommodation Not Substantiated: Swandal Ranch Company (SRC) brought an action to quiet title to a stretch of roadway, known as Wallrock Road, running through the ranch. The District Court held that Park County had established a public easement by prescription. The Supreme Court held that Park County had satisfied the requirements for a prescriptive easement, noting that declaration by the county in 1950 of its intent to create a public road by statutory process and subsequent newspaper publication of the minutes of the County Commissioners' meeting put SRC on notice of the county's interest in Wallrock Road, even though the intent of the Commissioners had been to create the public road by a different process. The Supreme Court also found that county maintenance of the road had not been intermittent and that there was sufficient evidence that use of the road was not by neighborly accommodation. Swandal Ranch Co. v. Hunt, 276 M 229, 915 P2d 840, 53 St. Rep. 361 (1996), followed in Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996).

Presumption of Adverse Use Under Claim of Right — No Evidence of Neighborly Accommodation: Tanners and others purchased property on Flathead Lake. Tanners and the others obtained access to their property by driving on roads located on Daly's property to the north. When Daly erected a fence across the roads and blocked access to their property, Tanners and the others brought suit, alleging that they had acquired an easement by prescription for the use of several of the roads. The Supreme Court held that Tanners had established a presumption of adverse use under a claim of right based upon the 1932 deed of their predecessors in interest. Because Daly claimed that Tanners' use of the roads was by her permission or neighborly accommodation, the Supreme Court held that Daly had the burden of proving permissive use. The Supreme Court referred to testimony in the record from which the jury could have found that no permission had been granted by Daly. Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

No Relocation of Prescriptive Easement by Consent of Parties: For nearly 100 years, access to Glenn's property was across the "old road" that crossed Grosfields' land. The parties agreed that Glenn and her neighbors had established a prescriptive easement by use of the "old road". After 1992, Glenn quit using part of the old road and began using a "new road" across another part of Grosfields' land. All of the property owners, including Grosfields, used the new road for approximately 2 years, until Grosfields placed barbed wire across it. Glenn brought an action to enjoin Grosfields from placing the fence across the new road. The Supreme Court held that the location of a prescriptive easement cannot be changed by mutual consent of the parties, tacit or otherwise, and that because Glenn did not otherwise satisfy the requirements for a prescriptive easement on the new road, the District Court erred in granting the injunction. The court overruled Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91(1962), to the extent that it suggested that a prescriptive easement can be relocated by verbal or tacit consent. Glenn v. Grosfield, 274 M 192, 906 P2d 201, 52 St. Rep. 1150 (1995), followed in Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996), and Leisz v. Avista Corp., 2007 MT 347, 340 M 294, 174 P3d 481 (2007).

Presumption of Adverse Use Established Through Preliminary Requirements for Prescriptive Right: After a claimant has established the preliminary requirements for a prescriptive right, a presumption of adverse use arises. The burden then shifts to the owner of the land on which the prescriptive easement is claimed to establish permissive use or license. If an owner establishes that the use is permissive, no easement can be acquired. In the present case, no genuine issue of material fact existed with regard to defendant's open, notorious, continuous, uninterrupted, and exclusive use of a road access for the statutory period; thus, the presumption of adverse use was applicable. Plaintiff failed to raise material facts regarding whether the use was permissive, including questions of permission or license, control of access by use of a gate, and neighborly accommodation. Defendant was therefore entitled to summary judgment based on adverse use as a matter of law. Lemont Land Corp. v. Rogers, 269 M 180, 887 P2d 724, 51 St. Rep. 1459 (1994), distinguishing Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993). See also Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2012 MT 264, 367 Mont. 67, 289 P.3d 156, and Brown & Brown of MT, Inc. v. Raty, 2013 MT 338, 372 Mont. 463, 313 P.3d 179.

Right to Use Common Road Established by Express Grant in Deed — Prescriptive Easement Inapplicable: Appellants contended that they were entitled to an injunction because the presence of a gate across a common road changed the nature of their easement from prescriptive to permissive. However, because their right to use the common road was obtained by express grant in their deed pursuant to an agreement under 82-2-203 that allows owners of certain mining claims to obtain a right-of-way by agreement, there was no prescriptive use and no basis for appellants' argument that the presence of the gate diminished their right to use the common road. The fact that appellants did not use the easement to any significant extent, coupled with the trial court's setting of standards regarding the gate, affirmed that the court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellants' request for an injunction to prevent maintenance of a locked gate across the common road. Gabriel v. Wood, 261 M 170, 862 P2d 42, 50 St. Rep. 1246 (1993), distinguishing Finley v. Rutherford, 151 M 488, 444 P2d 306 (1968), Cope v. Cope, 158 M 388, 493 P2d 336 (1971), and Larson v. Burnett, 158 M 421, 492 P2d 921 (1972), and followed in Engel

v. Gampp, 2000 MT 17, 298 M 116, 993 P2d 701, 57 St. Rep. 96 (2000), and Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St. Rep. 125 (2000).

Right-of-Way Established by Prescriptive Easement: A holding that plaintiff had a road right-of-way by reason of prescriptive easement was affirmed despite defendant's claims that use was permissive because of neighborhood use of the road, family control of access and improvements, the presence of gates, and change of road location. Parker v. Elder, 233 M 75, 758 P2d 292, 45 St. Rep. 1305 (1988).

No Prescriptive Easement Against Own Land: A person who is an equal owner of an undivided life estate in property may not acquire an easement by prescription on that property. It is elementary that one cannot acquire a prescriptive easement against oneself as owner. Zavarelli v. Might, 230 M 288, 749 P2d 524, 45 St. Rep. 211 (1988).

When Easement Rights Not Extinguished by Adverse Possession or Prescriptive Easement: Both adverse possession and prescriptive easement require proof of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, and continuous possession or use for 5 years. The Supreme Court found insufficient evidence of extinguishment of easement rights by adverse possession or prescriptive right to a gate when: (1) there was not consistent testimony that appellant intended to eliminate all access to the easement; (2) he stated he would have given lot owners keys to the gate if they had wished to improve the access road; (3) there was limited entry around the gate by snowmobile, motorcycle, or on foot; (4) the gate was sometimes left open; (5) a declaration of restrictions remained on file stating the easement right; (6) "no trespassing" signs were not placed near the gate for at least 4 years after the gate was installed; and (7) appellant never affirmatively conveyed to the lot owners at any date certain his intention that they not go beyond the gate. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986).

Easement by Prescription for City Water Pipeline — Prescriptive Right Not Extinguished by Transfer of Servient Estate: City openly and visibly constructed a water supply line across land owned by plaintiff's predecessor in interest outside the easement granted to the city. The Supreme Court found the city's use was sufficiently open and notorious to support the District Court's finding of a prescriptive easement. Prescriptive title once established is not divested by transfer of the servient estate, and the fact that plaintiff's title search and title insurance policy and visual inspection of the property did not indicate the presence of the pipeline was immaterial. Riddock v. Helena, 212 M 390, 687 P2d 1386, 41 St. Rep. 1817 (1984).

Prescriptive Easement — No Proof of Permissive Use: The District Court's finding that a prescriptive easement had been established was proper where testimony of claimant's witnesses indicated open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the road and the landowner offered no evidence to establish permissive use other than his uncorroborated assertions. Thomas v. Barnum, 211 M 137, 684 P2d 1106, 41 St. Rep. 1266 (1984).

No Prescriptive Easement — Use Consented to Despite Signs: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement existed across defendants' land. The evidence presented established that several of the defendants' neighbors used the road across defendants' land but also testified that defendants had consented to the use. Evidence was also presented that there were gates across the road posted with "No Trespassing" signs. This kind of use is not adverse and does not create a public prescriptive easement. Madison County v. Elford, 203 M 293, 661 P2d 1266, 40 St. Rep. 457 (1983).

Prescriptive Easement — Use to Be Adverse: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement existed across defendants' land. The evidence presented established that several of the defendant's neighbors used the road across defendant's land but also testified that defendants had consented to the use. Evidence was also presented that there were gates across the road posted with "No Trespassing" signs. This kind of use is not adverse and does not create a public prescriptive easement. Madison County v. Elford, 203 M 293, 661 P2d 1266, 40 St. Rep. 457 (1983).

Custom and Gates — Prescriptive Easement Defeated: Plaintiff attempted to establish western access to his land by means of a prescriptive easement. The District Court found use of the route permissive, thereby defeating a prescriptive easement. Evidence was introduced to show it was customary in homesteading days to allow the neighbors access across another's land. Permission was automatic if the individual closed the gates and respected the property. Several gates were established and maintained across the access. The evidence of local custom coupled with the existence of gates clearly supported the trial court's conclusion that use of the western access was always permissive. Rathbun v. Robson, 203 M 319, 661 P2d 850, 40 St. Rep. 475 (1983), followed in Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 794 (1993), Greenwalt Family Trust v. Kehler, 267 M 508, 885 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1130 (1994), Kessinger v. Matulevich, 278 M 450, 925 P2d 864, 53 St. Rep.

1002 (1996), and Rettig v. Kallevig, 282 M 189, 936 P2d 807, 54 St. Rep. 307 (1997). Rathbun and Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc., were followed in Swandal Ranch Co. v. Hunt, 276 M 229, 915 P2d 840, 53 St. Rep. 361 (1996). Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. and Rettig were followed in Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999). However, evidence that gates were used to control cattle rather than traffic was insufficient to rebut the presumption of adverse use. Parker v. Elder, 233 M 75, 758 P2d 292, 45 St. Rep. 1305 (1988).

Prescriptive Right to Use of Road Established by Public Use: Evidence showing heavy public use of a road and maintenance of the road by the county overwhelmingly supports a ruling that, by the time the plaintiff-landowner locked the gate and later barricaded the road for his own use, the public had long since established its right to use the road as a public road. Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 631 (1981), followed in Jefferson County v. McCauley Ranches, 1999 MT 333, 297 M 392, 994 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1329 (1999).

Prescriptive Easement Not Extinguished by Transfer of Servient Estate: Where claimant's prescriptive easement had fully ripened, it was not necessary to once again establish the claim after transfer of the servient tenement. Prescriptive title once established is not divested by transfer of the servient estate. Garrett v. Jackson, 183 M 505, 600 P2d 1177 (1979), following Ferguson v. Standley, 89 M 489, 300 P2d 245 (1931).

Prescriptive Easement — Occasional Recreational Use: Occasional use of a road by hunters and campers falls short of the extent and type of use necessary to result in a prescriptive easement. Oates v Knutson, 182 M 195, 595 P2d 1181 (1979).

Recordkeeping Insufficient to Establish Prescriptive Easement: The existence of county records to the effect that the road in question was a county road was not sufficient to initiate acquisition of a prescriptive right. Prescriptive easements are acquired by adverse use, not by keeping records. Oates v. Knutson, 182 M 195, 595 P2d 1181 (1979).

Showing Required for Easement by Prescription:

A party claiming to have acquired an easement by prescription must show open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the easement claimed for the full statutory period. Luoma v. Donohoe, 179 M 359, 588 P2d 523 (1978).

To establish the existence of an easement by prescription, the party so claiming must show open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted use of the easement claimed for the full statutory period. Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91 (1962), followed in Thomas v. Barnum, 211 M 137, 684 P2d 1106, 41 St. Rep. 1266 (1984).

Evidence Supports Easement: In an action to enjoin defendants from further trespassing by use of a road across plaintiff's property, the Supreme Court found sufficient evidence to support granting of easements to the defendants and the public with certain limitations. St. v. Cronin, 179 M 481, 587 P2d 395 (1978).

Testimony Establishing Necessary Requirements: The testimony clearly established the necessary requirements of a prescriptive easement as set forth in Scott v. Weinheimer, 140 M 554, 374 P2d 91 (1962), including "open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous and uninterrupted use without permission". Staudinger v. DeVries, 177 M 189, 581 P2d 1 (1978).

No Triable Issue: The evidence established existence of an easement by prescription, and defendant failed to meet his burden of showing that a triable issue of fact remained. Yecny v. Day, 174 M 442, 571 P2d 386 (1977).

No Easement — Use Permissive: There was substantial evidence supporting the court's determination that neither the general public nor the defendants individually acquired an easement by prescription across plaintiff's land because a use permissive in its inception did not ripen into a prescriptive right. Taylor v. Petranek, 173 M 433, 568 P2d 120 (1977).

Use — Must Be Exclusive: Trial court properly held for defendant when plaintiff claimed a prescriptive easement to right-of-way because plaintiff shared use of claimed land with former neighboring tenants. Thus, use was not exclusive or adverse and hostile and did not create an easement by prescription or implication but only a permissive use. Ingels v. Mickalson, 170 M 1, 549 P2d 459 (1976).

Presence of Gates — Presumption of Permissive Use: Summary judgment for defendant was proper where plaintiff failed to establish an easement by prescription to a road crossed at several points by fences with closed gates owned and controlled by defendant. The presence of gates which must be opened by the user was strong evidence of permissive rather than adverse use since it tended to establish "total dominion" over the roadway by defendant. Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), followed in Kessinger v. Matulevich, 278 M 450, 925 P2d 864, 53 St. Rep. 1002 (1996).

Permissive Use Not Hostile or Adverse: Since prescriptive easement must be by hostile or adverse use, no use of a road with permission of the owner can ripen into prescriptive easement.

Wilson v. Chestnut, 164 M 484, 525 P2d 24 (1974), followed in Thomas v. Barnum, 211 M 137, 684 P2d 1106, 41 St. Rep. 1266 (1984), Tacke v. Wynia, 258 M 405, 853 P2d 87, 50 St. Rep. 587 (1993), and Greenwalt Family Trust v. Kehler, 267 M 508, 885 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1130 (1994).

Section Applicable to Easements: This section applies to an easement in real property as well as to the fee. O'Connor v. Brodie 153 M 129, 454 P2d 920 (1969); St. v. Portmann, 149 M 91, 423 P2d 56 (1967); Groshean v. Dillmont Realty Co., 92 M 227, 12 P2d 273 (1932).

Highway Established by Prescription:

Public highway was established by prescription on evidence that members of public had used road openly for more than 50 years without ever having obtained permission from owners, that previous owner had considered road to be public highway, that the road had been maintained by the county for some 24 years, and that public had never been denied use of road. Kostbade v. Metier, 150 M 139, 432 P2d 382 (1967).

Road running down center line separating two properties and used by each owner was easement created by prescriptive use within meaning of word "occupancy" as used in statute, but width of road could never exceed greatest use made of land for full prescriptive period. St. v. Portmann, 149 M 91, 423 P2d 56 (1967).

Where county adversely paved and maintained a highway over land of a private party for more than 10 years, the county acquired an easement by prescription over the land even though the private owner was assessed for and paid taxes on the property during the running of the statutory period. Brannon v. Lewis & Clark County, 143 M 200, 387 P2d 706 (1963).

This section appears to recognize the doctrine that adverse use by the public for the period named in the Statute of Limitations will establish a highway by prescription, but the title will be confined to the very way traveled during the period, unless an attempt has been made by the proper authorities to erect a highway, when the extent of the title will be measured by the claim exhibited by the proceedings. St. v. Auchard, 22 M 14, 55 P 361 (1898).

Ditch Right: Title by prescription to a ditch conveying water may be obtained by use thereof whenever water is needed. Te Selle v. Storey, 133 M 1, 319 P2d 218 (1957).

Case Notes

Possession of Real Property Insufficient to Grant Title Against Good Faith Purchasers — No Adverse Possession Shown: In 1989, the Luloffs bought part of a ranch from the Manweilers by a deed that excluded "Tract B". The Luloffs mistakenly assumed that Tract B was the part of the ranch that had been occupied by the Blackburns for approximately 4 years. When the Luloffs later discovered that Tract B was another part of the ranch, they brought an action to have the Blackburns evicted, and the District Court granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was correctly granted because there was no contract between the Manweilers and the Blackburns satisfying the statute of frauds for the sale of the property to the Blackburns. The Supreme Court held that the Blackburns' mere possession was insufficient against the Luloffs, who had purchased the ranch as bona fide purchasers in good faith, because they were without notice of any claim of title by the Blackburns. The Supreme Court noted that the Blackburns could not make a claim of title because they had mere possession, which did not satisfy the requirements for adverse possession because the Blackburns had not paid taxes upon the property. Luloff v. Blackburn, 274 M 64, 906 P2d 189, 52 St. Rep. 1124 (1995).

Undisturbed Possession of Water Right: The undisturbed possession of a water right (which is property) for a period of time in excess of the time necessary to acquire title by prescription, standing alone, is sufficient under this section to vest clear title in the one having possession. Cook v. Hudson, 110 M 263, 103 P2d 137 (1940).

Case Notes

Adverse Possession Claim Not Interrupted by Suit Seeking Establishment of Easement: Parker maintained an adverse possession claim for 5 years. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. (Tungsten), argued that its prior lawsuit interrupted the 5-year period and tolled the adverse possession action. In that suit, Tungsten requested that title to an easement over a portion of the property be quieted in its favor, and the suit remained pending for 1 ½ years during the adverse possession period. The Supreme Court agreed that the 5-year period is tolled during the pendency of an action to establish title to the property that conflicts with the title claimed by the adverse claimant. However, in this case, Tungsten did not challenge Parker's title to the property, but rather sought to establish an easement over it, so the prior action did not interrupt the 5-year adverse possession period. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Parker, 2001 MT 117, 305 M 329, 27 P3d 429 (2001), distinguishing Flathead Lumber Corp. v. Everett, 127 M 291, 263 P2d 376 (1953), Brown v. Cartwright, 163 M 139, 515 P2d 684 (1973), and Craddock v. Berryman, 198 M 155, 645 P2d 399 (1982).

No Proof of Adverse Possession Absent Evidence of Property Taxes: The District Court found that plaintiffs had proved their claim to a disputed parcel of property and established an adverse possession claim, based in part on historical payment of property taxes. Defendant 360 Ranch contended that the District Court's conclusion that plaintiffs had paid property taxes on the property was error and that defendant's records showed that defendant had actually paid taxes on the parcel. Plaintiffs maintained that 70-19-411 does not require payment of taxes on all property to which adverse possession is claimed, but only of all taxes legally levied and assessed. The tax assessments indicated that plaintiffs were assessed taxes on property east of "the road", but it was not clear which of two roads through the parcel was indicated. The Supreme Court held that because the record provided insufficient evidence to show that plaintiffs paid taxes on the property in question, the District Court's conclusion that plaintiffs had proved a claim for adverse possession was incorrect and reversible error. Tester v. Tester, 2000 MT 130, 300 M 5, 3 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 538 (2000).

Transfer of Land to Corporation or Trust in Which Grantor Has Interest — Color of Title Not Created: Relying on St. v. King, 87 SE 167 (W. Va. 1915), and St. v. Altizer Coal Land Co., 128 SE 286 (W. Va. 1925), the Supreme Court held that a grantor cannot create color of title in land in which that grantor has no interest by transferring or deeding the land to a corporation or trust in which that grantor has an interest. Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Claim of Adverse Possession Defeated by Loan of Title Agreement: Johnson agreed to loan Anderson the title to several lots that Johnson owned on Flathead Lake so that Anderson could mortgage the lots and use the proceeds for a business venture. Johnson and Anderson both executed deeds to the property, and Anderson occupied the property pursuant to a lease agreement. Later, the agreement was breached when Anderson conveyed his interest to a third party and cut trees from the property. Anderson claimed title to the property by adverse possession. The Supreme Court held that Anderson had not satisfied the statutory prerequisites because he held possession of the land by virtue of a lease and because Anderson's rights were not exclusive of Johnson's right to repossess the lot as a result of the other deed and the oral agreement. Anderson v. Johnson, 264 M 66, 870 P2d 59, 51 St. Rep. 149 (1994).

Statutory Requirements of Adverse Possession Met: Plaintiffs and their predecessors had possession of the property in question for over 50 years, evidenced by the fact that they improved and fenced the area. They paid all taxes legally assessed and levied against the property and acquired all claims of right, title, and interest by quitclaim deed. They were entitled to surface rights by adverse possession despite the fact that defendant may also have paid improperly assessed taxes on the same property. Perusich v. Meier, 229 M 458, 747 P2d 857, 44 St. Rep. 2132 (1987).

Mixed or Common Possession of Land — Possession to Person With Legal Title — No Adverse Possession as Against Legal Title: In reversing a District Court grant of a first priority water right for irrigation on the basis of adverse use, the Supreme Court adopted the rule that in case of a mixed or common possession of land by both parties to a suit, the law adjudges the rightful possession to the party who holds legal title, and no length of time of possession can give title by adverse possession as against the legal title. Mielke v. Daly Ditches Irrigation District, 225 M 172, 731 P2d 927, 44 St. Rep. 129 (1987).

Adverse Possession — Quiet Title Action Barred by Laches and Statutes of Limitations: In 1954, Clayton obtained a patent from the United States government for a piece of property. A railroad right-of-way ran through the property, but the patent did not refer to the right-of-way. The railroad had acquired the right-of-way by deed in 1892. The railroad tracks were used by at least one train a day both before and after 1954. Railroad work crews used the right-of-way system during this time. In 1983, Clayton filed an action to quiet title to the right-of-way and a tort claim for trespass and damages. The railroad defended on the grounds of adverse possession, prescription, laches, estoppel, and Statutes of Limitations. The railroad also filed a counterclaim to quiet title to its right-of-way. The District Court granted summary judgment for the railroad, ruling that Clayton's claim was barred by laches and all applicable Statutes of Limitations. The Supreme Court affirmed. The railroad acquired a prescriptive easement either based on a written instrument, under 70-19-407, or by enclosing the land and meeting the other requirements of 70-19-408. Murphy v. Atl. Richfield Co., 221 M 166, 717 P2d 558, 43 St. Rep. 717 (1986), distinguished in Gue v. Olds, 245 M 117, 799 P2d 543, 47 St. Rep. 1906 (1990). See also Johnson v. Estate of Shelton, 232 M 85, 754 P2d 828, 45 St. Rep. 887 (1988).

Enclosure by Fence — Improper Grant of Land Outside Fence: Since plaintiffs obtained title through adverse possession under a deed by, among other things, enclosing a piece of land with a fence, they could be granted title by the court only to what was enclosed by the fence, and the District Court was ordered to change the award to delete land outside the fence. Castles v. Lawrence, 203 M 421, 662 P2d 589, 40 St. Rep. 545 (1983), rehearing denied, 40 St. Rep. 718 (1983).

Possession for Five Years Under Deed: Plaintiffs had adverse possession under this section, since court found they had possessed the land for more than 5 years under a claim of title arising from a deed and the evidence supporting the findings was not rebutted. Castles v. Lawrence, 203 M 421, 662 P2d 589, 40 St. Rep. 545 (1983), rehearing denied, 40 St. Rep. 718 (1983).

Adverse Possession — Color of Title — Good Faith: The burden of proving adverse possession under color of title is on the defendant in a quiet title action. Under Montana law, an instruction which purports to convey land or the right to its possession is sufficient color of title as a basis for adverse possession if the claim is made in good faith. When a party's "title" was based on a quitclaim deed from an individual who was known by all parties concerned to have no interest whatsoever in the property, the court concluded that there was not a trace of good faith and no color of title. Further, the party asserting adverse possession must succeed on the strength of his own title and cannot rely on the weakness of his adversary. Russell Realty Co. v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980), followed in Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Tolling of Statute: Statute of Limitations did not toll during period when Indian plaintiff was attempting to persuade the United States to bring action against vendee of Indian's land on grounds that sale was fraudulent. Dillon v. Antler Land Co., 341 F. Supp. 734 (D.C. Mont. 1972), affirmed in 507 F2d 940 (9th Cir. 1974), certiorari denied, 421 US 992, 44 L Ed 2d 482, 95 S Ct 1998 (1975).

Possession Under Color of Title: Rancher, who received administrator's deed purporting to convey land, which deed was reviewed by two attorneys who failed to note the discrepancy in the deed and which deed also misled the right-of-way department for a power company which paid the rancher $800 for an underground pipeline easement across the tract, occupied the land under claim or color of title within meaning of this section. Brown v. Cartwright, 163 M 139, 515 P2d 684 (1973).

Void Tax Deed Ample as Color of Title:

Where county leased property, which it obtained by tax deed in 1930, to persons in 1940 and entered into a contract for sale in 1941, the occupant had "color of title" under the tax deeds and contracts for deeds to support adverse possession even though such tax deeds to the county were void for failure to comply with all of the requirements. Long v. Pawlowski, 131 M 91, 307 P2d 1079 (1957), explained in Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957).

A tax deed, though void, is ample as color of title to sustain the claim of adverse possession. Hentzy v. Mandan Loan & Inv. Co., 129 M 324, 286 P2d 325 (1955), explained in Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957).

Evidence of Color of Title: Color of title may be evidenced by a contract for the sale of land. An instrument which purports to convey the land or the right to its possession is sufficient color of title as a basis for adverse possession if the claim is made in good faith. Hentzy v. Mandan Loan & Inv. Co., 129 M 324, 286 P2d 325 (1955), explained in Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957).

Tacking Possession: A wife may tack her possession onto that of her husband prior to his death, and it is not necessary that the relationship of husband and wife be established by probate proceedings before this can be done where the relationship is admitted by the pleadings. Barcus v. Galbreath, 122 M 537, 207 P2d 559 (1949).

Claim of Title Meaning Color of Title:

The term "claim of title" as used in this section is synonymous with "color of title", which is title in appearance but not in reality, a title that is imperfect but not so obviously so that it would be apparent to one not skilled in the law. As a basis of claim by adverse possession, color of title may be shown by any instrument purporting to convey the land or the right to its possession, provided such claim is made in good faith, as for instance, by a quitclaim deed. Sullivan v. Neel, 105 M 253, 73 P2d 206 (1937).

The term "claim of title" used in this section means "color of title", which is title in appearance but not in reality, and color of title may be shown by any instrument purporting to convey the land or the right to its possession, provided claim is made thereunder in good faith. Fitschen Bros. Commercial Co. v. Noyes' Estate, 76 M 175, 246 P 773 (1926), followed in Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Quitclaim Deed: Where a purchaser of a tract of land held by a county under tax deed obtained possession under a quitclaim deed which correctly described only a portion thereof but later was given a correction deed accurately describing the whole tract, such latter deed was sufficient to give the purchaser color of title to the land under this section in his action to quiet title upon adverse possession. Sullivan v. Neel, 105 M 253, 73 P2d 206 (1937).

Sheriff's Certificate of Sale — Claim of Title: A Sheriff's certificate of sale constitutes a "claim of title", within the meaning of this section, to real property under which title by adverse possession may be established. Commercial Bank & Trust Co. v. Jordan, 85 M 375, 278 P 832, 65 ALR 968 (1929).

Tax Deed: Where, in an action of ejectment, the defense is adverse possession, based on a tax deed not formal enough to convey full title by its own force, the validity of which possession is claimed to have been acquiesced in by the plaintiff, and the latter offers proof that this tax deed was taken for him by the grantees therein and under his instructions, there is a conflict in the evidence and the jury should determine the question of adverse possession. Horsky v. McKennan, 53 M 50 162 P 376 (1916).

Claim of Title: As used to characterize adverse possession, "claim of title" means nothing more than the claim asserted by the disseizor of his intention to appropriate and use the land in question as his own, to the exclusion of the rights of all persons, and which may serve, irrespective of any semblance of color or right or title, as the foundation of his claim. Morrison v. Linn, 50 M 396, 147 P 166 (1915).

Color of Title: One holding land under a written instrument, a statute, or a judgment or decree of court which appears to convey to or confirm title in him but does not do so in fact holds under "color of title". Morrison v. Linn, 50 M 396, 147 P 166 (1915).

No Constructive Possession Under Claim of Title: While the adverse claimant under color of title for the statutory period obtains title to the entire tract described in his muniment, if it has been subjected to proper use, the one who relies upon claim of title secures only so much as he actually possesses. There cannot be constructive possession under mere claim of title, and this is the doctrine of the decided cases and the meaning of this section, 70-19-408, 70-19-409, and 70-19-410. Morrison v. Linn, 50 M 396, 147 P 166 (1915).

70-19-408. Claim founded on instrument or judgment — what considered possession and occupation.

Case Notes

Payment of Taxes Not Yet Due Not Required to Sustain Adverse Possession Claim: Pursuant to 70-19-411, a party claiming adverse possession must occupy the property continuously for 5 years and must have paid all legally levied and assessed taxes on the property. Parker received notice for property taxes due on October 31, 1997, but the taxes were not paid. The 5-year period of adverse possession commenced when Parker received the defective tax deeds on November 24, 1992, so the 5-year adverse possession period would have expired on November 24, 1997. The District Court held that because the 1997 taxes were assessed prior to November 24, 1997, and were unpaid, Parker's claim for adverse possession failed. Parker maintained that the adverse possession language in 70-19-411 should be interpreted in combination with the statutory provisions for levy, notice, and payment of taxes in the tax code in Title 15. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to 15-10-305, real estate taxes are levied and assessed on the second Monday in October, while 15-16-102 provides that one-half of each year's property taxes is payable on or before November 30 and the other one-half is payable on or before May 31 of the following year. Therefore, although the 1997 taxes were levied prior to the expiration of the 5-year adverse possession period on November 25, 1997, the taxes were not delinquent until November 30, 1997, 1 week after the adverse possession period ended. The Supreme Court concluded that 70-19-411 does not require the payment of taxes that are not yet due in order to sustain a claim of adverse possession. Thus, the District Court erred in concluding that Parker did not meet the requirements of 70-19-411, and the decision was reversed. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Parker, 2001 MT 117, 305 M 329, 27 P3d 429 (2001).

Statutory Requirements of Adverse Possession Met: Plaintiffs and their predecessors had possession of the property in question for over 50 years, evidenced by the fact that they improved and fenced the area. They paid all taxes legally assessed and levied against the property and acquired all claims of right, title, and interest by quitclaim deed. They were entitled to surface rights by adverse possession despite the fact that defendant may also have paid improperly assessed taxes on the same property. Perusich v. Meier, 229 M 458, 747 P2d 857, 44 St. Rep. 2132 (1987).

Payment of Taxes Required: When the claim to property is founded upon an instrument, adverse possession requires the payment of taxes in addition to the other requirements of 70-19-408. Peterson v. Taylor, 226 M 400, 735 P2d 1120, 44 St. Rep. 754 (1987).

Adverse Possession — Quiet Title Action Barred by Laches and Statutes of Limitations: In 1954, Clayton obtained a patent from the United States government for a piece of property. A railroad right-of-way ran through the property, but the patent did not refer to the right-of-way. The railroad had acquired the right-of-way by deed in 1892. The railroad tracks were used by at least one train a day both before and after 1954. Railroad work crews used the right-of-way system during this time. In 1983, Clayton filed an action to quiet title to the right-of-way and a tort claim for trespass and damages. The railroad defended on the grounds of adverse possession, prescription, laches, estoppel, and Statutes of Limitations. The railroad also filed a counterclaim to quiet title to its right-of-way. The District Court granted summary judgment for the railroad, ruling that Clayton's claim was barred by laches and all applicable Statutes of Limitations. The Supreme Court affirmed. The railroad acquired a prescriptive easement either based on a written instrument, under 70-19-407, or by enclosing the land and meeting the other requirements of 70-19-408. Murphy v. Atl. Richfield Co., 221 M 166, 717 P2d 558, 43 St. Rep. 717 (1986), distinguished in Gue v. Olds, 245 M 117, 799 P2d 543, 47 St. Rep. 1906 (1990). See also Johnson v. Estate of Shelton, 232 M 85, 754 P2d 828, 45 St. Rep. 887 (1988).

Substantial Enclosure — Lake Boundary Constitutes: Possessors of land under a deed constructed a fence around all parts of the land not bordered by lake. The lake boundary was a substantial enclosure within the meaning of that term as it is used in this section. Castles v. Lawrence, 203 M 421, 662 P2d 589, 40 St. Rep. 545 (1983), rehearing denied, 40 St. Rep. 718 (1983).

Maintaining Land Identical to Adjoining Property — Not an Improvement: Possessor, not claiming on an instrument, did not satisfy requirements of 70-19-410 of improvement of the claimed land by merely maintaining the land in the same condition as surrounding property, because that standard found at 70-19-408 is applicable only to a claim founded on an instrument. Stimatz v. St., 189 M 179, 615 P2d 228 (1980).

Possession Under Color of Title:

Certificate of assignment given to person paying delinquent taxes on realty did not give that person color of title and did not bring him within ambit of this section. Magelssen v. Atwell, 152 M 409, 451 P2d 103 (1969).

The character of the possession that will satisfy the requirements is determined by this section where the lands are claimed under color of title and by 70-19-410 where the claim of adverse possession is not founded upon a written instrument, judgment, or decree. Thus the foundation of the claim and the character of the land in question determine the degree and character of possession or occupancy necessary to satisfy the statutes. Sullivan v. Neel, 105 M 253, 73 P2d 206 (1937).

Mortgagor's Possession: This section was inapplicable to claim of adverse title to grazing lands by plaintiff who contended that he had color of title by virtue of his patent, where proof disclosed that mortgage foreclosure proceedings divested him of title, leaving him with privilege of redemption which was not exercised. Upon the issuance of Sheriff's certificate of sale, title vested in purchaser. Bell v. Gussenhoven, 132 M 346, 318 P2d 251 (1957).

Acts Showing Possession:

Where defendant paid taxes on land for more than the statutory period, staked out the land in lots and leased it at various times for different purposes, and the land was in defendant's name in the tax records, evidence was sufficient to show adverse possession. Kenney v. Bridges, 123 M 95, 208 P2d 475 (1949).

Where plaintiffs inclosed the land with barbed wire fence, cultivated the land, executed an oil and gas lease on the land, and mortgaged the land, there were sufficient facts to show adverse possession. Laas v. All Persons, 121 M 43, 189 P2d 670 (1948).

Grazing of Land: Where plaintiff in an action to quiet title to a tract of land used it only for grazing and placer mining purposes for limited periods each year, under a claim of adverse possession based on color of title evidenced by quitclaim deed (70-19-407), the fact that the land was not inclosed did not defeat his claim, since under this section, for the purpose of constituting adverse possession, such land is considered to have been possessed and occupied, although not inclosed, if used, inter alia, for pasturage. Sullivan v. Neel, 105 M 253, 73 P2d 206 (1937).

70-19-409. Actual occupancy under claim of title not founded on instrument or judgment — adverse.

Case Notes

Limited Prescriptive Easement Established — Obvious Use Viewed as Open and Notorious: Albert filed an action to determine a claim for a prescriptive easement and quiet title to a road across Hastetter's property. Hastetter raised the affirmative defense of estoppel, claiming that Albert recognized Hastetter's legitimate title to the road by requesting an easement in an earlier letter and that the use was permissive and subject to Hastetter's consent. The trial court found that Albert had a prescriptive easement that was limited to the historical use of providing access and moving cattle to and from Albert's pasture. Hastetter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Albert established the elements for a prescriptive easement during the statutory 5-year period, and thus enjoyed the presumption that his use was adverse to Hastetter's interest. Although the servient landowner must know about and acquiesce to the user's claim of right, Montana law does not require that a prescriptive easement claimant verbally communicate a hostile intent. Open and notorious use can be established by showing that the condition of use was so obvious that the owner was not deceived and should have known of the claimant's use. Further, Albert had used the road to move cattle periodically since 1958 and had used the road to check the condition of fences and gates. Given the obvious use of the gates to control livestock, the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it refrained from scrutinizing the gates as evidence of permissive use. Albert v. Hastetter, 2002 MT 123, 310 M 82, 48 P3d 749 (2002), followed in Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Mixed or Common Possession of Land — Possession to Person With Legal Title — No Adverse Possession as Against Legal Title: In reversing a District Court grant of a first priority water right for irrigation on the basis of adverse use, the Supreme Court adopted the rule that in case of a mixed or common possession of land by both parties to a suit, the law adjudges the rightful possession to the party who holds legal title, and no length of time of possession can give title by adverse possession as against the legal title. Mielke v. Daly Ditches Irrigation District, 225 M 172, 731 P2d 927, 44 St. Rep. 129 (1987).

Enclosure by Fence — Improper Grant of Land Outside Fence: Since plaintiffs obtained title through adverse possession under a deed by, among other things, enclosing a piece of land with a fence, they could be granted title by the court only to what was enclosed by the fence, and the District Court was ordered to change the award to delete land outside the fence. Castles v. Lawrence, 203 M 421, 662 P2d 589, 40 St. Rep. 545 (1983), rehearing denied, 40 St. Rep. 718 (1983).

Insufficient Evidence to Fulfill Statute: The court erred when it failed to determine that this statute had been fulfilled to support a decree of adverse possession. In viewing the record the evidence did not fulfill the requirements. Martin v. Randono, 175 M 321, 573 P2d 1156 (1978).

Inclosure of Land: Protection of the land by a substantial inclosure with intent to claim to the inclosure is sufficient for adverse possession under this section even though not based on a written instrument. Thibault v. Flynn, 133 M 461, 325 P2d 914 (1958).

Character of Initial Entry: While it is indispensable to defeat the holder of the legal title that the disseizor shall maintain his adverse possession throughout the entire statutory period, under either color of title or claim of title, it is not necessary that his initial entry into possession should be made under any pretense of right or title. Morrison v. Linn, 50 M 396, 147 P 166 (1915).

70-19-410. Claim of title not founded on instrument or judgment — what considered occupation.

Case Notes

Retaining Wall and Dock Not Considered Substantial Enclosure to Establish Possessory Adverse Use: The Jameses built a dock and retaining wall on property that a later survey revealed was on Habel's property. Habel filed a quiet title action, and the Jameses counterclaimed that they had acquired a prescriptive easement for the dock and retaining wall by adverse use for the statutory period. The District Court agreed and ruled that a nonpossessory prescriptive easement existed for the dock and retaining wall. Habel appealed, arguing that the dock and retaining wall were permanent structures that clearly marked the boundaries of the land enclosed by the structures and that the Jameses had thus acquired a possessory interest in the enclosed land. The Supreme Court noted that this section does not specify what kind of structure satisfies the requirement to "protect by substantial enclosure" in order to consider the property to be possessed and occupied for purposes of adverse possession, but concluded that a structure or fixture may constitute a substantial enclosure if it indicates the boundaries of the adverse occupancy in a manner that clearly demonstrates the extent of the use of the property. The District Court's findings that the land was only partially enclosed by the dock and retaining wall and did establish a possessory use of the property itself were not clearly erroneous. A complete possession or occupation of the land was not present in this case because the Jameses' construction and maintenance of the dock and retaining wall were limited uses consistent with a nonpossessory interest, which constituted a burden on Habel's property, not a complete possession or occupation. The District Court was affirmed. Habel v. James, 2003 MT 99, 315 M 249, 68 P3d 743 (2003), distinguishing Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136 (1983).

Substantial Enclosure — Lake Boundary Constitutes: Possessors of land under a deed constructed a fence around all parts of the land not bordered by lake. The lake boundary was a substantial enclosure within the meaning of that term as it is used in this section. Castles v. Lawrence, 203 M 421, 662 P2d 589, 40 St. Rep. 545 (1983), rehearing denied, 40 St. Rep. 718 (1983).

Maintaining Land Identical to Adjoining Property — Not an Improvement: Possessor, not claiming on an instrument, did not satisfy requirements of 70-19-410 of improvement of the claimed land by merely maintaining the land in the same condition as surrounding property, because that standard found at 70-19-408 is applicable only to a claim founded on an instrument. Stimatz v. St., 189 M 179, 615 P2d 228 (1980).

Adverse Possession — Parol Grant: A parol grant of real property can serve as a foundation for a claim of title by adverse possession, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. Swecker v. Dorn, 181 M 436, 593 P2d 1055 (1979).

Adverse Possession — Substantial Enclosure Sufficient: Adverse claimant need only prove his possession has been evidenced by a substantial enclosure and need not prove any further occupation, cultivation, or use. Plaintiff's assertion of undisputed possession from 1967-77 sufficiently establishes continuous and exclusive dominion over the property, and her uncontroverted payment of property taxes on the parcel during the same period satisfies 70-19-411. Swecker v. Dorn, 181 M 436, 593 P2d 1055 (1979).

Insufficient Evidence to Fulfill Statute: The court erred when it failed to determine that this statute had been fulfilled to support a decree of adverse possession. In viewing the record the evidence did not fulfill the requirements. Martin v. Randono, Inc., 175 M 321, 573 P2d 1156 (1978).

Necessary Intent: No adverse possession was established where plaintiff did not by any actions show requisite intent to possess adversely, particularly in view of letter in which plaintiff admitted that defendants owned the disputed land. Magelssen v. Atwell, 152 M 409, 451 P2d 103 (1969).

Conflicting Evidence: Finding of District Court that adverse possession was not established was affirmed, in light of record disclosing conflicting testimony on question of existence and upkeep of fences and conflicting testimony on question whether and who ran livestock on property during the prescriptive period. Johnson v. Silver Bow County, 151 M 283, 443 P2d 6 (1968).

Inclosure of Land: Protection of the land by a substantial inclosure with intent to claim to the inclosure is sufficient for adverse possession under this section even though not based on a written instrument. Thibault v. Flynn, 133 M 461, 325 P2d 914 (1958).

Grazing of Land: This section was inapplicable where plaintiff did not claim grazing land on any title except adverse usage and there was no testimony in the record that the land had been protected by a substantial inclosure, nor had it been cultivated or improved. Bell v. Gussenhoven, 132 M 346, 318 P2d 251 (1957).

Claim of Title: The character of the possession that will satisfy the requirements is determined by this section where the claim of adverse possession is not founded upon a written instrument, judgment, or decree and by 70-19-408 where the lands are claimed under color of title. Thus the foundation of the claim and the character of the land in question determine the degree and character of possession or occupancy necessary to satisfy the statutes. Sullivan v. Neel, 105 M 253, 73 P2d 206 (1937).

70-19-411. Occupancy and payment of taxes necessary to prove adverse possession.

Case Notes

Adequate Showing of Prescriptive Easement — No Showing of Permissive Use Absent Owner's Knowledge of Ownership: Bertelsen owned two parcels of property adjacent to a county road that he leased to a propane business beginning in 1987. The county road was subsequently abandoned, so all that separated Bertelsen's property from a federal highway was a triangular piece of land upon which the state Department of Transportation held an easement but which was otherwise undeveloped. The propane company constructed some improvements on the triangular parcel. While researching property in the area, Slauson discovered that the triangular parcel was owned by a third party, Edwards, who was not even aware that she owned it. Slauson acquired the property from Edwards and had the state discharge its easement and then approached Bertelsen and the propane company and offered to lease the parcel to Bertelsen. Bertelsen asserted the right to continued use of the property, and Slauson sued to enforce his property rights and to recover compensation and damages from Bertelsen. At trial, Bertelsen argued that he had acquired the property through adverse possession or that he had a prescriptive easement that allowed the propane company to continue using the property. The District Court found that Bertelsen had not paid taxes on the parcel, so there was no adverse possession, but held that Bertelsen and the propane company had established a prescriptive easement to maintain the improvements and to transact the company's business on the parcel. Slauson appealed, questioning whether the use was open, notorious, and adverse. The Supreme Court found that the company used the property for public access and as a parking lot, which adequately provided previous owner Edwards with notice of use. Having established open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and uninterrupted use for the statutorily required 5-year period, Bertelsen was entitled to the presumption of adverse use, and Slauson was required to prove that the use was permissive in order to overcome the presumption. Slauson could not prove permissive use because Edwards did not know that she owned the parcel and thus could not have granted permission for its use. Bertelsen therefore established a prescriptive easement, and the District Court was affirmed. Slauson v. Bertelsen Family Trust, 2006 MT 314, 335 M 43, 151 P3d 866 (2006).

Following the 2006 decision, a dispute arose between Slauson and the plumbing company that used the prescriptive easement. Slauson asserted that the company trespassed and used Slauson's property in unauthorized ways, and the company countersued for interference with the scope of the easement. The District Court granted the company $418.60 for landscaping that Slauson had removed and awarded Slauson $430 for costs of removing snow that the company piled on Slauson's property outside the easement. Both parties appealed, but the Supreme Court held that neither party established any error in the District Court's rulings and affirmed. Slauson v. Marozzo Plumb. & Heating, LLC, 2009 MT 333, 353 M 75, 219 P3d 509 (2009).

Incorrect Finding of Prescriptive Easement for Road and Residence — Moving of Residence Not Required: The District Court found that a prescriptive easement had been established for a road that strayed into an adjoining parcel and for a residence, the corner of which also extended into the adjoining parcel. The Supreme Court found the record full of contradictory assertions and findings, but noted that because the actual location of the road was concealed from the owner by way of maps and misrepresentations as to its true location, the record did not come close to establishing the elements of hostility or open and notorious use by clear and convincing evidence to establish a prescriptive easement for the road. Further, the owner of the residence conceded that the corner of the foundation and eaves encroached onto the adjoining parcel. Never having paid taxes on the land in question, the owner could not prevail on a claim of adverse possession to obtain title to the ground under the encroachment, so a finding of a prescriptive easement for the residence was also in error. However, because the property owner indicated at trial and in appeal briefs that he was willing to work something out regarding the encroachment, the Supreme Court concluded that to require removal of the encroachment would be extreme and declined to order that the residence be moved from its foundation. Gelderloos v. Duke, 2004 MT 94, 321 M 1, 88 P3d 814 (2004).

Limited Prescriptive Easement Established — Obvious Use Viewed as Open and Notorious: Albert filed an action to determine a claim for a prescriptive easement and quiet title to a road across Hastetter's property. Hastetter raised the affirmative defense of estoppel, claiming that Albert recognized Hastetter's legitimate title to the road by requesting an easement in an earlier letter and that the use was permissive and subject to Hastetter's consent. The trial court found that Albert had a prescriptive easement that was limited to the historical use of providing access and moving cattle to and from Albert's pasture. Hastetter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Albert established the elements for a prescriptive easement during the statutory

5-year period, and thus enjoyed the presumption that his use was adverse to Hastetter's interest. Although the servient landowner must know about and acquiesce to the user's claim of right, Montana law does not require that a prescriptive easement claimant verbally communicate a hostile intent. Open and notorious use can be established by showing that the condition of use was so obvious that the owner was not deceived and should have known of the claimant's use. Further, Albert had used the road to move cattle periodically since 1958 and had used the road to check the condition of fences and gates. Given the obvious use of the gates to control livestock, the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it refrained from scrutinizing the gates as evidence of permissive use. Albert v. Hastetter, 2002 MT 123, 310 M 82, 48 P3d 749 (2002), followed in Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Adverse Possession Claim Not Interrupted by Suit Seeking Establishment of Easement: Parker maintained an adverse possession claim for 5 years. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. (Tungsten), argued that its prior lawsuit interrupted the 5-year period and tolled the adverse possession action. In that suit, Tungsten requested that title to an easement over a portion of the property be quieted in its favor, and the suit remained pending for 1 ½ years during the adverse possession period. The Supreme Court agreed that the 5-year period is tolled during the pendency of an action to establish title to the property that conflicts with the title claimed by the adverse claimant. However, in this case, Tungsten did not challenge Parker's title to the property, but rather sought to establish an easement over it, so the prior action did not interrupt the 5-year adverse possession period. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Parker, 2001 MT 117, 305 M 329, 27 P3d 429 (2001), distinguishing Flathead Lumber Corp. v. Everett, 127 M 291, 263 P2d 376 (1953), Brown v. Cartwright, 163 M 139, 515 P2d 684 (1973), and Craddock v. Berryman, 198 M 155, 645 P2d 399 (1982).

Payment of Taxes Not Yet Due Not Required to Sustain Adverse Possession Claim: Pursuant to this section, a party claiming adverse possession must occupy the property continuously for 5 years and must have paid all legally levied and assessed taxes on the property. Parker received notice for property taxes due on October 31, 1997, but the taxes were not paid. The 5-year period of adverse possession commenced when Parker received the defective tax deeds on November 24, 1992, so the 5-year adverse possession period would have expired on November 24, 1997. The District Court held that because the 1997 taxes were assessed prior to November 24, 1997, and were unpaid, Parker's claim for adverse possession failed. Parker maintained that the adverse possession language in this section should be interpreted in combination with the statutory provisions for levy, notice, and payment of taxes in the tax code in Title 15. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to 15-10-305, real estate taxes are levied and assessed on the second Monday in October, while 15-16-102 provides that one-half of each year's property taxes is payable on or before November 30 and the other one-half is payable on or before May 31 of the following year. Therefore, although the 1997 taxes were levied prior to the expiration of the 5-year adverse possession period on November 25, 1997, the taxes were not delinquent until November 30, 1997, 1 week after the adverse possession period ended. The Supreme Court concluded that this section does not require the payment of taxes that are not yet due in order to sustain a claim of adverse possession. Thus, the District Court erred in concluding that Parker did not meet the requirements of this section, and the decision was reversed. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Parker, 2001 MT 117, 305 M 329, 27 P3d 429 (2001).

No Proof of Adverse Possession Absent Evidence of Property Taxes: The District Court found that plaintiffs had proved their claim to a disputed parcel of property and established an adverse possession claim, based in part on historical payment of property taxes. Defendant 360 Ranch contended that the District Court's conclusion that plaintiffs had paid property taxes on the property was error and that defendant's records showed that defendant had actually paid taxes on the parcel. Plaintiffs maintained that this section does not require payment of taxes on all property to which adverse possession is claimed, but only of all taxes legally levied and assessed. The tax assessments indicated that plaintiffs were assessed taxes on property east of "the road", but it was not clear which of two roads through the parcel was indicated. The Supreme Court held that because the record provided insufficient evidence to show that plaintiffs paid taxes on the property in question, the District Court's conclusion that plaintiffs had proved a claim for adverse possession was incorrect and reversible error. Tester v. Tester, 2000 MT 130, 300 M 5, 3 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 538 (2000).

Elements of Adverse Possession Not Shown: Once the true boundary line became known in 1971, defendants made only one demand for the property in dispute, which was rebuffed, and made no additional claim adverse to plaintiffs until 1983. Defendants never occupied the property prior to 1983, when they built a garage over the survey line, or paid taxes on the property. Plaintiffs brought an action for ejectment and rents in 1985. The District Court correctly held that defendants never occupied the property in a manner establishing adverse possession or an easement. Smithers v. Hagerman, 244 M 182, 797 P2d 177, 47 St. Rep. 1483 (1990).

No Interest Acquired in Property by Possessory Use Without Payment of Taxes:

Plaintiff may not claim title to land by adverse possession if he did not pay the taxes thereon. Zavarelli v. Might, 230 M 288, 749 P2d 524, 45 St. Rep. 211 (1988).

When the claim to property is founded upon an instrument, adverse possession requires the payment of taxes in addition to the other requirements of 70-19-408. Peterson v. Taylor, 226 M 400, 735 P2d 1120, 44 St. Rep. 754 (1987).

In 1978, Burlingames acquired a parcel of land adjoining Marjerrisons' land. A survey of Burlingames' property indicated that Marjerrisons' fence enclosed 5 acres of Burlingames' property. Since 1935, Marjerrisons had used the 5-acre parcel, along with their property, for cattle grazing, agriculture, and timber harvesting. Burlingames filed an action to quiet title. The District Court ruled that Burlingames possessed title to the 5-acre parcel but that Marjerrisons had acquired prescriptive easements for grazing, agricultural, and timber harvesting purposes. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, stating that since an easement is a nonpossessory interest and Marjerrisons had complete possession of the parcel for the statutory period, the only interest they could have acquired was full title. Treating Marjerrisons' claim as one for adverse possession, the court then ruled that although their use was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for a 5-year period, they had not paid property taxes on the disputed parcel as required by 70-19-411, and thus have acquired no interest in the property. Burlingame v. Marjerrison, 204 M 464, 665 P2d 1136, 40 St. Rep. 1005 (1983), followed in Luloff v. Blackburn, 274 M 64, 906 P2d 189, 52 St. Rep. 1124 (1995).

Statutory Requirements of Adverse Possession Met: Plaintiffs and their predecessors had possession of the property in question for over 50 years, evidenced by the fact that they improved and fenced the area. They paid all taxes legally assessed and levied against the property and acquired all claims of right, title, and interest by quitclaim deed. They were entitled to surface rights by adverse possession despite the fact that defendant may also have paid improperly assessed taxes on the same property. Perusich v. Meier, 229 M 458, 747 P2d 857, 44 St. Rep. 2132 (1987).

When Easement Rights Not Extinguished by Adverse Possession or Prescriptive Easement: Both adverse possession and prescriptive easement require proof of open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, and continuous possession or use for 5 years. The Supreme Court found insufficient evidence of extinguishment of easement rights by adverse possession or prescriptive right to a gate when: (1) there was not consistent testimony that appellant intended to eliminate all access to the easement; (2) he stated he would have given lot owners keys to the gate if they had wished to improve the access road; (3) there was limited entry around the gate by snowmobile, motorcycle, or on foot; (4) the gate was sometimes left open; (5) a declaration of restrictions remained on file stating the easement right; (6) "no trespassing" signs were not placed near the gate for at least 4 years after the gate was installed; and (7) appellant never affirmatively conveyed to the lot owners at any date certain his intention that they not go beyond the gate. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986).

Prescriptive Easement — Claimant Not Required to Pay Taxes: Payment of taxes is not required to establish a prescriptive easement. Murphy v. Atl. Richfield Co., 221 M 166, 717 P2d 558, 43 St. Rep. 717 (1986).

Doctrine of Agreed Boundary — No Boundary Proven: In 1920, a tenant of Christie's predecessor in interest built a fence which served as the boundary between two adjoining parcels now owned by Christie and Papke. In 1976, Christie had the property surveyed and learned that the fence had been improperly placed and that part of his property had been fenced out. Christie destroyed the 1920 fence and built a new one on the actual boundary line. Papke then destroyed that fence and built another where the 1920 fence had been. Under the doctrine of agreed boundary, Papke brought an action to quiet title in him to the portion in dispute. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's ruling that Papke had not established a claim under the agreed boundary doctrine because in order to establish an agreed boundary line, the evidence must show more than mere acquiescence and occupancy for the statutory period. The evidence must also show that there was uncertainty in the location of the line and that the coterminous owners fixed the line by express or implied agreement. The court ruled that Christie's long acquiescence in the existence of the 1920 fence did not create an implied agreement establishing a boundary. Christie v. Papke, 201 M 200, 657 P2d 88, 39 St. Rep. 2054 (1982), followed in Smithers v. Hagerman, 244 M 182, 797 P2d 177, 47 St. Rep. 1483 (1990).

Five-Year Occupancy Period — Suspension by Litigation: In 1954, the plaintiff moved to his ailing brother's ranch to care for his brother and the ranch. After his brother's death in 1969, a purported holographic will leaving the ranch to the plaintiff was contested by the deceased brother's personal representative. In 1978, the will was declared invalid. The plaintiff, who had remained in possession of the ranch during this time, then brought a quiet title action based on adverse possession. However, the period for adverse possession had not run because the personal representative had contested the plaintiff's right to the ranch through the litigation process, and during the pendency of that litigation, the period for adverse possession was suspended. Craddock v. Berryman, 198 M 155, 645 P2d 399, 39 St. Rep. 835 (1982).

Payment of Taxes When Dispute Settled by Agreement: When a boundary line has been agreed upon or fixed because of the uncertainty of the parties as to the true boundary and the deed description does not include the disputed land, the payment of taxes according to the deed description does constitute a payment upon such land for the purpose of satisfying this section. Nott v. Booke, 194 M 251, 633 P2d 678, 38 St. Rep. 1507 (1981), following Townsend v. Koukol, 148 M 1, 416 P2d 532 (1966).

Property Held Prior to Enactment of Tax Payment Requirement — No Adverse Possession Established: Plaintiffs were properly denied adverse possession of yard space on the basis of nonpayment of taxes even though no finding was made regarding whether the property was held prior to enactment of the statute requiring payment of taxes to establish adverse possession. The District Court's judgment is presumed correct, and the Supreme Court will draw every legitimate inference to support that presumption. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Payment of Taxes According to Survey Not Including Claimed Property: Petitioner does not have a valid claim of adverse possession of property where, even though petitioner paid taxes for 5 continuous years, taxes were assessed and paid according to a survey that did not include property petitioner was attempting to adversely claim. Huggans v. Weer, 189 M 334, 615 P2d 922 (1980).

Fact Issue as to Boundary Line Agreement in Adverse Possession Case — Summary Judgment Improper: In a case involving a contention of adverse possession, a genuine issue of material fact existed, namely, whether an agreement existed between the parties which extended the boundary line between their properties to include the disputed portion of land. Therefore, the motion for a summary judgment was granted in error. Nott v. Booke, 183 M 260, 598 P2d 1137 (1979).

Adverse Possession — Substantial Enclosure Sufficient: Adverse claimant need only prove his possession has been evidenced by a substantial enclosure and need not prove any further occupation, cultivation, or use. Plaintiff's assertion of undisputed possession from 1967-77 sufficiently establishes continuous and exclusive dominion over the property, and her uncontroverted payment of property taxes on the parcel during the same period satisfies 70-19-411. Swecker v. Dorn, 181 M 436, 593 P2d 1055 (1979).

From Permissive to Adverse Possession: Plaintiffs sought to convert permissive possession into adverse possession but failed to establish the requisite elements of exclusive and hostile possession as evidenced by admissions that they did not pay taxes year by year or object to the owners' occasional use of the property for fear of putting the latter on notice of plaintiffs' intent to acquire the land. Martin v. Randono, 175 M 321, 573 P2d 1156 (1978).

Payment of Taxes on Improvements: The court was correct in ruling that defendants in a quiet title action had not paid taxes on the disputed strip of property although they had paid taxes on improvements there. Therefore, the elements of adverse possession had not been established. Stephens v. Hurly, 172 M 269, 563 P2d 546 (1977), followed in Gue v. Olds, 245 M 117, 799 P2d 543, 47 St. Rep. 1906 (1990).

Taxes as Lease Payment: Where plaintiff's antecedent occupied property in question continuously for at least 15 years, enclosed and cultivated land, and paid all property taxes, this did not establish adverse possession where defendants were successors of title holders and payment of taxes was held to be agreed lease payment for use of land. Horacek v. Hudson, 167 M 394, 538 P2d 1019 (1975).

Payment of Back Taxes After Action Commenced: Since filing of a quiet title action freezes the respective rights of the parties at the time of the commencement of the action, party who sought to quiet title to land in himself was unable to establish his right to title by paying back taxes on land after commencement of the action where the adverse possessor had, prior to commencement of the action, occupied and claimed the land for a period of 5 years continuously and had paid all taxes assessed upon the land during that period. Brown v. Cartwright, 163 M 139, 515 P2d 684 (1973).

Sufficiency of Possession: In quiet title action, plaintiff's knowledge of adverse claimant's acceptance of consideration from power company for the granting of an easement, plaintiff's lack of dispute of ownership upon adverse claimant's offer to sell him the tract involved, adverse claimant's continued use of the tract, his employment of a surveyor and erection of a fence on the premises, and plaintiff's allowing adverse claimant to pay taxes on the tract for 5 years sufficiently established adverse claimant's possession during statutory period. Brown v. Cartwright 163 M 139, 515 P2d 684 (1973).

Burden of Proof: The burden of proving all the essential elements of adverse possession is upon the party alleging it, and he must prove that no taxes were levied or assessed against the land or that he has paid all taxes which were levied thereon. Townsend v. Koukol, 148 M 1, 416 P2d 532 (1966).

Essential Elements: To constitute adverse possession, the possession must be actual, feasible, exclusive, hostile, and continuous for the full period of years, and the party asserting adverse possession must have paid all the taxes levied and assessed upon the property during the statutory period. Townsend v. Koukol, 148 M 1, 416 P2d 532 (1966).

Easements:

Where the county maintained and paved a highway over the land of a private party for a period of more than 10 years, such county acquired an easement by prescription over the land and it was not necessary that the county pay taxes on the property during the statutory period. Brannon v. Lewis & Clark County, 143 M 200, 387 P2d 706 (1963).

The provision of this section that one claiming title to land by prescription must have paid taxes thereon during the statutory period has no application to the acquisition of such a title to an easement, an easement being merely appurtenant to the dominant estate and not taxable separate and apart from it. Ferguson v. Standley, 89 M 489, 300 P 245 (1931).

An easement for a ditch appurtenant to land is not subject to taxation independently of the land. Hence, the provision of this section has no application where the subject of the adverse possession alleged is a right-of-way for a ditch. Stetson v. Youngquist, 76 M 600, 248 P 196 (1926).

Prospective Operation:

This section does not apply to a claim perfected by adverse possession for the statutory period prior to 1917, the date of enactment of this section. Thibault v. Flynn, 133 M 461, 325 P2d 914 (1958).

This section is prospective and not retroactive in its operation. Verwolf v. Low Line Irrigation Co., 70 M 570, 227 P 68 (1924).

Burden of Proof: One claiming water rights by virtue of adverse possession has the burden of proving every element of the claim. Havre Irrigation Co. v. Majerus, 132 M 410, 318 P2d 1076 (1957).

Improvements Taxed: Where plaintiff and his predecessor had remained in open, exclusive, notorious, and adverse possession of an abandoned river channel for the statutory period and had paid taxes on improvements thereon but not on the real property because none had been assessed, it was sufficient for adverse possession. Helland v. Custer County, 127 M 23, 256 P2d 1085 (1953).

Contract as Basis for Possession: Person holding possession of land under contract for deed could not establish title by adverse possession. Hinton v. Staunton, 124 M 534, 228 P2d 461 (1951).

Nonpayment of Taxes:

This section requires the payment of taxes only if there are any to be paid. Barcus v. Galbreath, 122 M 537, 207 P2d 559 (1949).

Under this section, in no case of alleged adverse possession shall such possession be considered as established unless the claimant, his predecessor, and grantor shall have paid all taxes on the property for the statutory period. Hence, where an adverse claimant had not paid or offered to pay any taxes, the court properly found against him. Anderson v. Mace, 99 M 421, 45 P2d 771 (1935); Bearmouth Placer Co. v. Passerell, 73 M 306, 236 P 673 (1925).

Time of Payment of Taxes:

It is not necessary that the taxes be paid each year as assessed to meet the requirements of this section. Barcus v. Galbreath, 122 M 537, 207 P2d 559 (1949).

All that is required under this section is that the claimant shall have claimed the land for the statutory period continuously and that he has paid all taxes levied during that period, but it is not necessary that each year's taxes should have been paid when due. Laas v. All Persons, 121 M 43, 189 P2d 670 (1948).

Family Relationships: Where a son deeded residence property to his parents to create a life estate, they recording the deed and in the same transaction reconveying to him by deed which he held without recording, the actual title remained in him, and when they without his knowledge deeded the property to his sister who knew of the transaction, she paying the taxes, renting the premises to tenants, and collecting the rents, did not give notice to the son of a change of the sister's possession from a permissive to a hostile one to warrant the sister's grantee in claiming the property on the strength of the adverse possession of her grantor. Kelly v. Grainey, 113 M 520, 129 P2d 619 (1942).

Accretion Land: Where neither defendant nor his predecessor in interest had ever paid or offered to pay taxes on a tract of land formed by accretion and the subject of a suit to quiet title, he was in no position under this section to assert the defense of adverse possession. Smith v. Whitney, 105 M 523, 74 P2d 450 (1937).

Taxes Assessed to Owner: The fact that real property, title to which was claimed by adverse possession, had been at all times assessed to the record owner, the taxes, however, being paid by the adverse claimant during the entire statutory period, did not affect the right of the latter, in view of 15-8-201, declaring that a mistake in the name of the owner does not render the assessment invalid, and 15-8-201, to the effect that no assessment or collection of taxes is illegal on account of informality. Anderson v. Mace, 99 M 421, 45 P2d 771 (1935).

Water Rights: While a water right partakes of the nature of real estate, it is not such in any sense, and when considered alone and for the purpose of taxation it is personal property. Therefore this section, which deals with real property, has no application where title by prescription to a water right, independent of the land to which it was appurtenant, is asserted. Verwolf v. Low Line Irrigation Co., 70 M 570, 227 P 68 (1924).

Purpose of Section: This section was designed to prevent the lessee from questioning the title of his landlord. Johnstone v. Sanborn, 138 M 467, 358 P2d 399 (1960).

Waiver of Benefits: The benefits of this section may be waived by the terms of the lease. Johnstone v. Sanborn, 138 M 467, 358 P2d 399 (1960).

Lease Supporting Landlord's Claim: Evidence that claimant of land by adverse possession leased the land to others for grazing and allowed others to prospect for gold thereon and leased the land to a mining company supported his claim, for under this section possession by a tenant is the possession of his landlord. Sullivan v. Neel, 105 M 253, 73 P2d 206 (1937).

Redelivery to Landlord: Where it is shown that the relation of landlord and tenant has been terminated by redelivery of possession of a water right, it is error to give this section as an instruction for the reason that it applies only when the tenant is holding possession of property obtained under a lease. Talbott v. Butte City Water Co., 29 M 17, 73 P 1111 (1903).

Case Notes

Time for Action After Majority: Where the youngest of the heirs attained his majority more than the statutory period before action to establish title to land and they brought no action within that time, they could not defend such suit by party holding under tax deed and by adverse possession, on the ground that the heirs were minors at the time the tax deed was procured. Laas v. All Persons, 121 M 43, 189 P2d 670 (1948).

Minority of Heirs to Claim: Where the Statute of Limitations has commenced to run against a claim, its operation is not suspended by the subsequent death of the claimant because of the minority of his heirs. The Statute will continue to run notwithstanding such minority, and the heirs are bound to sue before the expiration of the statutory period just as decedent would have been had he lived. CHAPTER 20
TRANSFER OF REAL PROPERTY

Chapter Case Notes

Revision to Deed to Reflect Zoning Classification — Summary Judgment Proper: After the plaintiff purchased a condominium, the title company changed the deed to reflect the zoning classification of the building. The plaintiff argued that changing the deed made it impossible for her to secure financing for the property and sued the title company. The District Court granted the title company summary judgment, concluding that the zoning classification, not the change to the deed, had made traditional financing impossible. The plaintiff appealed and the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that while a deed contains a legal description of the property subject to transfer, it does not alter the zoning of the property. McCulley v. Amer. Land Title Co., 2013 MT 89, 369 Mont. 433, 300 P.3d 679.

Summary Judgment Properly Awarded — No Issue of Material Fact Demonstrated in Claim for Loss of Sale: A seller alleged that a potential sale fell through because the previous owners and their insurance company erroneously reported a claim for water damage, but the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in administering the proceedings or in awarding summary judgment when the seller failed to demonstrate any issue of fact about the reason the buy-sell was terminated and when the buy-sell expressly allowed the potential buyers to terminate the agreement. Ternes v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 2011 MT 156, 361 Mont. 129, 257 P.3d 352.

Specific Performance of Property Buyout Proper: In 1960, four couples entered a property agreement regarding the use and maintenance of a vacation cabin on Holter Lake. Each couple received an undivided one-fourth interest in the property. The agreement contained a provision allowing cotenants to buy out a couple's interest for $1,000. Over the years, all the parties died except Berger, who in 1991 tendered $1,334 to Baker's estate for her interest in the property, which by then constituted a one-third share. Because good consideration was part of the original agreement and the parties entered the agreement with free and equal bargaining powers, knowing that they could predecease the other couples and leave the surviving couple or spouse with full ownership of the property, specific performance of the original agreement was proper despite the fact that the property had increased in value significantly over time. Baker v. Berger, 265 M 21, 873 P2d 940, 51 St. Rep. 389 (1994).

Application of Procuring Cause Doctrine to Exclusive Listing Agreements: The procuring cause doctrine, which permits a broker to show that the broker's part of the contract was performed and that the principal reaped a benefit from the efforts, is not confined to consideration of nonexclusive listing agreements. It applies in all situations unless the parties agree otherwise in the listing contract. Lane v. Smith, 255 M 218, 841 P2d 1143, 49 St. Rep. 974 (1992), clarifying Flinders v. Gilbert, 141 M 442, 378 P2d 385 (1963), and followed in Hall & Hall, Inc. v. Hyde, 264 M 190, 870 P2d 1362, 51 St. Rep. 257 (1994).

Contract for Deed — No Right of Buyer to Suspend Performance for Failure of Consideration Not Attributable to Sellers: Petty made the downpayment on a contract for deed that called for conveyance of part of the property to Petty upon downpayment. Petty assumed the property was unzoned. The contract stated that Petty would use the property for a recreational vehicle park and that if after Petty's due diligence Petty could not obtain zoning approval within 30 months after the contract was signed, the purchase price would be reduced by $25,000. The bank that held a preexisting mortgage on the property told Petty it would not release the property until he brought current his payments to the sellers and the bank. Over 30 months passed from the time of the downpayment until the sellers filed suit, during which time Petty made no payments to the sellers or the bank and did not obtain zoning approval. Petty did not request a deed until 27 months after making the downpayment. Petty was not entitled to suspend performance for failure of delivery of the deed and transfer of the property because he was accountable, not the sellers. The award of damages to the sellers was affirmed. Liddle v. Petty, 249 M 442, 816 P2d 1066, 48 St. Rep. 779 (1991), followed in Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000).

Contract for Deed — Time for Providing Marketable Title: Unless the contract provides otherwise, a seller need not provide marketable title to real property sold under a contract for deed until the date set for final payment and tender of the deed. Liddle v. Petty, 249 M 442, 816 P2d 1066, 48 St. Rep. 779 (1991).

Default in Payment as Material Breach of Contract for Deed: If a party materially breaches a contract for deed, the injured party is entitled to suspend his performance. Default in payment of any installment is a distinct breach and gives the seller the right to declare a forfeiture. Determination of whether the breach is material is a question of fact. Liddle v. Petty, 249 M 442, 816 P2d 1066, 48 St. Rep. 779 (1991), distinguished in Eschenbacher v. Anderson, 2001 MT 206, 306 M 321, 34 P3d 87 (2001).

Suspension of Performance Upon Material Breach of Contract: As part of a contract for sale of real property, seller agreed to obtain release of mortgage within 1 year, and failure to do so constituted a material breach entitling buyer to suspend performance. Sjoberg v. Kravik, 233 M 33, 759 P2d 966, 45 St. Rep. 1270 (1988).

Consent to Contractual Assignment Refused — Breach of Contract: A contract for sale of real property provided that assignment could be accomplished only with written consent of the seller and that such consent could not be unreasonably withheld. The District Court properly found that the contract was breached by the seller's failure to provide a sufficient reason for refusing to consent to an assignment and that seller was therefore responsible for damages. Erban v. Monforton, 227 M 531, 740 P2d 677, 44 St. Rep. 1290 (1987).

Illegally Acknowledged Assignment Document: Since a broker altered an assignment document after it was signed by taping the acknowledgment paragraph to the document and illegally presenting it to a notary for an acknowledgment and the notary illegally acknowledged the purchasers' signatures without requiring their presence, the assignment was invalid and could not convey a security interest in the contract for deed to secure performance of the promissory note signed by the purchasers. Hoefer v. Wilckens, 210 M 218, 684 P2d 468, 41 St. Rep. 1019 (1984).

Bank's Fiduciary Duty to Customers It Gives Financial Advice — Real Estate Sales: Wife, whose husband had recently died, signed a contract for a deed to her ranch with Dittman, who signed as "trustee". There were two other purchasers, who did not sign: a person to whom, according to the evidence, wife would not have knowingly sold and the marketing officer of the bank used by the wife and husband for some 24 years. Wife was unfamiliar with real estate and financial affairs and relied upon the advice of various bank officers with regard to the sale of the ranch. This put the bank in a prima facie fiduciary relationship as to the wife. The relationship and its attendant duties extended to the advising officers in their dealings with the wife in regard to sale of the ranch. The marketing officer thus had a duty to fully inform the wife and protect her interests. This duty he breached, and the breach amounted to constructive fraud, where evidence showed that: (1) the contract price and terms were disadvantageous to the wife; (2) the true purchasers were not disclosed to her either by the contract or the marketing officer;

(3) the purchasers intended to and began to subdivide and sell the ranch, though the marketing officer knew wife apparently did not wish this, having refused an earlier offer to purchase with right to subdivide; (4) the marketing officer had extensive financial interests involving loans to him from his bank, and an audit of the bank recommended that in view of this his lending authority should be eliminated or curtailed; and (5) the lower court was unimpressed with the way in which wife's attorney in the negotiations represented her interests. The lower court properly ordered the contract for deed rescinded. Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188, 41 St. Rep. 286 (1984).

Specific Performance of Contract for Deed: Plaintiffs, purchasers under contract for deed, tendered the balance due under the contract. Sellers were unable to provide clear and merchantable title. The Supreme Court held plaintiffs entitled to summary judgment granting specific performance against the assignee of a previous buyer. Pond v. Lindell, 194 M 240, 632 P2d 1107, 38 St. Rep. 1276 (1981).

Real Estate Listing — Capability of Performance — Sale by Cotenant: Plaintiff and defendant entered into a real estate listing agreement. Defendant was a cotenant in the property with her husband. The defendant contended that listing contained an erroneous asking price, did not adequately describe the property to be sold, and was signed only by the defendant. A cotenant in a joint tenancy has a right and ability to sell her interest. Defendant was free to act and capable of acting without her husband, even though the husband knew at all times that she had put the property up for sale. Because she was capable of entering and performing contracts and was legally responsible for her acts, the contract was fully capable of being performed. Barrett v. Ballard, 191 M 39, 622 P2d 180, 37 St. Rep. 2038 (1980).

Sale Without Authority: Because it holds land in public trust and it failed to comply with statutory requirements for land sales, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) was without authority to make the sale of land. The deed derived from the sale without authority was held void. Therefore, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) cannot be estopped from denying the validity of the deed. Norman v. St., 182 M 439, 597 P2d 715 (1979).

Method of Transfer

Part Case Notes

Limitation on Tax-Free Exchange Clause: Defendants contacted plaintiff to sell their ranch. The agreement allowed for a multiple listing. An interested buyer was found. Later a tax-free property exchange clause was inserted in the contract. Defendants located property in Arizona, but the buyer would not purchase it for exchange because of a defect in defendants' title. The Arizona property was sold before defendants cleared their title. Defendants eventually sold their property to the buyer. Defendants refused to pay the realtor commission, and a suit was filed. Defendants counterclaimed against the buyer for refusing to purchase the Arizona property pursuant to the exchange clause. The District Court refused defendants' offered instructions on alleged breach of the exchange clause. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court, saying that as drafted the exchange clause placed an unreasonable burden on the buyer. the buyer could have been forced to exchange for an unmerchantable title. The court held the exchange clause in the contract invalid. The court did not reject the use of exchange clauses in real estate contracts but said they should be conditioned so as to require merchantability to be proven before the buyer must obligate himself to purchase exchange property. Adams v. Cheney, 203 M 187, 661 P2d 434, 40 St. Rep. 383 (1983).

Part Attorney General's Opinions

Use of Quitclaim Deed When Grantor Does Not Own Entire Block of Property: When a grantor proposes to transfer a quarter-section block of property (160 acres) that has within its boundaries two smaller parcels (10 and 15 acres in size) that the grantor does not own, he is not barred from using a quitclaim deed transferring the entire block, but that action is inadvisable and subject to potential liability. 42 A.G. Op. 121 (1988).

Case Notes

Substantial Evidence of Validity of Deed — No Conversion of Funds: The plaintiff brought suit against the defendants alleging that the defendants' claim to the land in question was based on a falsified notarized signature on a warranty deed and that the defendants had wrongfully converted funds from the plaintiff's bank account to make payments for the property. During the bench trial, the parties provided conflicting testimony about the circumstances surrounding the deed, and the District Court concluded that without clear and convincing evidence of forgery, the plaintiff was unable to overcome the presumption of the notarized document's authenticity. The District Court also determined that the plaintiff had delivered the checks used by the defendants to make payments for the property, which defeated his argument that the defendants had wrongfully exerted dominion over the funds in that bank account. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the decision, noting that the District Court was in the best position to evaluate the credibility of the witnesses and to give the testimony its proper weight. Substantial evidence supported the court's finding that the deed from the plaintiff to the defendants was valid and properly notarized. Likewise, the District Court resolved the conflicting accounts regarding the funds when it found the defendants' testimony more credible. Willis v. Fertterer, 2013 MT 282, 372 Mont. 108, 310 P.3d 544.

Representation of Contract to Another Party — Use of Statute of Frauds to Later Deny Contract in Real Estate Transaction Precluded: The Kluvers and McRaes commenced a lawsuit alleging that several power companies had contaminated their ground water. A mediation session between the parties ended with an e-mail detailing a memorandum of understanding for a settlement agreement from the Kluvers' attorney to an attorney for the power companies, including the transfer of real estate between the parties. Although Karson Kluver expressed relief to the McRaes that the case was over, the Kluvers later claimed that the settlement agreement was tentative and invalid. Although there was no signed writing to show the Kluvers assented to the agreement prepared by their attorney at the mediation conference, because Karson Kluver later represented that a settlement had been reached to another party, he could not invoke the statute of frauds to deny the agreement. Kluver v. PPL Montana, LLC, 2012 MT 321, 368 Mont. 101, 293 P.3d 817.

Purchase of Property — Statute of Frauds — Claim Regarding Interest in Property Dismissed: Plaintiffs contended they had an oral agreement to lease and purchase real property from the defendants and demanded a portion of insurance proceeds paid to the defendants after a fire destroyed the real property at issue. The parties stipulated that there was no written contract between them to enter a lease for a period longer than 1 year or to purchase the property. Because the statute of frauds requires both leases for a period longer than 1 year and agreements to purchase the property to be in writing, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendants. Hinebauch v. McRae, 2011 MT 270, 362 Mont. 358, 264 P.3d 1098.

Building Restriction Line on Subdivision Plat Creating Negative Easement Precluding Building in Restricted Portion of Lot: Defendant constructed a garage that was located on both sides of a building restriction line marked on a subdivision plat. Plaintiffs sought removal of the portion of the garage that crossed the building restriction line. Although defendant was aware of the building restriction line when purchasing the subdivision property, defendant contended that an easement was not created because the deed failed to have express language of the grantor's request to create an easement and because the deed did not identify the dominant and servient tenement or give the servient tenement knowledge of the building restriction line's use and necessity. The District Court found that defendant was aware of the building restriction by virtue of the recorded plat and a special exception to the title policy obtained upon purchase of the property, and defendant was ordered to remove the garage. Defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The description of the building restriction line on the subdivision plat clearly created a negative easement in plaintiffs' favor, restricting any building on a portion of defendant's lot, so the District Court did not err in prohibiting defendant from building in that area. Plaintiffs' easement was thus enforceable and removal of the garage was proper. Conway v. Miller, 2010 MT 103, 356 Mont. 231, 232 P.3d 390, following Halverson v. Turner, 268 Mont. 168, 885 P.2d 1285 (1994), and Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 Mont. 52, 993 P.2d 688, and distinguishing Blazer v. Wall, 2008 MT 145, 343 Mont. 173, 183 P.3d 84.

No Improper Reliance on Extrinsic Evidence in Finding of Valid and Enforceable Express 60-Foot Easement for Subdivision: Defendant acquired certain property after an express easement across the property was created by the former owner. Defendant refused to allow the building of an access road across the property, contending that the easement agreement was invalid on several grounds. The District Court examined the agreement and concluded that the easement was valid and enforceable and granted summary judgment for plaintiffs. On appeal, defendant asserted that the District Court erroneously relied on facts outside the agreement, making summary judgment inappropriate, but the Supreme Court affirmed. For purposes of interpreting a writing granting an interest in real property, evidence of the surrounding circumstances, including the situation of the property and the context of the parties' agreement, may be shown so that the judge is placed in the position of those whose language the judge is to interpret. However, to comply with the statute of frauds and the recording system, the writing itself must ultimately stand on its own and meet the formal requirements for granting a property interest. In this case, the District Court was allowed to consider various facts not contained in the easement agreement for purposes of understanding the situation, but the court's analysis of the easement's validity apparently was limited to the face of the agreement, so the court did not erroneously rely on extrinsic facts. The easement agreement satisfied the formal requirements for expressly granting an easement and created a valid 60-foot emergency public access and utility easement that was enforceable against defendant. Additionally, the District Court properly concluded that because there was no dominant tenement, the easement was in gross and could be used by members of the public to travel between the subdivision and the public highway for emergency purposes and to provide utility services. There being no questions of material fact, summary judgment was proper. Broadwater Dev., LLC v. Nelson, 2009 MT 317, 352 M 401, 219 P3d 492 (2009), distinguishing Blazer v. Wall, 2008 MT 145, 343 M 173, 183 P3d 84 (2008). See also Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982 (1985).

Ratification of Void Deeds — Authority of Agent to Convey Property — Title Properly Quieted: Defendant third party raised three challenges to a District Court's conclusion that deeds voided by forgery during transfer were nevertheless ratified by subsequent actions of the parties and contended that the court erred by quieting title to plaintiff. The first argument dealt with the fact that one of the parties never received proper written authority to convey the property to plaintiff, so ratification was voided under the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court noted that an agreement to sell an interest in property must be in writing and that an agent's authority to sell property must also be in writing. However, the agency relationship may arise either by precedent authorization or by subsequent ratification. In this case, the warranty deeds constituted subsequent written authority for conveyance of the property, so the statute of frauds was not violated for want of written authorization. The second argument was that the criteria for ratification were not satisfied, but after examining the chain of title, the Supreme Court found that the personal actions of the principal ratified the deed and that the criteria for ratification were satisfied. The third argument was that defendant was prejudiced as a third party by ratification, but that argument did not prevail because defendant could not have been prejudiced since defendant's interest in the property was invalid both prior to and after ratification and defendant could have become aware of the void deeds by conducting a title check and avoiding the problem. Lastly, title was properly quieted in plaintiff because defendants with prior interests in the property stipulated that they no longer claimed any right, title, or interest in the property. Plaintiff's deed was superior because it was the first to be recorded and had been ratified, and plaintiff was therefore entitled to have quiet title to the property. The District Court was affirmed. Erler v. Creative Fin. & Inv., LLC, 2009 MT 36, 349 M 207, 203 P3d 744 (2009). See also U.S. v. Heinszen, 206 US 370 (1907), Audit Serv., Inc. v. Lack of Standing of Stranger to Contract to Bring Action to Enforce Contract: A stranger to a contract who is not an intended third-party beneficiary lacks standing to bring an action based on a violation of the contract, including compliance with the statute of frauds. Palmer v. Bahm, 2006 MT 29, 331 M 105, 128 P3d 1031 (2006), followed in Dick Anderson Constr., Inc. v. Monroe Constr. Co., LLC, 2009 MT 416, 353 M 534, 221 P3d 675 (2009). See also Ludwig v. Spoklie, 280 M 315, 930 P2d 56 (1996).

Use of Shared Access Easement Following Amendment of Plat — Statute of Frauds Inapplicable: Two neighbors signed an agreement in the form of an amended plat to relocate a common boundary and share an access easement. Both parties used the access road after executing the agreement, so part performance occurred. A dispute arose, and the District Court concluded that the amended plat constituted an instrument in writing sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. On appeal, the parties questioned whether the memorialized amended plat was a sufficient instrument in writing to comply with the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court did not reach the question, concluding that because the parties performed their obligations under the agreement and because part performance occurred at least for a time, the statute of frauds could not defeat the parties' agreement to share the access easement. Although the District Court did not reach its conclusion on the same grounds, the conclusion was nevertheless correct, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Morton v. Lanier, 2002 MT 214, 311 M 301, 55 P3d 380 (2002).

Statement of Present Intent to Perform or Not Perform Not Considered Contract — Lease Not Altered by Gratuitous Promise: Defendants had a 99-year lease on a ranch owned by Earl. The lease provided that in case of need, it was subject to recall on demand by Earl. When Earl had to be placed in a nursing home without the assets to bear her expenses and needed to liquidate the property in order to qualify for federal benefits, defendants were notified that the lease was being terminated. Defendants objected, citing a letter from Earl purporting to gift to them all interest in the ranch. However, to be a gift, a transfer of property must be irrevocable, complete, without adequate or full consideration, and unmistakably intended to divest the donor of title, dominion, and control over the property. The District Court concluded that sufficient need existed to terminate the lease and denied defendants' motion to resolve any effect that the letter had on the original lease. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the letter was a mere statement by Earl of present intent to perform or not perform an act in the future and that such a gratuitous promise did not constitute a valid written modification of the original lease. Earl v. Beager, 2001 MT 44, 304 M 258, 20 P3d 788 (2001).

Deed Left Blank as to Legal Description Void to Convey Title Unless Authority to Complete Deed Given in Writing: McCormick executed two deeds, one warranty and the other quitclaim, and gave them to Brevig. The deeds were both dated and notarized, but McCormick did not fill in the legal description of the property to be conveyed. Brevig later took the deeds to his attorney and had the legal descriptions completed and subsequently filed the deeds without notifying McCormick. The District Court concluded that the warranty deed was invalid because Brevig did not have written permission from McCormick to fill in the legal descriptions. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to the statute of frauds, a conveyance of an interest in real property must be in writing, and it would be a violation of the statute to permit modification of a deed after delivery solely upon oral authority. Therefore, the authority to complete the legal description of property to be conveyed in a deed must be given in writing by the grantor if the legal description is blank. McCormick v. Brevig, 1999 MT 86, 294 M 144, 980 P2d 603, 56 St. Rep. 355 (1999). See also Boyd Lumber Co. v. Mills, 92 SE 534 (Ga. 1917), Jones v. Coulter, 243 P 487 (Calif. Dist. Ct. App. 1925), Barth v. Barth, 143 P2d 542 (Wash. 1943), and Dahlberg v. Johnson's Estate, 211 P2d 764 (Idaho 1949).

Statute of Frauds and Statute of Limitations Not Applicable to Constructive Trust: The husband argued that the statute of frauds and the statute of limitations for agreements not in writing barred his wife's claim to marital property. However, in this case, a constructive trust should have been created for the property. Constructive trusts arise by operation of law, so this section did not bar the wife's claim because under 70-20-102, this section may not be construed to prevent creation of a trust. Further, because the wife was not attempting to directly enforce a verbal agreement, the requirement in 27-2-202 that an action based on a contract, account, or promise not founded on an instrument in writing be brought within 5 years also did not apply. In re Marriage of Moss, 1999 MT 62, 293 M 500, 977 P2d 322, 56 St. Rep. 257 (1999).

Possession of Real Property Insufficient to Grant Title Against Good Faith Purchasers — No Adverse Possession Shown: In 1989, the Luloffs bought part of a ranch from the Manweilers by a deed that excluded "Tract B". The Luloffs mistakenly assumed that Tract B was the part of the ranch that had been occupied by the Blackburns for approximately 4 years. When the Luloffs later discovered that Tract B was another part of the ranch, they brought an action to have the Blackburns evicted, and the District Court granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was correctly granted because there was no contract between the Manweilers and the Blackburns satisfying the statute of frauds for the sale of the property to the Blackburns. The Supreme Court held that the Blackburns' mere possession was insufficient against the Luloffs, who had purchased the ranch as bona fide purchasers in good faith, because they were without notice of any claim of title by the Blackburns. The Supreme Court noted that the Blackburns could not make a claim of title because they had mere possession, which did not satisfy the requirements for adverse possession because the Blackburns had not paid taxes upon the property. Luloff v. Blackburn, 274 M 64, 906 P2d 189, 52 St. Rep. 1124 (1995).

Transfer of Property Without Written Document Constituting Inheritance — Included in Marital Estate: Husband appealed from a District Court decision that distributed as part of the marital estate to the wife a home built for the couple by the husband's father, who had died without executing a written document transferring the property to the couple. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision, holding that without a writing signed by the father to effect the inter vivos transfer to the couple, the home was inherited by the husband through the father's will. The inherited property was properly included as part of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Isaak, 257 M 176, 848 P2d 1014, 50 St. Rep. 219 (1993), overruled, with regard to a District Court's ability to distribute inheritance property without strict application of the factors in 40-4-202, in In re Marriage of Smith, 264 M 306, 871 P2d 884, 51 St. Rep. 277 (1994), and followed in Luloff v. Blackburn, 274 M 64, 906 P2d 189, 52 St. Rep. 1124 (1995). Smith was expressly overruled in part in In re Marriage of Funk, 2012 MT 14, 363 Mont. 352, 270 P.3d 39, holding that there are no restrictions on when a District Court may distribute preacquired, gifted, or inherited property as long as the court equitably apportions the parties' property in accordance with 40-4-202.

Negative Easement Based on Oral Agreement — Statute of Frauds Inapplicable: Appellants claimed an oral agreement made in 1967 subjected land known as the Base Area Chalet to a negative easement that restricted the property to noncommercial activities. The Supreme Court found that a written 1971 agreement only contracted to convey property described as "sellers' land" which had been "subject to ski easement"; however, the chalet property was conveyed away by appellants in 1967 and had never been subject to the ski easement. Since the Base Area Chalet did not belong to "sellers" and was not subject to the easement in 1971, the 1971 agreement had no effect on the chalet property. For the same reason, the 1971 agreement could not satisfy the Statute of Frauds for any alleged oral agreement that would create a negative easement on the chalet property. Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

Oral Contract for Purchase of House — Part Performance — Statute of Frauds Inapplicable — No Refund to Purchasers on Default: Defendant agreed to sell home to friends upon a $10,000 downpayment and assumption of defendant's loan. Plaintiffs did not qualify for assumption, so defendant prepared lease for plaintiffs' signature. They refused to sign because it was not a contract for deed. Defendant allowed plaintiffs to take occupancy, and they made sporadic payments for 4 years. Defendant's patience waned when the bank exercised acceleration provision for delinquencies. Plaintiffs sued for refund of payments. The court found an oral contract for deed. The Statute of Frauds was inapplicable because defendant was, at all times, willing to effect sale and transfer of the home. He was not required to refund plaintiffs' payments. Since no lease was ever signed and no rental relationship created, landlord and tenant law was inapplicable. Hayes v. Hartelius, 215 M 391, 697 P2d 1349, 42 St. Rep. 457 (1985).

Validity of Typewritten Signature — Real Estate Contract: The seller of a tract of land negotiated with and made offers to one party, then withdrew the offers and negotiated with a second party. The second party made the seller an offer which the seller accepted by telegram. The first party sued the seller who then made an agreement with the first party and sent a notice of rescission to the second party. The second party then sued both the first party and the seller. On appeal, the narrow issue was whether the typewritten name at the bottom of the telegram of acceptance of a buyer's offer was a sufficient subscription to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Because the seller must have intended to authenticate her written name on the telegram to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, the court looked to the wording of the acceptance. It found the words "Please consider this my written acceptance . . ." on the telegram, words suggested by the buyer, indicative of a mutual interest to be bound. Hillstrom v. Gosnay, 188 M 388, 614 P2d 466 (1980).

Adverse Possession — Parol Grant: A parol grant of real property can serve as a foundation for a claim of title by adverse possession, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. Swecker v. Dorn, 181 M 436, 593 P2d 1055 (1979).

Conveyance Required for Trade or Exchange:

An agreement whereby lessee sold his liquor license for $9,000 plus a promise by the buyer that he would assume the lease on property in which lessee conducted his cafe satisfied the requirements of this section in that the agreement was in writing and signed by the lessee. Kintner v. Harr, 146 M 461, 408 P2d 487 (1965).

A trade or exchange of lands is not effective under this section unless deeds of conveyance pass between the parties. Price v. W. Life Ins. Co., 115 M 509, 146 P2d 165 (1944).

Parol Evidence of Signature: Where quitclaim deed was typewritten on printed form which contained lines for the signatures and the acknowledgment but the paper showed no evidence that any name had ever been signed thereto or any notary's seal attached, it could not be shown by parol evidence that the deed was actually signed. Miller v. Miller, 121 M 55, 190 P2d 72 (1948).

Deeding to Another, and Holding Unrecorded Reconveyance, Life Estate Not Created: Where a son deeded residence property to his parents for purpose of giving them a life estate therein and they at the same time reconveyed property to him, the first deed being recorded but not the second until many years after when litigation over ownership arose, the two instruments constituted a single transaction with record title in the parents and legal title in the son, and since a life estate can be created under this section only in writing or by operation of law, such an estate was not thereby created. Kelly v. Grainey, 113 M 520, 129 P2d 619 (1942).

Easements: An easement is an interest in land that cannot be created, granted, or transferred except by operation of law, by an instrument in writing, or by prescription. Mannix v. Powell County, 75 M 202, 243 P 568 (1926); Smith v. Denniff, 24 M 20, 60 P 398 (1900).

Statute of Frauds:

Performance, partial or complete, under an invalid oral assignment of a lease for a term exceeding 1 year, takes the case out of the Statute and renders the tenant liable according to its terms. Wells v. Waddell, 59 M 436, 196 P 1000 (1921).

The Statute of Frauds is not intended to cloak fraud but to prevent it, its aim being to avoid the assertion of claims which from their nature should be evidenced by an instrument in writing signed by the party to be charged or his duly authorized agent. Wells v. Waddell, 59 M 436, 196 P 1000 (1921).

Case Notes

No Improper Reliance on Extrinsic Evidence in Finding of Valid and Enforceable Express 60-Foot Easement for Subdivision: Defendant acquired certain property after an express easement across the property was created by the former owner. Defendant refused to allow the building of an access road across the property, contending that the easement agreement was invalid on several grounds. The District Court examined the agreement and concluded that the easement was valid and enforceable and granted summary judgment for plaintiffs. On appeal, defendant asserted that the District Court erroneously relied on facts outside the agreement, making summary judgment inappropriate, but the Supreme Court affirmed. For purposes of interpreting a writing granting an interest in real property, evidence of the surrounding circumstances, including the situation of the property and the context of the parties' agreement, may be shown so that the judge is placed in the position of those whose language the judge is to interpret. However, to comply with the statute of frauds and the recording system, the writing itself must ultimately stand on its own and meet the formal requirements for granting a property interest. In this case, the District Court was allowed to consider various facts not contained in the easement agreement for purposes of understanding the situation, but the court's analysis of the easement's validity apparently was limited to the face of the agreement, so the court did not erroneously rely on extrinsic facts. The easement agreement satisfied the formal requirements for expressly granting an easement and created a valid 60-foot emergency public access and utility easement that was enforceable against defendant. Additionally, the District Court properly concluded that because there was no dominant tenement, the easement was in gross and could be used by members of the public to travel between the subdivision and the public highway for emergency purposes and to provide utility services. There being no questions of material fact, summary judgment was proper. Broadwater Dev., LLC v. Nelson, 2009 MT 317, 352 M 401, 219 P3d 492 (2009), distinguishing Blazer v. Wall, 2008 MT 145, 343 M 173, 183 P3d 84 (2008). See also Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982 (1985).

Use of Shared Access Easement Following Amendment of Plat — Statute of Frauds Inapplicable: Two neighbors signed an agreement in the form of an amended plat to relocate a common boundary and share an access easement. Both parties used the access road after executing the agreement, so part performance occurred. A dispute arose, and the District Court concluded that the amended plat constituted an instrument in writing sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. On appeal, the parties questioned whether the memorialized amended plat was a sufficient instrument in writing to comply with the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court did not reach the question, concluding that because the parties performed their obligations under the agreement and because part performance occurred at least for a time, the statute of frauds could not defeat the parties' agreement to share the access easement. Although the District Court did not reach its conclusion on the same grounds, the conclusion was nevertheless correct, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Morton v. Lanier, 2002 MT 214, 311 M 301, 55 P3d 380 (2002).

Statute of Frauds and Statute of Limitations Not Applicable to Constructive Trust: The husband argued that the statute of frauds and the statute of limitations for agreements not in writing barred his wife's claim to marital property. However, in this case, a constructive trust should have been created for the property. Constructive trusts arise by operation of law, so 70-20-101 did not bar the wife's claim because under this section, 70-20-101 may not be construed to prevent creation of a trust. Further, because the wife was not attempting to directly enforce a verbal agreement, the requirement in 27-2-202 that an action based on a contract, account, or promise not founded on an instrument in writing be brought within 5 years also did not apply. In re Marriage of Moss, 1999 MT 62, 293 M 500, 977 P2d 322, 56 St. Rep. 257 (1999).

Negative Easement Based on Oral Agreement — Statute of Frauds Inapplicable: Appellants claimed an oral agreement made in 1967 subjected land known as the Base Area Chalet to a negative easement that restricted the property to noncommercial activities. The Supreme Court found that a written 1971 agreement only contracted to convey property described as "sellers' land" which had been "subject to ski easement"; however, the chalet property was conveyed away by appellants in 1967 and had never been subject to the ski easement. Since the Base Area Chalet did not belong to "sellers" and was not subject to the easement in 1971, the 1971 agreement had no effect on the chalet property. For the same reason, the 1971 agreement could not satisfy the Statute of Frauds for any alleged oral agreement that would create a negative easement on the chalet property. Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

Contract to Make Will Denied — No Part Performance Exception: An oral agreement whereby respondents agreed to move to decedent's ranch and lease it from decedent for remainder of his lifetime and decedent agreed to give an undivided one-half interest in the ranch to them at his death and provide them with the right to buy the other one-half interest at the appraised value as of the date of his death was an oral agreement for disposition of decedent's property at death. The District Court committed error and contradicted its own findings of fact when it concluded that the oral agreement was for the leasing, sale, and purchase of real property. The agreement does not conform to a single particular of the requirements provided by statute for the enforcement of such an agreement. The language of 72-2-105 (renumbered 72-2-534) is unambiguous and does not provide for a part performance exception to the Statute of Frauds. Orlando v. Prewett, 218 M 5, 705 P2d 593, 42 St. Rep. 1328 (1985), followed, with regard to the holding that oral contracts to make a devise are barred, in In re Estate of Braaten, 2004 MT 213, 322 M 364, 96 P3d 1125 (2004). A mechanics' lien filed against real property that was the subject of the 1985 quiet title action against the same parties who filed the lien was held void under the doctrine of res judicata in Orlando v. Prewett, 236 M 478, 771 P2d 111, 46 St. Rep. 520 (1989).

Partial Performance of Grantor Support Agreement: Over a period of years, grantor, a 95-year-old woman, had deeded various parcels of land near her home to several relatives. She filed a complaint against grantees, alleging that the land had been conveyed in return for their promise to support her and that they had failed to live up to their agreement. As relief, grantor sought either damages or, in the event that the agreement was determined to be unenforceable under the Statute of Frauds, return of the land. Grantees denied the existence of any agreement and pleaded the Statute of Limitations as a defense. The District Court granted grantees' motion for summary judgment and further ruled that grantor's claims were barred by the Statute of Limitations. The Supreme Court reversed in part, ruling that grantor was entitled to present evidence on two of her claims because Montana law provides for the enforcement of a grantor support agreement, that there was a genuine issue of fact as to whether or not such an agreement had been made, and that the trial court's ruling on the Statute of Limitations was premature. Additionally, the court ruled that grantor had no claim for return of the land since, if an agreement existed, grantor's partial performance of that agreement rendered the Statute of Frauds inapplicable, and if no agreement existed, grantor was not entitled to any relief. Sands v. Nestegard, 198 M 421, 646 P2d 1189, 39 St. Rep. 1101 (1982).

Constructive Trust: A constructive trust in third parties' improvements placed upon property, created by a previous landowner's conduct and imposed upon a purchaser as successor in interest and as an equitable lien in favor of the third parties, is a trust as contemplated by this section, thus allowing the admission of parol evidence. Rase v. Castle Mtn. Ranch, Inc., 193 M 209, 631 P2d 680, 38 St. Rep. 992 (1981).

Trust by Operation of Law: A trust created by operation of law does not come under the Statute of Frauds and may be proved by parol evidence. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 181 M 87, 592 P2d 485 (1979).

Building Restriction Line on Subdivision Plat Creating Negative Easement Precluding Building in Restricted Portion of Lot: Defendant constructed a garage that was located on both sides of a building restriction line marked on a subdivision plat. Plaintiffs sought removal of the portion of the garage that crossed the building restriction line. Although defendant was aware of the building restriction line when purchasing the subdivision property, defendant contended that an easement was not created because the deed failed to have express language of the grantor's request to create an easement and because the deed did not identify the dominant and servient tenement or give the servient tenement knowledge of the building restriction line's use and necessity. The District Court found that defendant was aware of the building restriction by virtue of the recorded plat and a special exception to the title policy obtained upon purchase of the property, and defendant was ordered to remove the garage. Defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The description of the building restriction line on the subdivision plat clearly created a negative easement in plaintiffs' favor, restricting any building on a portion of defendant's lot, so the District Court did not err in prohibiting defendant from building in that area. Plaintiffs' easement was thus enforceable and removal of the garage was proper. Conway v. Miller, 2010 MT 103, 356 Mont. 231, 232 P.3d 390, following Halverson v. Turner, 268 Mont. 168, 885 P.2d 1285 (1994), and Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 Mont. 52, 993 P.2d 688, and distinguishing Blazer v. Potential Access Rights Merged With Deeds and Extinguished — Applicability of Contract Law Doctrine of Merger: Prior to Gehring's consent to sell 360 acres to APS Corporation (APS) in 1970, they entered an agreement that included a provision on access rights, whereby Gehring purported to grant future purchasers access to other land owned by Gehring for certain recreational purposes. After being told by the Gehring Ranch Corporation that they would not be allowed access to Gehring's land for recreation, the successors in interest to APS sought to enforce the agreement, alleging that they had been improperly excluded from the land and that the agreement created an easement over Gehring's land. The District Court granted summary judgment for the Gehring Ranch Corporation, noting that the agreement did not identify Gehring's other lands upon which an easement was purportedly created. The court also held that any agreement prior to execution of the deeds was merged with the deeds and that because the deeds transferring title did not provide for access, any access rights promised in the agreement were lost. The decision was appealed, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The clause in the agreement was part of a larger agreement to transfer property in the future, and Gehring did not intend to create an easement, but at most intended to provide for potential access privileges if certain conditions, such as creation of a property owners' association and adoption of rules governing the use of the recreational privileges, were met. The Supreme Court cited Urquhart v. Teller, 1998 MT 119, 288 M 497, 958 P2d 714 (1998), in applying the contract law doctrine of merger, holding that the deeds contained all the rights of the parties and that because no access privileges were mentioned in the deeds, any potential access rights referred to in the agreement merged with the deeds and were lost. Richman v. Gehring Ranch Corp., 2001 MT 293, 307 M 443, 37 P3d 732 (2001).

Easement by Grant Upheld on Basis of Stipulation and Circumstantial Evidence: Tanners and others purchased property on Flathead Lake. Tanners and the others obtained access to their property by driving on roads located on Daly's property to the north. When Daly erected a fence across the roads and blocked access to their property, Tanners and the others brought suit, alleging that they had purchased with their properties an easement by grant for the use of the roads. The Supreme Court held that inasmuch as Daly had stipulated to the admissibility of the chain of title documents without foundation testimony and had not objected to introduction of the exhibits at trial, Daly could not now refute the authenticity of the deeds of Tanners' predecessors by arguing that the deeds bore no signatures or notary seal. The Supreme Court also noted that Daly testified that she knew of the roads at the time that she purchased her property and could therefore not claim to be a bona fide purchaser without notice. The Supreme Court also held that even though there was no direct evidence that the present roads were the ones referred to in the 1932 deed, there was circumstantial evidence in the form of testimony from two elderly witnesses that the same roads existed in the mid-1930s and were well traveled at that time, and Daly's attorney had admitted in correspondence that road A existed in 1932. Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

Inadequate Description — Sale of Two of Twelve Acres and Description of Only Twelve: A deed purported to transfer 2 acres of a 12.63-acre tract but described the whole 12.63 acres and did not describe the 2 acres to be transferred. There was no evidence extrinsic to the deed identifying which 2 acres were intended to be transferred. The deed was void for uncertainty. Therefore, a subsequent deed transferring the 2 acres to a third person was also void. McDonald v. Jones, 258 M 211, 852 P2d 588, 50 St. Rep. 502 (1993). Following the ruling in this case, the District Court took judicial notice of the underlying case and granted summary judgment to Insured Titles, Inc., after determining that the exclusions of the insurance policy applied and that McDonald knowingly altered the legal description of the property, thus defeating coverage under the policy. The grant of summary judgment was affirmed in Insured Titles, Inc. v. McDonald, 275 M 111, 911 P2d 209, 53 St. Rep. 61 (1996).

Creation of Easement by Grant: A written water well agreement conveying a right to use water satisfied the requirements of this section since it identified the grantor and the grantee, adequately described what was conveyed, had language of conveyance, and was signed. Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982, 42 St. Rep. 863 (1985).

Life Estate Created by Words "Rent-Free for the Rest of Life": In an appeal from a summary judgment decree that a life estate in an apartment of the defendant-mother was void, the Supreme Court held that the words "entitled to remain in possession thereof, rent-free, for the rest of her life" are clear and unambiguous as an indication that the mother holds a life estate as against a buyer of the apartment building. This is particularly true given that in the contract creating the life estate, provisions clearly show an intention to create such a life estate by providing for all of the details of such estate, including the matter of repairs, replacement, taxation, utilities, and other provisions. Harbeck v. Orr, 192 M 243, 627 P2d 1217, 38 St. Rep. 668 (1981).

Where Further Recitals Made Document a Contract of Sale: Document which opened with the recital "hereby sells, grants and conveys" the property, for and in consideration of the purchase price, but contained the further recital "to be paid as hereinafter set forth", was to be interpreted in the same manner as an ordinary contract for purpose of determining whether it was a grant or a contract of sale. Norwegian Lutheran Church of America v. Armstrong, 112 M 528, 118 P2d 380 (1941).

Sufficiency of Description: Under the rule that where a simple name serves to identify property conveyed or where reference is made to something which, on being consulted, indicates the property sold, the description is sufficient, a memorandum of agreement of conveyance describing the land as the "Burke homestead at Big Sandy" sufficiently described property to support a decree of specific performance. Shaw v. MacNamara & Marlow, Inc. 85 M 389, 278 P 836 (1929).

Case Notes

Death of Partner — Disposition of Property Held Jointly by Partners: Robert and William, brothers, opened a joint checking account in 1947, paid all ranch expenses through the account, put all ranch income in the account, and equally split net profits. All cattle were branded with either of two brands, each of which was registered in the name of "William Palmer or Robert Palmer". The brothers were also joint tenants in a commodity brokerage account. The Supreme Court held that the cattle and both accounts were partnership property not held in joint tenancy and remained so upon Robert's death. Thus, they did not pass to William as the surviving joint tenant; rather, they remained in the partnership for the purpose of winding up the partnership and paying its liabilities, after which William must account to Robert's survivor, his widow, for Robert's share of the partnership. By its very nature, partnership property must be treated differently than property of individuals, including property held by individuals as joint tenants but who are not in partnership. This rule applies regardless of the formal legal manner in which the property is held. This is a rule of equity developed over hundreds of years and codified in the Uniform Partnership Act. In re Estate of Palmer, 218 M 285, 708 P2d 242, 42 St. Rep. 1585 (1985), followed in Fiedler v. Fiedler, 266 M 133, 879 P2d 675, 51 St. Rep. 691 (1994).

Real Estate Listing — Capability of Performance — Sale by Cotenant: Plaintiff and defendant entered into a real estate listing agreement. Defendant was a cotenant in the property with her husband. The defendant contended that listing contained an erroneous asking price, did not adequately describe the property to be sold, and was signed only by the defendant. A cotenant in a joint tenancy has a right and ability to sell her interest. Defendant was free to act and capable of acting without her husband, even though the husband knew at all times that she had put the property up for sale. Because she was capable of entering and performing contracts and was legally responsible for her acts, the contract was fully capable of being performed. Barrett v. Ballard, 191 M 39, 622 P2d 180, 37 St. Rep. 2038 (1980).

Common-Law Rule: The common-law rule that deeds executed by an agent or attorney in fact should be executed in the name of the principal has not been abrogated in this state. The rule, in part, finds expression in this section. Shackleton v. Allen Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church, 25 M 421, 65 P 428 (1901).

70-20-110. Redelivery or cancellation of grant — no retransfer.

Case Notes

Placement of Deed in Safety Deposit Box: Grantee's testimony that he placed deed delivered to him by grantor in her safety deposit box, to which he had a key, with the idea that she would probably feel better in case she wanted to change her mind later on, could not explain away her act of making delivery of it or indicate that she did not intend to make delivery. The fact that after delivery deed was given back to grantor or was found in her deposit box after her death was not material, since this section provides that mere delivery of a grant of real property to the grantor does not operate to retransfer the title. Walsh v. Kennedy, 115 M 551, 147 P2d 425 (1944).

Husband and Wife: After delivery of deed from husband to wife, mere fact that grantor regained possession of instrument and thereafter retained it did not retransfer title to him. Sylvain v. Page, 84 M 424, 276 P 16, 63 ALR 528 (1929).

2009 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 43 in (1) in two places before reference to smoke detectors inserted reference to carbon monoxide detectors; in (2) near beginning inserted reference to buyer's agent; in (3) inserted definition of carbon monoxide detector; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Chapter 56 made section gender neutral. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Erroneous Codification Instruction: Section 2, Ch. 30, L. 1991, provided that sec. 1, Ch. 30, L. 1991, be codified as an integral part of Title 30, ch. 11, part 2; Title 30, ch. 11, part 2, only applies to the transfer of personal property, therefore the Code Commissioner has codified sec. 1, Ch. 30, L. 1991, under Title 70, ch. 20, part 1.

Case Notes

Deed Outside Chain of Title — No Easement Absent Notice That Property Servient to Access Stated in Deed: Nelson's deed for a subdivision lot stated that Nelson would have a roadway easement for access to another lot bordered by Flathead Lake. That lot was subsequently purchased by Barlow. Barlow's deed contained no reference to an easement or reference to Nelson's deed stating that Nelson had a roadway easement to access Barlow's lot. When Barlow began building a cabin on his lot, Nelson sued to enjoin construction, alleging that Nelson's deed entitled him to cross Barlow's lot to access Flathead Lake. The District Court granted Barlow's motion for judgment on the pleadings and dismissed Nelson's claim, so Nelson appealed. The Supreme Court first noted that the language in Nelson's deed was ambiguous and concluded that the District Court erred in holding otherwise. However, the District Court correctly noted that Barlow was not a party to Nelson's deed, and because no similar access provision existed in Barlow's deed, Barlow was not bound by Nelson's deed. Nelson's deed was outside Barlow's chain of title. Even though Nelson's deed was recorded several years prior to Barlow's purchase, that fact was insufficient to impose an easement on Barlow's lot. Barlow was not required to examine the chain of title to Nelson's land to discover an alleged easement across the Barlow property for the benefit of Nelson, and the purported grant of lake access in Nelson's deed did not put Barlow on notice that his property was servient to an easement. The District Court was affirmed. Nelson v. Barlow, 2008 MT 68, 342 M 93, 179 P3d 529 (2008), overruled in part in Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154. See also Rigney v. Swingley, 112 M 104, 113 P2d 344 (1941), and Goeres v. Lindey's, Inc., 190 M 172, 619 P2d 1194 (1980).

Sufficiency of Notice of Default: A contract for deed did not require that notice be dated in any certain way, except to specify that service was complete on deposit in a post office. Appellant asserted that the notice of default was invalid because the copy he received was undated. However, he acknowledged receiving the notice by certified mail, and there was nothing to indicate prejudice to him by a failure to date it. LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740, 45 St. Rep. 1531 (1988).

Contract for Deed Not Same Legal Concept as Mortgage: Although certain similarities exist between the two, a contract for deed is not the same legal concept as a mortgage under Montana law. Therefore, a contract for deed need not be treated as a mortgage for purposes of foreclosure. Aveco Properties, Inc. v. Nicholson, 229 M 417, 747 P2d 1358, 44 St. Rep. 2098 (1987). See also Burgess v. Shiplet, 230 M 387, 750 P2d 460, 45 St. Rep. 293 (1988).

Gross Negligence in Failure to Perform — No Relief From Forfeiture: The seller of real property is entitled to cancellation of a contract for deed. The purchasers are not entitled to any equitable relief from forfeiture because they were grossly negligent in failing to perform in accordance with the terms and provisions of the contract. Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Attorney General's Opinions

Purchaser Under Contract for Deed Not "Owner" for Purpose of Attaching Tax Lien: One who is purchasing land under a contract for deed is not the "owner" of the property for purposes of 15-16-402(1). Personal property taxes assessed to the purchaser would not constitute a lien on the land because title remains in the seller until the contract is finally executed. 42 A.G. Op. 27 (1987), citing A.G. Op. 440 (1920-22).

Case Notes

Priority of Calls Not Absolute: The priority of calls is not absolute. A lower-ranked call may prevail over a high-ranked call if the circumstances demonstrate the lower-ranked call constitutes more reliable evidence of a boundary's true location. A boundary dispute should be resolved to reflect the original intent of the parties to the conveyance, and preference should be given to the determination that best fits the majority of the recovered evidence. Larsen v. Richardson, 2011 MT 195, 361 Mont. 344, 260 P.3d 103.

Deed Within Chain of Title Not Considered Extrinsic Evidence: In a declaratory action involving a boundary dispute, the District Court properly examined the chains of title to the parties' properties in determining the boundary. A deed contained in the chain of title, which provided the first description of the disputed boundary, was not extrinsic evidence and, therefore, was properly considered. Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Ambiguous Deeds of Conveyance — Intent of Parties Properly Considered: A dispute arose in a quiet title action based on subdivision surveys that differed from the original government survey. The District Court held that the property belonged to defendants, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Inconsistencies between the original plat and the location of the subdivision surveyor's monuments created an ambiguity. References to quarter section lines and quarter corners in the original survey were definite and ascertainable, and the subdivision surveyor's improperly placed monuments were considered false particulars frustrating the conveyance. The District Court properly applied Brown's Boundary Control and Legal Principles (4th Ed. 1995) to determine that the subdivision surveyor's monuments conflicted with the government's original monument and correctly considered the intent of the parties in interpreting the surveys and conveyances. Further, the original plat was part of the deeds of conveyance in defendants' chain of title, so the District Court correctly allowed the certificate of dedication into evidence. Olson v. Jude, 2003 MT 186, 316 M 438, 73 P3d 809 (2003).

Use of Original Survey for Reference — Proper Determination of Tract Boundary: A dispute arose in a quiet title action based on subdivision surveys that differed from the original government survey. When surveyors use corner sections and lines to base measurements and plot tracts, it is essential that they properly identify and authenticate the original monument. Original corners established by a government survey, if those corners can be found, or places where they were originally established, if those places can be definitely determined, are conclusive without regard to whether they were located correctly or not and must remain the true corners or monuments by which to determine the boundaries. The footsteps of the original surveyor should be followed, so far as discoverable on the ground by monuments, and it is immaterial if the lines run by the original surveyor are incorrect. Olson v. Jude, 2003 MT 186, 316 M 438, 73 P3d 809 (2003). See also Vaught v. McClymond, 116 M 542, 155 P2d 612 (1945), and Helehan v. Ueland, 223 M 228, 725 P2d 1192 (1986).

Examination of Chain of Title and Circumstances of Making of Deed in Establishing Legal Boundary: Plaintiff sought to quiet title in a strip of land in Bridger Canyon, alleging that a state highway formed the western boundary of the property rather than an older county road. The District Court agreed. The Supreme Court examined plaintiff's chain of title back to 1903 and found that a deed conveying the property in 1951 unambiguously established the county road as the western boundary of the property. An unambiguous deed must be interpreted according to its written language, without resort to extrinsic evidence of the grantor's intent. Further, under 1-4-102, the Supreme Court may examine the circumstances under which a deed was made. Here, the section plats and state highway records, coupled with the plain language of the deed, established that the old county road was the legal western boundary, so the District Court was reversed. Tester v. Tester, 2000 MT 130, 300 M 5, 3 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 538 (2000), followed in Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Specification of Acreage Quantities by Approximation Indicative of Sale of Property in Gross: Language in a deed conveyed property described as "about 7 acres" and "approximately 7 acres". The actual legal description of the property was omitted from the chain of title beginning in 1950 and was not included in any subsequent deed, although the property was resold two more times. In a quiet title action, the District Court ruled that the size of the parcel was unimportant because the property had been conveyed in gross, with each party taking the risk of the actual quantity varying, so the exact quantity was immaterial. The Supreme Court agreed. Although words of estimation alone do not necessarily create a sale in gross, the plain meaning of the words "about" and "approximately" indicated that the parties did not intend to convey a precise number of acres, and the specification of acreage quantities, when qualified by words of approximation, rendered the acreage quantities merely descriptive rather than material to the agreement, thus indicating a sale in gross. Because the conveyance was a sale in gross, the variation in acreage was not grounds for rescission, nor did the acreage discrepancies in the relevant conveyances raise a genuine issue of material fact precluding summary judgment because the grantor's acreage-consistent description of the property boundaries controlled over the inconsistent acreage estimates in the conveyances. Cedar Lane Ranch, Inc. v. Lundberg, 1999 MT 299, 297 M 145, 991 P2d 440, 56 St. Rep. 1207 (1999), following Hardin v. Hill, 149 M 68, 423 P2d 309 (1967), and Turner v. Ferrin, 232 M 146, 757 P2d 335, 45 St. Rep. 946 (1988).

Ambiguity Eliminated by Application of Statutory Rules of Construction: Bartmess argued that the lower court erred in granting Ferriter a summary judgment in a quiet title case because the language in the deed in question was ambiguous as to boundaries. The Supreme Court held that although there was some ambiguity in the deed's language, the lower court had properly concluded that statutory rules of construction when applied dispelled any ambiguity and therefore summary judgment was proper. Ferriter v. Bartmess, 281 M 100, 931 P2d 709, 54 St. Rep. 79 (1997).

Inadequate Description — Sale of Two of Twelve Acres and Description of Only Twelve: A deed purported to transfer 2 acres of a 12.63-acre tract but described the whole 12.63 acres and did not describe the 2 acres to be transferred. There was no evidence extrinsic to the deed identifying which 2 acres were intended to be transferred. The deed was void for uncertainty. Therefore, a subsequent deed transferring the 2 acres to a third person was also void. McDonald v. Jones, 258 M 211, 852 P2d 588, 50 St. Rep. 502 (1993). Following the ruling in this case, the District Court took judicial notice of the underlying case and granted summary judgment to Insured Titles, Inc., after determining that the exclusions of the insurance policy applied and that McDonald knowingly altered the legal description of the property, thus defeating coverage under the policy. The grant of summary judgment was affirmed in Insured Titles, Inc. v. McDonald, 275 M 111, 911 P2d 209, 53 St. Rep. 61 (1996).

Monuments Paramount:

One surveyor located an artificial monument as opposed to the placement made by a second surveyor through his "compass rule". The District Court did not err in relying on the evidence of the surveyor who found the monument because the general rule is that courses and distances, similar to location by "compass rule", must yield to natural or artificial monuments. Goodover v. Lindey's, Inc., 232 M 302, 757 P2d 1290, 45 St. Rep. 1068 (1988). Lindey's, Inc.'s attempt to quiet title to a newly disputed parcel was held to be res judicata, the matter having already been adjudged and affirmed in this case, in Lindey's, Inc. v. Goodover, 264 M 449, 872 P2d 764, 51 St. Rep. 359 (1994).

A resurvey which paid no attention to artificial monuments relied upon in deeds and used by the owners of the property could not disrupt or change existing property lines. Buckley v. Laird, 158 M 483, 493 P2d 1070 (1972).

In a boundary dispute, if there is a conflict between permanent and visible or ascertained boundaries or monuments and measurements, the boundaries or monuments are controlling under this section. Nemitz v. Reckards, 98 M 229, 38 P2d 980 (1934), explained in Grosfield v. Johnson, 98 M 412, 39 P2d 660 (1935).

In an action in ejectment in which the paramount question was whether a former owner of the land had removed a government quarter section corner monument so as to include an adjoining tract within his own, in the absence of testimony contradictory of that of plaintiff's that it never had been moved, the rights of the parties were governed by the monuments upon the ground. Kurth v. Le Jeune, 83 M 100, 269 P 408 (1928).

When there is a conflict between monuments and courses and distances, the latter must yield to the former. Myrick v. Peet, 56 M 13, 180 P 574 (1919).

Factors Indicative of Sale in Gross — Slight Acreage Variation Immaterial: Plaintiffs purchased "96.73 acres, more or less", but later sought rescission after finding the amount of land was 6% less than 96.73 acres. Although the words "more or less" did not alone create a sale in gross, the phrase was sufficient, when combined with the observation of the property by plaintiffs, the sale price as a negotiated lump sum, and the lack of a statement of price per acre, to create a sale in gross. A slight disparity in acreage would justify equitable relief if the sale was by the acre, but a great disparity must exist to authorize relief if the sale is in gross. Turner v. Ferrin, 232 M 146, 757 P2d 335, 45 St. Rep. 946 (1988), followed in Cedar Lane Ranch, Inc. v. Lundberg, 1999 MT 299, 297 M 145, 991 P2d 440, 56 St. Rep. 1207 (1999).

Sufficiency of Property Description — "All Property" as Sufficiently Definite: An oil company asserted it held a valid lease to a mineral interest derived from a lengthy chain of title originating in 1922. As the interest changed hands through the years, the property was variously described in deeds purporting to transfer "any and all interest . . . to real estate . . . in the State of Montana", "every species of real property . . . which Grantor owned or claimed to own within Toole County, Montana", "all and singular of the undesignated and unknown assets . . . wherever situated within the state of Montana", or by no legal description at all. In affirming the sufficiency of description in the chain of title, the Supreme Court cited the majority rule outlined in 23 Am. Jur. 2d Deeds 59 that a deed describing land as "all" the grantor's property or "all" his property in a certain locality is not defective or void for want of a sufficient description. Somont Oil Co., Inc. v. Nutter, 228 M 467, 743 P2d 1016, 44 St. Rep. 1685 (1987).

Property Description Adequate: The property description in a deed is adequate if it contains sufficient information to permit the identification of the property to the exclusion of all others. Peterson v. Taylor, 226 M 400, 735 P2d 1120, 44 St. Rep. 754 (1987).

Sale "In Gross" — Risk of Quantity Varying: A purchaser is not entitled to a reduction in purchase price or reformation of a contract for deed containing an error in the legal description when the sale is in gross. A contract of sale by the tract or in gross is one wherein boundaries are specified, but quantity is not specified, or if specified, the existence of the exact quantity specified is not material. Each party takes the risk of the actual quantity varying. Parcel v. Myers, 214 M 225, 697 P2d 92, 42 St. Rep. 352 (1985). See also Cedar Lane Ranch, Inc. v. Lundberg, 1999 MT 299, 297 M 145, 991 P2d 440, 56 St. Rep. 1207 (1999).

Tract Boundary Ascertainable on Three Sides — Fence on Fourth Side Not a Boundary Monument: The tract in question was bounded on the south by a river, on the west by a highway (both in property description), and by a fence uncontroverted as a monument on the north. This section requires the application of measurement along the north (fence) and south (river) to establish the eastern boundary. A fence near the eastern boundary was not a monument because it was not referenced in the property description and its placement (as it jogged and zigzagged around trees) was not evidence of intent to be a boundary; it was not a boundary line but merely a fence "that separated one side of the fence from the other". Pilgrim v. Kuipers, 209 M 177, 679 P2d 787, 41 St. Rep. 625 (1984).

Duties of Resurveyor: It was not error for resurveyor to ignore a present county road when surveying for "wagon road" monument designated in 1899 and 1903 deeds because in surveying a tract of land according to a former plat or survey, the surveyor's only duty is to relocate, upon best evidence obtainable, the courses and lines at the same place where originally located by the first surveyor on the ground, as the object of a resurvey is to furnish proof of the location of the lost lines or monuments, not to dispute the correctness of or to control the original survey. Johnson v. Jarrett, 169 M 408, 548 P2d 144 (1976).

Improper Description: Where there was improper land description in easement, trial court properly ordered survey of land in question so intent of parties to easement could be effectuated. Missoula v. Rose, 164 M 90, 519 P2d 146 (1974).

Order of Survey: Trial court properly ordered survey of land allegedly subject to an easement where the description of the land subject to the easement was defective but could be determined pursuant to subsections (2) and (6) of this section. Missoula v. Rose, 164 M 90, 519 P2d 146 (1974).

Attorney General's Opinions

When Map or Narrative Legal Description Defines District Boundaries: When presented with the question of whether a narrative legal description contained in a zoning petition or an accompanying map that is inconsistent with the legal description defines the boundaries of a proposed planning and zoning district, the Attorney General applied this section, which contains the rules for construing the description of real property being conveyed when construction is doubtful and no other sufficient method exists by which to determine the description. In this case, if signatures were obtained on the petition as a result of reference to the map, the map defines the district boundaries; however, if the map was created from the narrative legal description contained in the zoning petition, the narrative controls. The planning and zoning commission shall ascertain the exact facts through the public hearing process provided for in 76-2-101. 48 A.G. Op. 5 (1999).

GENERAL

Pleadings Varying Terms of Agreement: In action by sellers of hotel business, including personal property, against buyers for balance due on contract, answer setting up affirmative defenses, which pleaded mistake and invalidity based on representations and warranties of seller concerning the leasing of the premises on which the buyers relied, was sufficiently clear to comply with this section as against motion to strike on the ground that the allegations tended to vary the terms of a written contract. Swecker v. Badura, 141 M 329, 377 P2d 752 (1963).

Extension of Time to Pay — Oral Evidence Not Admissible: Where escrow agreement in connection with sale of land required $700 to be paid by a certain date, oral evidence could not be received to show that there had been an extension of time. Herman v. Herman, 123 M 39, 207 P2d 1155 (1949), distinguished in Dalakow v. Geery, 132 M 457, 318 P2d 253 (1957).

Illiteracy of Party: Generally, in the absence of fraud or mistake, where the terms of the contract have been reduced to writing by the parties, it must be considered as containing all the terms of the agreement, and parol evidence cannot be resorted to, to alter the written contract, and usually plaintiff's inability to read does not alter the rule. Ikovich v. Silver Bow Motor Car Co., 117 M 268, 157 P2d 785 (1945).

Correspondence Constituting Contract: An instruction in an action for breach of contract based largely upon correspondence between the parties, that all papers or other instruments made by the parties at the same time and relating to the same subject matter should be considered by the jury as constituting one contract if the preponderance of the evidence so showed, was proper. W. J. Lake & Co. v. Mont. Horse Prod. Co., 109 M 434, 97 P2d 590 (1939).

Corroborative Evidence: Where a contract whereunder the buyer was to receive one-half the freight refunds was established by a properly admitted copy of one of a number of letters, the fact that copies of the others may have been improperly admitted would not require a reversal of the judgment for plaintiff, where they were only corroborative, in the absence of substantial evidence refuting existence of the contract. W. J. Lake & Co. v. Mont. Horse Prod. Co., 109 M 434, 97 P2d 590 (1939).

Waiver of Rule by Introduction of Evidence: Where one party to an action on a written contract is permitted to introduce evidence of preceding oral negotiations leading up to the making of the writing, thus varying its terms, his opponent may properly give oral testimony as to the same matter, over an objection that the testimony offered tends to contradict the writing. Peterson v. Nelson, 77 M 539, 252 P 368 (1926).

Endorsement on Instrument: In an action on a promissory note which had never been previously negotiated and was overdue when plaintiff acquired it by assignment, so that he was not a holder in due course, parol evidence was admissible to show that defendants with plaintiff's knowledge had endorsed the note with the understanding that each was doing so as representative of an association and not in his personal capacity. Anderson v. Border, 75 M 516, 244 P 494 (1926), distinguished in Swan v. Le Clair, 77 M 422, 251 P 155 (1926).

Guaranty Agreement: An offer of proof by defendant directors, who had guaranteed payment of an account as represented by a note of the corporation, that it was their understanding that the guaranty was to be considered merely an assurance on their part that plaintiff's account was recognized as a valid claim against the company, was properly rejected under this section as contradicting the terms of the writing. Schauer v. Morgan, 67 M 455, 216 P 347 (1923).

Oral Extension of Time Inadmissible: Where, in an action by a building contractor to foreclose a mechanics' lien, defendant set up a counterclaim for damages for failure to complete the building within the time stipulated but the contract provided that no additional time should be allowed unless request therefor was presented in writing to the architect and plaintiff failed to make such request though the owner had directed alterations, he was precluded from asserting that before signing the contract defendant had orally agreed that the penalty therein provided for would not be enforced. (Mechanics' lien provisions repealed, 1987—see construction liens, Title 71, ch. 3, part 5.) Leigland v. Rundle Land & Abstract Co., 64 M 154, 208 P 1075 (1922).

Warehouse Receipts: Warehouse receipts for grain stored in an elevator issued under the provisions of the Grain Elevator Act constituted binding contracts between the bailor and bailee which could not be varied or contradicted by parol testimony, the effect of which was to show that the transaction amounted to a sale and not a bailment. State ex rel. Broadwater Farms Co. v. Broadwater Elevator Co., 61 M 215, 201 P 687 (1921).

Purpose of Contract: Where a contract supplemental to one made for the sale of lands recited that it was made for the purpose of granting the buyer additional time in which to make payment, it precluded the idea that it was made for any other purpose, and in the absence of allegation of mistake or other imperfection, the presumption is conclusive that the writing contained all the engagements then made by the parties. Crawford v. Pierce, 56 M 371, 185 P 315 (1919).

Stranger as Party to Action: The rule that parol evidence cannot be introduced to vary, enlarge, or contradict its terms, except where a mistake or imperfection therein is put in issue by the pleadings or when the validity of the contract is the fact in dispute, does not apply in a controversy between a party to the contract and a stranger. As against such stranger, a party may assert that the agreement was other or different in any respect from that which the writing expresses. Reed v. Lewis & Clark County, 55 M 412, 178 P 177 (1919), distinguished in Habets v. Swanson, 2000 MT 367, 303 M 410, 16 P3d 1035 57 St. Rep. 1567 (2000).

Evidence Whether Third Party Is or Is Not Bound: When there was nothing in a contract signed by a third party which showed a consideration affecting him or inducing him to become a party to it or an intent on his part to be bound as surety for or joint promisor with one of the parties efficiently bound, parol evidence may not be resorted to for the purpose of furnishing the basis of an inference that he was or was not bound. The Henry O. Shepard Co. v. Freeman, 40 M 144, 105 P 484 (1909).

Common-Law Rule: This section merely declares the common-law rule. Riddell v. Peck-Williamson Heating & Ventilating Co., 27 M 44, 69 P 241 (1902); Gaffney Mercantile Co. v. Hopkins, 21 M 13, 52 P 561 (1898).

VALIDITY OF AGREEMENT AT ISSUE

Estimate Not Intended as an Offer: Parol evidence was admissible to show that a contractor's letter estimating the cost of a building was not intended as an offer to build at that price but rather that the parties intended a cost plus contract. Hammond v. Knievel, 141 M 433, 378 P2d 388 (1963).

Effective Only if FHA Loan Approved: Parol evidence could be received to show that a lease agreement was intended to be effective only if the FHA approved a loan to the lessee, since this question went to the validity of the agreement itself. Platt v. Clark, 141 M 376, 378 P2d 235 (1963).

Evidence Admissible to Show Invalidity of Contract: Where, in an action to recover damages for breach of a contract of lease for failure of the lessee to gain possession, a defense of the lessor was that the contract was entered into with the express understanding that it should not become effective until and unless a tenant in possession would relinquish possession or could be ousted, parol testimony was admissible to show that what appeared to be a valid and binding contract was in reality not such, under the exception provided for in this section, that where the validity of the agreement is the fact in issue, such testimony may be admitted. Smith v. Fergus County, 98 M 377, 39 P2d 193 (1934).

Purpose of Writing: The rule excluding parol testimony to contradict or vary a written instrument does not forbid inquiry into the object the parties had in executing, delivering, and receiving instruments made the basis of an action for breach of grain buying contracts, which defendant claimed were to be used merely as memoranda to complete plaintiff's office files and not to hold him personally liable for delivery of the grain. McCaull-Dinsmore Co. v. Stevens, 59 M 206, 194 P 213 (1921), distinguished in Hosch v. Howe, 92 M 405, 16 P2d 699 (1932).

COMPLETENESS OF WRITING

Merger of Prior Agreement Into Deed — No Presumption of Surrender of Covenants: Appellants contended that since there was no express language in deeds recorded in 1972 that the parties intended to merge the restrictive provisions of a 1971 agreement into the deeds, the commercial use restrictions in the 1971 agreement still applied, regardless of being left out of the deeds. The Supreme Court, recalling its decision in Story v. Montforton, 112 M 24, 113 P2d 507 (1941), noted that "whether or not there has been a merger depends on the intention of the parties". The court applied this principle in Thisted v. Country Club Tower Corp., 146 M 87, 405 P2d 432 (1965), quoting Reid v. Sykes, 27 Ohio St. 285: ". . . evidence of that intention may exist in or out of the deed. There is no presumption that a party, in giving or accepting a deed, intends to give up the covenants of which the deed is not a performance or satisfaction." In the present case, the court found strong evidence that the deeds contained all of the restrictions on the lands that were intended by the parties and that the contract had merged in the deeds. Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

Writing to Control: Statements made by various agency personnel in regard to continued use of defendant's office building were not admissible under parol evidence rule to alter or contradict terms of express written contract since such statements and assurances did not come within any recognized exception to rule and since defendant admitted that he knew written contract would be controlling. U.S. v. Willard E. Fraser Co., 308 F. Supp. 557 (D.C. Mont. 1970), affirmed in 459 F2d 483 (9th Cir. 1972).

General Rule as to Completeness: In determining whether parol testimony varied a written contract, a satisfactory test is: Was the matter testified to mentioned, covered, or dealt with in the writing? If it was, then presumably the writing was meant to represent the entire transaction and the testimony was inadmissible. Cont. Oil Co. v. Bell, 94 M 123, 21 P2d 65 (1933).

Evidence of Vendee's Understanding: Where a land contract required of the vendor the execution of a deed without reservations and the deed deposited in escrow excepted from its operation the timber growing thereon, parol evidence to the effect that the witness understood from conversations with the vendee that the latter was buying the land without the timber was inadmissible under this section. Hollensteiner v. Anderson, 78 M 122, 252 P 796 (1927).

Evidence of Conditional Contract: In the absence of fraud, an unconditional written contract of purchase of building material presumably embraced the whole agreement of the parties, and therefore evidence of an oral understanding to the effect that it should not become binding until the architect in charge had approved the materials was inadmissible. Wheeler v. James, 70 M 37, 223 P 900 (1924).

Understanding of Parties as to Interest on Note: Parol testimony to show the understanding of the parties that no interest was to be paid on a promissory note which provided for the payment of interest but did not specify the rate was properly excluded. Burnett v. Burnett, 68 M 546, 219 P 831 (1923).

Conveyance of Land — Oral Negotiations Superseded: All oral negotiations relative to the covenant of seizin on a sale of land were superseded by the deed and a contemporaneous writing executed with relation thereto. Morehouse v. N. Land Co., 68 M 96, 216 P 792 (1923).

Execution and Delivery of Deed — All Former Oral Agreements Superseded: Testimony concerning an alleged oral agreement between vendor and vendee that the latter bought the land subject to the right of possession of a tenant, in contravention of the recital in the deed, was inadmissible under the rule that execution and delivery of the deed supersede all former oral agreements. Adams v. Durfee, 67 M 315, 215 P 664 (1923).

Writing to Supersede Oral Negotiations: Under this section and 28-2-904, when a contract has been reduced to writing its contents cannot be added to, contradicted, altered, or varied by parol or extrinsic evidence, and the writing supersedes all oral negotiations concerning its matter which preceded, accompanied, or led up to its execution. Webber v. Killorn, 66 M 130, 212 P 852 (1923).

Writing Considered to Contain All Prior Oral Agreements: A written agreement must be considered as containing all prior oral ones concerning its subject matter, and its terms may therefore not be varied by oral testimony. Leigland v. Rundle Land & Abstract Co., 64 M 154, 208 P 1075 (1922).

Negotiations Prior to Contract:

Prior oral negotiations and directions as to points at which livestock should be stopped for resting and feeding are merged in the contract of shipment, where it and the waybills bore notations stating the points at which stops were to be made, and therefore parol testimony of directions to make other stops was incompetent as an attempt to vary the terms of the written contract. Cook v. N. Pac. Ry. 61 M 573, 203 P 512 (1921).

In an action for damages for breach of a clause of a written contract of sale of a threshing machine warranting it as being well made, of good material, and that with proper use and management it would do as good work as any other machine of the same size manufactured for the like purpose, evidence of statements made by defendant's agent in making the sale that it would thresh and clean alfalfa as well as any other machine of the same size, etc., was properly rejected as an attempt to vary the terms of the written instruments by parol. Rowe v. Emerson-Brantingham Implement Co., 61 M 73, 201 P 316 (1921).

A written contract supersedes any oral negotiations theretofore had relative to the subject matter of it and must be considered as containing all of its terms agreed upon at the time it was executed. Arnold v. Fraser, 43 M 540, 117 P 1064 (1911).

Evidence Admissible — Price Paid Before Execution: The mere execution of a bill of sale by the seller does not exclude proof of a parol agreement for the sale of an animal offered by the buyer, the terms of which had been agreed upon and the purchase price paid before the execution of the bill. Southerland v. Green, 49 M 379, 142 P 636 (1914).

Bill of Sale: Parol evidence that parties did not intend to include buildings described in a bill of sale was inadmissible. Hogan v. Kelly, 29 M 485, 75 P 81 (1904).

COLLATERAL AGREEMENTS

Joint Venture Agreement: Trial court could have excluded evidence relating to an agreement for a joint venture, none of which was in writing, as being designed to alter or vary the terms of a note made by one joint venturer and held by the other. Barrett v. Morton, 137 M 190, 351 P2d 601 (1960).

Oral Contract About Term Covered in Written Contract — Parol Evidence Inadmissible: In an action to recover the balance due under a contract of sale of gasoline to a dealer under a written contract fixing the price, parol testimony of defendant tending to prove an oral contract to refund a portion of the price was held inadmissible under the rule above. Cont. Oil Co. v. Bell, 94 M 123, 21 P2d 65 (1933).

Writing to Remain Intact: An oral agreement, to be collateral within the meaning of the exception to the parol testimony rule and as such admissible in evidence as against the objection that it varies a written instrument, must relate to a subject distinct from that to which the writing applies. The writing must remain intact after the reception of the parol testimony. Cont. Oil Co. v. Bell, 94 M 123, 21 P2d 65 (1933).

Parol Evidence Not Admissible to Vary Terms of Written Contract: Parol evidence of an oral agreement, made contemporaneously with a promissory note which contains an absolute promise to pay at a specified time, is not admissible to extend the time of payment or to provide for payment in any other way than that so specified or to make it depend upon condition. Hosch v. Howe, 92 M 405, 16 P2d 699 (1932).

Oral Agreement Superseded by Writing: Where the signers of a promissory note unqualifiedly bound themselves to pay a certain sum of money at a specified time, parol evidence was inadmissible for the purpose of showing that the payee in an oral contemporaneous stipulation had agreed that payment could be made in a certain manner. Such oral agreement was superseded by the writing, and the evidence, erroneously admitted, tended to vary and contradict the writing, contrary to the provisions of this section, where the validity of the note was not attacked and a mistake or imperfection in the writing was not pleaded. Swan v. Le Clair, 77 M 422, 251 P 155 (1926).

Agreement to Conform to Usage and Custom — Not Admissible: Evidence that at the time a written contract was made, an oral contract was entered into that payments should be made in conformity with a usage and custom, as the work was done and materials furnished, was not admissible. Riddell v. Peck-Williamson Heating & Ventilating Co., 27 M 44, 69 P 241 (1902).

Agreement to Extend Lease — Inadmissible: Testimony by lessees that they would not have signed the lease of a lode mining claim but for an understanding that the time would be extended was not admissible to show a contemporaneous agreement to extend. Evidence of a contemporaneous agreement between the parties to a written sublease of said claim, that in case the sublessors should buy the property the lease would be extended, was inadmissible. Armington v. Stelle, 27 M 13, 69 P 115 (1902), distinguished in Orem v. Hansen Packing Co., 91 M 222, 7 P2d 546 (1932). See also Kelly v. Ellis, 39 M 597, 104 P 873 (1909), distinguished in Orem v. Hansen Packing Co., 91 M 222, 7 P2d 546 (1932).

Parol Evidence Improper: Evidence of a parol agreement, at the time of the making of a promissory note, that in case the same was not paid at maturity, subsequent payments might be applied upon the principal first and the interest afterward, is improper. Anderson v. Perkins, 10 M 154, 25 P 92 (1890). See also Gaffney Mercantile Co. v. Hopkins, 21 M 13, 52 P 561 (1898); York v. Steward, 21 M 515, 55 P 29 (1898).

Contemporaneous Agreement as to Construction of Writing: Where it was alleged that at the time of the execution of a written agreement it was agreed that a particular construction should be given to the terms of the writing, to the effect that it meant that the collateral security should be exhausted before an action was commenced on the notes, such contemporaneous construction was within the purview of this section. Fisher v. Briscoe, 10 M 124, 25 P 30 (1890). See also Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Harrison, 13 M 293, 34 P 313 (1893).

CLEAR LANGUAGE

Deed Within Chain of Title Not Considered Extrinsic Evidence: In a declaratory action involving a boundary dispute, the District Court properly examined the chains of title to the parties' properties in determining the boundary. A deed contained in the chain of title, which provided the first description of the disputed boundary, was not extrinsic evidence and, therefore, was properly considered. Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Examination of Chain of Title and Circumstances of Making of Deed in Establishing Legal Boundary: Plaintiff sought to quiet title in a strip of land in Bridger Canyon, alleging that a state highway formed the western boundary of the property rather than an older county road. The District Court agreed. The Supreme Court examined plaintiff's chain of title back to 1903 and found that a deed conveying the property in 1951 unambiguously established the county road as the western boundary of the property. An unambiguous deed must be interpreted according to its written language, without resort to extrinsic evidence of the grantor's intent. Further, under 1-4-102, the Supreme Court may examine the circumstances under which a deed was made. Here, the section plats and state highway records, coupled with the plain language of the deed, established that the old county road was the legal western boundary, so the District Court was reversed. Tester v. Tester, 2000 MT 130, 300 M 5, 3 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 538 (2000), followed in Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Ambiguity in Reservation — Summary Judgment Improper: In a 1944 deed, the grantor reserved "six percent of all royalties received for oil and gas removed from the above-described property". In 1968, the mineral owners leased the property subject to a one-eighth landowner's royalty (12 ½% of oil and gas produced). In a subsequent suit, the royalty owners claimed they were entitled to 6% of production and the mineral owners claimed that the royalty owners were entitled to 6% of the landowner's royalty of 12 ½% of production. The District Court granted summary judgment for the mineral owners. The Supreme Court reversed on the grounds that the reservation language is ambiguous and the true intent of the parties is discernible only with reference to extrinsic evidence, not from the deed alone; therefore, summary judgment was inappropriate. Proctor v. Werk, 220 M 246, 714 P2d 171, 43 St. Rep. 333 (1986), distinguished in Ferriter v. Bartmess, 281 M 100, 931 P2d 709, 54 St. Rep. 79 (1997).

No Ambiguity if Description Can Be Reasonably Construed: This section must be read with 70-20-201. If the description in a written conveyance can be reasonably construed pursuant to the rules of 70-20-201, such a construction may not be circumvented by resort to extrinsic evidence under the "ambiguity" clause of this section. Extrinsic evidence cannot be used to contradict construction resolved through 70-20-201. Pilgrim v. Kuipers, 209 M 177, 679 P2d 787, 41 St. Rep. 625 (1984).

Life Estate Created by Words "Rent-Free for the Rest of Life": In an appeal from a summary judgment decree that a life estate in an apartment of the defendant-mother was void, the Supreme Court held that the words "entitled to remain in possession thereof, rent-free, for the rest of her life" are clear and unambiguous as an indication that the mother holds a life estate as against a buyer of the apartment building. This is particularly true given that in the contract creating the life estate, provisions clearly show an intention to create such a life estate by providing for all of the details of such estate, including the matter of repairs, replacement, taxation, utilities, and other provisions. Harbeck v. Orr, 192 M 243, 627 P2d 1217, 38 St. Rep. 668 (1981).

Permissive Easement: Parol testimony was not admissible to extend the term of a permissive easement beyond the expiration date set in a written agreement that clearly contained no mistake, imperfection, or ambiguity. Larson v. Burnett, 158 M 421, 492 P2d 921 (1972).

No Ambiguity: No ambiguity existed between clause conveying one-half of the minerals in 1,040 acres and the conveyance of 520 mineral acres, so that mineral deed could not be varied by parol evidence. Superior Oil Co. v. Vanderhoof, 297 F. Supp. 1086 (D.C. Mont. 1969).

Ambiguity in Contract:

In an action for specific performance arising over interpretation of contract for conveyance of land reserving mineral interest, where cross-complaint of defendants alleged that the contract was ambiguous and uncertain and prayed for a declaratory judgment to adjudicate the rights of the parties, it was the duty of the trial court to determine the intent of the parties, and the exclusion of parol evidence of intent was error. Stokes v. Tutvet, 134 M 250, 328 P2d 1096 (1958).

Where an agreement to furnish automobiles to be sold on commission did not furnish its own interpretation, parol evidence was properly admitted to determine the intention of the parties. Brockway v. Blair, 53 M 531, 165 P 455 (1917).

No Interpretation Needed — Language Clear: If the language of a contract is clear it needs no interpretation, and the intention of the parties in entering into it must be ascertained from the writing alone. New Home Sewing Mach. Co. v. Songer, 91 M 127, 7 P2d 238 (1931).

Parol Evidence Not Allowed to Vary Terms: Where, in an action on a written contract, there was not any issue of fraud or mistake in the execution of it or any imperfection in the writing and the provisions of such instrument were plain and unambiguous, parol evidence, the tendency of which was to vary the terms thereof, was properly excluded. W. Loan & Sav. Co. v. Smith, 42 M 442, 113 P 475 (1911).

FRAUD

Fraudulent Representation in Negotiations:

In an action by the seller against the buyer for the purchase price of a hotel, the buyer should be permitted to present evidence that: (1) he was given false information by the seller's agent in response to inquiries made upon buyer's inspection of the property; and (2) that he was prevented by the seller from further inspection of the premises. Jenkins v. Hillard, 199 M 1, 647 P2d 354, 39 St. Rep. 1156 (1982).

Where a contract is sought to be avoided on the ground that the party bound was induced to enter into it by his opponent's fraudulent representations, the latter is not in a position to invoke the rule that a contract in writing may not be varied by parol testimony to prevent the former from testifying to such representations made during preliminary negotiations. Advance-Rumely Thresher Co. v. Wenholz, 80 M 82, 258 P 1085 (1927).

Parol Evidence to Show Fraud or Resolve Ambiguity: Parol evidence is admissible to resolve ambiguities and to determine whether the buyers were fraudulently induced into entering a written contract where seller made express warranties that application for special improvement district had been made when he knew that an application had not been made. Dodds v. Gibson Prod. Co., 181 M 373, 593 P2d 1022 (1979).

Contract Different From Writing — Evidence Admitted: In an action by the payees against the makers for the balance due on a renewal note, where there was fraud and partial failure of consideration and one of the makers testified that he did not know how to figure interest, the makers were not precluded from showing that the contract was different from what the writing showed it to be. Jensen v. Franklin, 135 M 341, 340 P2d 832 (1959).

Evidence Admissible to Show Fraudulent Conduct: Where plaintiff alleged mistake and fraud and the evidence disclosed that the inducement held out to plaintiff to sign an agreement was based on fraudulent representations of defendants that a lease need not be mentioned in a contract of sale of a business and the lease, the evidence was admissible to show the purchase of the lease and defendant's fraudulent conduct, over objection that it varied the contract. Sathre v. Rolfe, 31 M 85, 77 P 431 (1904).

CIRCUMSTANCES OF EXECUTION

Genuine Issue of Material Fact Whether Dam Operation Damaged Lakeshore Properties — Summary Judgment Improper — Class Action Vacated: Flathead Lake landowners brought a class action suit against defendant operators of Kerr Dam for operating outside the scope of their easements in a manner that continuously eroded and damaged plaintiffs' lakeshore properties. The District Court rejected plaintiffs' argument that the dam operator was not allowed to affect plaintiffs' properties above an elevation of 2,893 feet, concluding instead that defendants' easements covered entire parcels. The court concluded that erosion, including wave action erosion, was within the scope of the easements and held that any duty defendants had to not cause unreasonable damage to plaintiffs' properties applied only to damage unrelated to use of the easement. Therefore, summary judgment was granted to defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court first agreed that the District Court's contour line theory was correct. The "2,893 feet" clause did not establish the vertical limit argued by plaintiffs because although the dam operators' right to flood, subirrigate, drain, or otherwise affect the shoreline was not unlimited, it was not restricted to a maximum elevation of 2,893 feet at each parcel, but rather extended to whatever part of each parcel was affected when the lake was held at 2,893 feet above mean sea level as measured at the dam. The court also agreed that the right to cause some erosion was necessary to the enjoyment of the right to perpetually flood, subirrigate, and drain and was thus included by implication in the easements. However, further factual development and trial were necessary to address the question of whether the erosion was reasonable, necessary, and within the scope of the easements, which could not be resolved by summary judgment. Additionally, the question of whether defendants breached their obligation to not cause unreasonable damage to the shoreline properties and to not unreasonably interfere with plaintiffs' enjoyment also required further factual development and possibly trial. Therefore, the order certifying the case as a class action was vacated and the case was remanded for further consideration. Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2009 MT 286, 352 M 212, 215 P3d 675 (2009).

On remand, the District Court decertified the class as to one defendant and denied the plaintiffs' motion for certification as to another defendant on the basis that the question of whether the erosion caused unreasonable damage to or unreasonably interfered with the plaintiffs' properties required an individual, property-by-property analysis that was improper for class certification. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that class certification to both defendants was proper because the reasonableness of the erosion presents a common question that is incapable of being resolved on a property-by-property basis since an aggregate of the benefits and burdens imposed on all of the shoreline properties must be considered together to determine reasonableness. Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2012 MT 318, 368 Mont. 1, 291 P.3d 1209.

Loan of Title Based Upon Exchange of Deeds Upheld — Oral Extrinsic Evidence Controlling: Johnson agreed to loan Anderson the title to several lots that Johnson owned on Flathead Lake so that Anderson could mortgage the lots and use the proceeds for a business venture. Johnson and Anderson both executed deeds to the property, and Anderson occupied the property pursuant to a lease agreement. Later, the agreement was breached when Anderson conveyed his interest to a third party and cut trees from the property. Both parties sought a declaration of ownership in a quiet title action. The District Court admitted oral evidence showing that nothing more than a loan of title evidenced by an exchange of deeds was intended. The Supreme Court held that the timing of the execution and delivery of the two deeds was not controlling and that the deed conveying the property back to Johnson, even though it may have been signed and delivered first, was controlling in light of the circumstances of the transaction. The Supreme Court held that the deed conveying the property back to Johnson was valid as between the parties even though it was not recorded until later. Anderson v. Johnson, 264 M 66, 870 P2d 59, 51 St. Rep. 149 (1994).

Witnesses to Contract — Admissible to Explain Circumstances: Under this section, testimony of witnesses who were present at the time a contract of lease of oil lands was entered into or just prior thereto, as to statements made by officers of the lessors in connection with conversations had with an officer of defendant with relation to offers received for drilling wells on the lands in question, was properly admissible in explanation of the circumstances under which the contract was made. Brown v. Homestake Exploration Co., 98 M 305, 39 P2d 168 (1934).

Object of Parties in Executing Permissible Inquiry: The parol testimony rule does not forbid an inquiry into the object of the parties in executing and receiving the instrument sued upon. While its language cannot be qualified or varied from its natural import, the circumstances under which it was entered into and the real intention of the parties may be shown by parol to prevent either of the parties to it from committing a fraud on the other by claiming it to be what it in fact is not. Bridges & Co., Inc. v. Bank of Fergus County, 77 M 524, 251 P 1057 (1926).

Evidence Showing Circumstances of Execution Admissible: A conversation between buyer and seller had prior to the execution of a bill of sale, with the terms of which it was not in conflict and which was material to show the circumstances under which the writing was executed, was admissible in evidence and not open to the objection that it varied the written agreement. Sutherland v. Green, 49 M 379, 142 P 636 (1914).

Part 3
Effect of Transfer

70-20-301. Fee simple presumed to pass.

Case Notes

Option Agreement Upheld — Minor Variations Not Fatal: The defendant appealed from a judgment granting specific performance of an option agreement to the plaintiff and ordering the property involved conveyed to the plaintiff. The defendant claimed on appeal that the tender and demand under the option agreement were not a legal tender. Specifically, he contended that the claimed tender actually was a counteroffer and therefore he was at liberty to ignore it or to impose other terms in response to it. A number of attacks on the actual terms of the "tender and demand" sent by him to the plaintiff were included in this issue on appeal. Matters that are subsidiary, collateral, or which do not go to the performance of the contract are not essential and do not have to be expressed in the contract. Accordingly, the plaintiff's obtaining a warranty deed and the signature of the defendant's wife on the deed here, when they had no right to obtain either, were not a fatal variance from the terms of the option agreement. The option agreement did not specify the kind of deed, and in such cases it is presumed that a fee simple is intended to pass. The court noted that the plaintiff was ready, willing, and able to perform. The demand that the defendant's wife also sign the deed was not such a material variance from the option agreement as to defeat specific performance. Van Atta v. Schillinger, 191 M 472, 625 P2d 73, 38 St. Rep. 426 (1981), followed in Hetherington v. Ford Motor Co., 257 M 395, 849 P2d 1039, 50 St. Rep. 325 (1993), which was distinguished in Murphy v. The Home Depot, 2012 MT 23, 364 Mont. 27, 270 P.3d 72.

Option Agreement — "Indefinite" Terms: The defendant appealed from a judgment granting specific performance of an option agreement to the plaintiff and ordering the property involved conveyed to the plaintiff. The defendant contended that the terms of the option agreement were so indefinite that specific performance could not be granted as a remedy. When the contract is silent, the place of payment is wherever the seller can be found. The option agreement here provided for the manner and the amount of payment. Although the interest to be conveyed was not mentioned, 70-20-301 provides that when the contract or terms of the grant are silent, a fee simple is presumed to be intended to pass. The Supreme Court concluded that the defendant surely did not intend that any less interest should pass and if he so intended, he did not prove it. Specific performance was affirmed. Van Atta v. Schillinger, 191 M 472, 625 P2d 73, 38 St. Rep. 426 (1981).

Restriction on Reconveyance: Addition to a warranty deed in the usual printed form of statement that grantees agreed not to sell or dispose of the land except to grantors or their heirs did not limit the interest conveyed to a life estate. In re Vincent's Estate, 133 M 424, 324 P2d 403 (1958).

Quitclaim:

Although granting clause of deed read "remise, release and forever quitclaim", deed was more than a quitclaim deed and passed after-acquired title where habendum clause read "To have and to hold all and singular the said premises together with the appurtenances unto the said party of the second part, and to his heirs and assigns forever" and certain surface tracts were excepted from the conveyance. Henningsen v. Stromberg, 124 M 185, 221 P2d 438 (1950).

Use of word "quitclaim" does not restrict the conveyance if other language is employed in the instrument indicating the intention to convey the land itself. Henningsen v. Stromberg, 124 M 185, 221 P2d 438 (1950).

Rebuttable Presumptions: The presumptions that a fee-simple title passes by grant of real property unless it appears that a lesser estate was intended, that a thing delivered by one to another belongs to the latter, and that a conveyance made to one toward whom the grantor stands in a confidential relation is a gift are rebuttable and must give way to proved facts. Hoppin v. Lang, 81 M 330, 263 P 421 (1928).

Growing Timber: Where a landowner conveyed growing timber, with a right-of-way over the land for the purpose of removing it, to the buyer, "his heirs and assigns forever", without limitation or condition, a fee-simple estate in the timber passed to the grantee, and such grant was not defeated by the latter's failure to cut and remove timber within a reasonable time. R. M. Cobban Realty Co. v. Donlan, 51 M 58, 149 P 484 (1915).

Mining Claim: One who executes a deed to a portion of a lode claim is presumed to intend to pass the best title he has in the ground. Collins v. McKay, 36 M 123, 92 P 295, 122 Am. St. Rep. 334 (1907).

70-20-302. After-acquired title to pass by operation of law.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Quitclaim: Although granting clause of deed read "remise, release and forever quitclaim", deed was more than a quitclaim deed and passed after-acquired title where habendum clause read "To have and to hold all and singular the said premises together with the appurtenances unto the said party of the second part, and to his heirs and assigns forever" and certain surface tracts were excepted from the conveyance. Henningsen v. Stromberg, 124 M 185, 221 P2d 438 (1950).

Royalty Interest: Where person conveyed a 1% royalty of all oil and gas produced and saved from certain land and the instrument of conveyance concluded with the words "and agree to warrant and defend the title to the same and that I have lawful authority to sell and assign said royalty", the instrument was sufficient to pass after-acquired title where grantee had no title at time of execution of instrument. Mitchell v. Pestal, 123 M 142, 208 P2d 807 (1949).

Estoppel as Basis: The doctrine that title to realty, acquired by grantor thereof after conveyance, passes to grantee is based on estoppel. Rowell v. Rowell, 119 M 201, 174 P2d 223, 168 ALR 1141 (1946).

Title Defective at Time of Grant: The statutory rule that title to realty, acquired by grantor thereof after conveyance, passes by operation of law to grantee applies where grantor's title, at time of grant, is defective or lacking and he obtains title or portion thereof after grant. Rowell v. Rowell, 119 M 201, 174 P2d 223, 168 ALR 1141 (1946).

Assent by Grantor to Mortgage by Grantee: One who transfers his interest in land by deed absolute or in trust to secure a debt and thereafter agrees to the execution of a mortgage thereon by the grantee is estopped by his deed from later claiming an interest in the property adverse to the mortgagee, and any title he may thereafter acquire inures to the benefit of the mortgagee as security for the payment of the grantor's debts assumed by the grantee. First St. Bank v. Mussigbrod, 83 M 68, 271 P 695 (1928).

Desert Land: Where an entryman of desert land conveyed it before patent to another who mortgaged it and thereafter the entry was canceled for fraud, whereupon the entryman filed upon the same land under the Enlarged Homestead Act and secured patent, the title thus acquired by him did not inure to the benefit of the mortgagee of his grantee of the desert land, the provisions of this section, 70-20-303, and 71-1-213, relating to after-acquired title, having no application under such circumstances, since to hold otherwise would be in effect to nullify the act of Congress prohibiting the alienation of public land prior to patent. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Brainard, 82 M 39, 265 P 10 (1928).

Mining Claim: Under this section and 70-20-301, a deed purporting to transfer a portion of a lode claim, which is named therein, located for the purpose of protecting a placer claim from possible adverse claimants prior to procurement of patent for the latter, conveyed such portion of the afterward patented placer claim, lying within the exterior boundaries of the lode claim, as could be identified. It was immaterial whether the lode location was a valid one as against others. Collins v. McKay, 36 M 123, 92 P 295, 122 Am. St. Rep. 334 (1907).

Property Transferred to Deny Spousal Interest in Marital Estate — Inclusion as Distributable Property Proper: A husband and wife owed about $6,000 in back taxes on their property, which was in jeopardy of being sold at a tax sale. The couple was unable to obtain a loan because of a prior bankruptcy, so they arranged to transfer the property to the husband's mother, who then took out a loan to pay the taxes, using the property as collateral. When the couple later sought to dissolve their marriage, their petition made no mention of any real property acquired during the marriage. The husband testified at the hearing, but the wife did not attend, and dissolution was granted without addressing the wife's interest in the property. She moved to set aside the judgment pursuant to 40-4-135, and the District Court voided the deed transferring the property to the mother, issued a court deed naming the mother as grantor and the husband and wife as grantees to hold the property as tenants in common, and included the property in the marital estate. The mother contended that the property transfer more than 2 years before commencement of the dissolution was final against the husband and wife as grantors, citing this section, and that the property was thus not available as an asset of the couple and was improperly included in the marital estate. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the couple had submitted false proposed findings and conclusions when they made no mention of any real property acquired during the marriage, which had the effect of defrauding the court and denying the wife her interest in the marital property. Inclusion of the property in the marital estate was proper. In re Marriage of Bell, 2000 MT 88, 299 M 219, 998 P2d 1163, 57 St. Rep. 381 (2000).

Not Applicable to Desert Land Entry Before Patent: This section did not apply to a conveyance of a desert land entry before patent, where the entry was subsequently canceled for fraud, even though the same entryman eventually secured patent under the Enlarged Homestead Act, since to apply the section would nullify the congressional policy against alienation before patent. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Brainard, 82 M 39, 265 P 10 (1928).

Grantee Vested With Clear Title: A deed is a declaration that the grantee is vested with a clear title, free from any lawful claim, not only by the grantor but by any other person, except as provided in this section. Dubbels v. Thompson, 49 M 550, 143 P 986 (1914).

Case Notes

Disclosure of Building Leakage and Source of Water Not Material Fact: Plaintiffs purchased a building in Philipsburg for use as a residence. Water began seeping into the basement a couple of years later, and plaintiffs sued the sellers for breach of the warranty of habitability and the city because the source of the water may have been from a broken water line nearby. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim against the sellers because the sellers' knowledge of prior leakage was not a material fact and because the question of the source of the water was not material to the transaction between the parties. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiffs all but conceded that the prior leakage was not important when they did not disclose the leakage to the bank when they refinanced the property. Further, plaintiffs' initial claim against the sellers was for nondisclosure of the leakage without regard to the source, so summary judgment was not precluded because the source was not essential to the case against the sellers. Bond v. Philipsburg, 2003 MT 74, 315 M 7, 67 P3d 255 (2003).

No Express Warranties Found in Repair Contracts, Protective Covenants, and Preliminary Declaration: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of express warranties in failing to originally construct and later repair construction defects in fireplaces in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky, Montana, in accordance with applicable fire and building codes. The plaintiffs based their claim of express warranty upon the repair contracts, claiming that the contracts called for the repairs to be done according to applicable plumbing, electrical, and building codes. Plaintiffs also based their claim of express warranty on protective covenants that require compliance with the same codes and on the preliminary declaration for the condominiums that required compliance with those codes. The plaintiffs contended that the declaration ran with the land because it had to be recorded. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, dismissing Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly found that no express warranties existed. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990).

No Implied Warranty of Habitability or Use Found: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of implied warranties in failing to originally construct and later repair construction defects in fireplaces in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky, Montana, in accordance with applicable fire and building codes. The plaintiffs based their claim of implied warranty on case law that found an implied warranty of habitability and on cases that held that subdivision plats create an implied covenant between developers and subsequent purchasers to use space in the manner designated in the plat. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, dismissing Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly found that no implied warranties existed. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990).

Defects Not Precluding Use of Dwelling as Residence — Limitation of Implied Warranty of Habitability: The Supreme Court reversed a holding that the implied warranty of habitability applied in a case where a water seepage problem was an inconvenience but did not render the home uninhabitable. The court more clearly defined the implied warranty of habitability in holding that it was limited to defects that are so substantial as to reasonably preclude use of the dwelling as a residence. Samuelson v. A.A. Quality Constr., Inc., 230 M 220, 749 P2d 73, 45 St. Rep. 157 (1988).

Encroachment as Encumbrance: An encroachment may or may not be an encumbrance. In determining that there was a fact question as to whether there was a legal right to encroachment, the Supreme Court adopted the rule set out in 3 American Law of Property 12.128 (A.J. Casner ed. 1952): "[I]f the encroachment is of an improvement located on adjoining land which extends across the line onto the land conveyed, there may be a breach of either the covenant of seizin or of the covenant against encumbrances, depending on whether title to that part of the land purchased has been lost by adverse possession, or has become encumbered by an easement." D'Agostino v. Schapp, 230 M 59, 748 P2d 466, 45 St. Rep. 14 (1988).

Warranty of Habitability of Mobile Home — No Remedy for Minor Defects: Although a builder-vendor of a new home impliedly warrants that the residence is constructed to be habitable, the warranty does not require that the home be defect free. The critical determination for a breach of habitability is whether defects relate to useful occupancy of the home. Where a mobile home did not constitute a health or safety hazard and, despite a number of irritating problems, was still considered by experts for both parties to be habitable, the implied warranty was not broadened to provide a remedy for the minor defects and annoyances. McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910, 44 St. Rep. 2111 (1987).

Contract for Deed — When Vendor to Produce Marketable Title: The rule in Montana is that a seller under an installment sales contract does not have to produce marketable title until the date set for final payment and tender of the deed, as explained in Silfvast v. Asplund, 93 M 584, 20 P2d 631 (1933). In the instant case, the Supreme Court refused to acknowledge an exception to the rule urged by the vendee for the reason that the contract expressly contemplated that the vendor produce marketable title well in advance of the closing date. The court disapproved of vendee's withholding of payments until title deficiencies were rectified, noting that the contract provided remedies for such deficiencies but vendee failed to avail itself of them. Scheitlin v. R & D Minerals, 217 M 8, 701 P2d 1388, 42 St. Rep. 986 (1985), followed in Hollas v. McLeod, 246 M 436, 804 P2d 1038, 48 St. Rep. 28 (1991), and in Wise v. Sebena, 248 M 32, 808 P2d 494, 48 St. Rep. 309 (1991). However, when the parties specifically agreed a mortgage would be released no later than 1 year after a contract was entered into but seller failed to obtain release, buyer was entitled to suspend performance. Sjoberg v. Kravik, 233 M 33, 759 P2d 966, 45 St. Rep. 1270 (1988).

Implied Warranty of Habitability — Privity of Contract Not Required: Sale of a lot to plaintiffs was contingent upon plaintiffs' agreement to allow seller to contract with Mora Brothers, Inc., for the construction of their home. When the land beneath their new home began to slide downhill, plaintiffs sued for damages. District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment against seller and Mora Brothers, Inc., as builder-vendors on the theory of breach of implied warranty of habitability but denied plaintiffs' motion against Mora Brothers, Inc., on the issue of negligence. Supreme Court affirmed District Court's finding that Mora Brothers, Inc., is liable to plaintiffs under theory of implied warranty of habitability. The warranty does not depend on a contract for its existence, therefore privity of contract is not required. Once plaintiffs showed that house moved, defendant had to provide an explanation to create a genuine issue of fact. Defendant failed to provide an explanation, so summary judgment was proper. Degnan v. Executive Homes, Inc., 215 M 165, 696 P2d 431, 42 St. Rep. 262 (1985).

Implied Warranty of Habitability: Where builder sold a newly built single family residence which subsequently became uninhabitable due to settling damage caused by a unique soil condition and where no negligence or fault of the builder was found, the court upheld the imposition of a common-law implied warranty of habitability in placing liability on the builder. (The restriction on implied covenants contained in this section was not addressed.) The implied warranty is based on an implicit agreement that the seller will transfer a house which is suitable for habitation and on the fact that the builder is in a better position to examine and discover defects. Chandler v. Madsen, 197 M 234, 642 P2d 1028, 39 St. Rep. 508 (1982).

Recognition of Implied Negative Easements Under Limited Circumstances Only: Appellant appealed from a permanent injunction restraining it from making commercial use of its property. A number of land transactions in the title chain preceded appellant's purchase of its parcel. The issue on appeal was whether or not the parcel was subject to a restriction against commercial use set forth in the 1948 deed. Because of the way various transactions in the chain of title were handled, any restriction on appellant's land would have to be an implied one. The reviewing court stated that equitable principles control the application of implied restrictions on land use. Additionally, recognition of any implied negative easements as to a particular lot was to be considered with extreme caution since such an action results in depriving a person of the use of his property by imposing a servitude through mere implication. An implied restriction on land use should be enforced only as an equitable servitude against a transferee who takes with knowledge of its terms and under circumstances that would make enforcement of the restriction equitable. In this case, there was no evidence that the appellant or its predecessor was ever informed in a deed, contract, or brochure or by representations of the seller that the lots were subject to a restriction against commercial use. No evidence was presented that the restriction was ever placed on the original subdivision. The reviewing court refused to find an implied use restriction and lifted the injunction. Goeres v. Lindey's, Inc., 190 M 172, 619 P2d 1194, 37 St. Rep. 1846 (1980), followed in Flaig v. Gramm, 1999 MT 181, 295 M 297, 983 P2d 396, 56 St. Rep. 710 (1999).

Implied Covenants Not Enumerated: There can be implied reservations or grants of easement by necessity. Where high-rise condominium was constructed and apartments therein sold under plan whereby corporate builders sold individual apartments to suitable applicants but management corporation retained ownership of building and deed between the two corporations reserved no easements, an implied equitable servitude attached to transfers of apartments in question, requiring that they be used for residential purposes only. Thisted v. Country Club Tower Corp., 146 M 87, 405 P2d 432 (1965), overruling holding in Simonson v. McDonald, 131 M 494, 311 P2d 982 (1957), that this section abolishes all implied covenants except the two enumerated and observing that language in Simonson was too broadly put and should have been limited in application to facts of that case.

Delinquent Taxes: Where by warranty deed the "parties of the first part" grant unto the Northern Company the lands described therein, the grantors impliedly, under the statutes, covenanted that at time of execution of deed the lands were free from delinquent taxes. Such implied covenant could be sued upon as if expressly set out in the deed. Schuster v. Northern Co., 127 M 39, 257 P2d 249 (1953).

Tax Liens: A covenant in a deed to warrant and defend plaintiff's "right, title, and interest in and to said premises" and the quiet and peaceable possession thereof, "unto the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns against the acts and deeds of said party of the first part, and all and every person and persons whomsoever, lawfully claiming or to claim the same", constitutes a sufficient warranty to compel the grantor to answer for taxes lawfully levied on the premises conveyed and existing as a lien thereon at time of the conveyance. Milot v. Reed, 11 M 568, 29 P 343 (1892).

70-20-308. Easements to pass with property.

Case Notes

Easement by Reservation — Creation by Reference — Location Description on Plat Sufficient to Establish Burden Imposed by Easement With Reasonable Certainty: The Supreme Court held that an easement by reservation was created when the deed conveying title referred to the plat on file with the County Clerk and Recorder. While the plat did not provide a metes-and-bounds description of the easement's location, the court determined that the plat identified the dominant and servient tenements, the intended use or necessity for the easement, and a description of the easement's location sufficient to establish with reasonable certainty the course of the easement across the property. Yorlum Properties, Ltd. v. Lincoln County, 2013 MT 298, 372 Mont. 159, 311 P.3d 748.

Implied Easement by Necessity — Negated by Eminent Domain Power: In the context of federal checkerboard land grants to railroads, the claimant of an implied easement by necessity traced common ownership of the dominant and servient parcels to the federal government, and the necessity for the easement arose when the parcels were severed from the federal government's common ownership, thus satisfying the unity of ownership requirement. However, the easement failed because the United States' power of eminent domain negated the "strict necessity" requirement, and the claimant failed to produce evidence regarding the government's intent to reserve an easement and its inability to condemn an easement. Yellowstone River, LLC v. Meriwether Land Fund I, LLC, 2011 MT 263, 362 Mont. 273, 264 P.3d 1065.

Elements of Implied Easement by Necessity Established — Easement Properly Granted — Interference Claim Properly Dismissed: Plaintiffs sought an easement by necessity across defendants' property. The District Court held that an easement by necessity existed and defined the scope of the easement, and both parties appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. There was sufficient clear and convincing evidence of both unity of ownership and strict necessity to establish an easement by necessity. Additionally, nothing in the history or condition of the property at the time of severance supported a finding that the extent of the implied easement by necessity across the servient estate should be unlimited, so plaintiffs were entitled to cross defendants' land to reach a public road. However, plaintiffs' claim that defendants interfered with the easement failed. The essential acts that gave rise to the easement by necessity arose in the 1930s, but plaintiffs' right to the easement was not established until 2007, so defendants could not have wrongfully interfered with the easement. Ashby v. Maechling, 2010 MT 80, 356 Mont. 68, 229 P.3d 1210. See also Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 Mont. 56, 968 P.2d 1135, Watson v. Lack of Express Utility Easements Not Condition Adversely Affecting Title: The buyer of condominium units refused to close on the sale because the sale agreement did not expressly state the existence of utility easements for each parcel. The District Court determined that the lack of express utility easements was not a condition that adversely affected title and held that the buyer breached the contract by refusing to close the sale. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The entire property was part of the sale, including all units and appurtenances. If the buyer wanted each unit to have a stated right to access the utility areas, the buyer could affirmatively grant that right to each unit after acquiring the property. Also, the buyer could have required the express establishment of the easements in a written addendum to the contract to be a condition precedent to closing, but the buyer did not do so. The buyer failed to establish that the absence of individual unit easements was an adverse condition of title that allowed the buyer to refuse to close the sale. Apple Park, LLC v. Apple Park Condominiums, LLC, 2008 MT 284, 345 M 359, 192 P3d 232 (2008).

Ditches Not Necessary for Exercise of Water Right — No Ownership Interest in Ditches: A dispute arose over whether plaintiff with water rights had an ownership interest in two ditches that crossed a neighbor's property. The District Court determined that no ownership interest existed, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that ditches are easements that attach to land and that a transfer of real property also transfers a ditch right in the same manner and to the same extent as at the time that the property was transferred, but also noted that a ditch right and a water right are separate and distinct property rights and that if a water right passes as an appurtenance, the means of conveying the water also passes. In order to determine whether the ditch right was appurtenant to the water right, the court examined necessity and beneficial use. In this case, the ditches in question were not necessary for plaintiff to exercise its water rights. Testimony indicated that no one had used the ditches to irrigate plaintiff's land and that plaintiff was able to exercise its water right through two other ditches, nor did plaintiff recognize a historical ownership interest in or beneficial use of the ditches in question. In addition, because the deeds were ambiguous with respect to which ditch rights were conveyed to each parcel, a search of the chain of title would not have revealed that plaintiff had an easement in the ditches. The District Court weighed the conflicting evidence and did not err in holding that plaintiff did not have an ownership interest in the ditches. The judgment was affirmed. Wills Cattle Co. v. Shaw, 2007 MT 191, 338 M 351, 167 P3d 397 (2007), following Lincoln v. Pieper, 245 M 12, 798 P2d 132 (1990), and Ponderosa Pines Ranch, Inc. v. Hevner, 2002 MT 184, 311 M 82, 53 P3d 381 (2002).

Easement Transferred With Transfer of Portion of Dominant Estate — Subdivision of Dominant Tenement Not Considered Increased Burden on Servient Tenement: The District Court found that the creation of a tract and the subsequent sale to Dabney constituted a transfer of a portion of the dominant estate and that the transfer conveyed all easements attached to the property to Dabney, so Dabney had a prescriptive easement to use a road across Leichtfuss's property to access the Dabney property. The court also concluded that Leichtfuss's parcels were not impermissibly burdened by Dabney's use of the road. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a life tenant or lessee generally cannot impose upon land a burden that passes to a remainderman or reversioner, the termination of a dominant estate held in less than fee simple does not automatically extinguish an appurtenant easement. Rather, it is the intent or expectations of the parties to the servitude that determine its duration. In this case, there was no evidence that the parties intended to abandon Dabney's parcel, so Dabney's use of the road was within the scope of the original easement on the parcel, and the easement was apportioned according to the division of the dominant tenement. In addition, Leichtfuss's contention that the apportionment increased the burden on the servient tenement also failed. "Subdivision and conveying away of portions of a dominant estate does not, in and of itself, mean that an additional burden is imposed upon the servient estate." Dabney's use of the parcel was consistent with the predecessor's historical use, and this was not a case in which the easement was suddenly being used to serve additional land or residences or in which the character of the easement's use was changed, so no increased burden to Leichtfuss's parcel was created. Leichtfuss v. Dabney, 2005 MT 271, 329 M 129, 122 P3d 1220 (2005), distinguishing Leffingwell Ranch, Inc. v. Cieri, 276 M 421, 916 P2d 751 (1996), and following Burleson v. Aerial Photographs Establishing Presence of Open and Visible Road on Property Before and After Purchase — Summary Judgment Regarding Easement Proper: Defendant purchased a lot in plaintiff's subdivision. Plaintiff's declaration of easements and rights-of-way granted and reserved easements across and in favor of all lots in the subdivision, but did not specify the location of any particular easement. Defendant blocked the road running across her property, and plaintiff sought monetary, injunctive, and declaratory relief. The District Court granted plaintiff a preliminary injunction prohibiting defendant from interfering with the road. Plaintiff then moved for partial summary judgment, arguing that plaintiff had an easement on the road by express reservation, by implication, and by prescription, supporting the motion with affidavits and aerial photographs taken 6 years before and 6 years after defendant purchased the property, indicating that the road was open and obvious. The District Court granted partial summary judgment, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. When an easement is reserved without designating a location and a road exists at the time of the reservation, then a court will treat the road as an easement that the parties anticipated and the parties are presumed to contract with reference to the condition of the property at the time of sale if the marks are open and visible. The aerial photographs established the absence of a genuine issue of material fact regarding the existence of the road in its present location prior to defendant's purchase of the property, and defendant denied but offered no proof that the road was not open and visible. The photographs were not susceptible to cross-examination because the credibility of the affiant who testified regarding the veracity of the photographs was not crucial to the decision of material fact. Plaintiff demonstrated the presence of the easement, and partial summary judgment on that issue was proper. Ponderosa Pines Ranch, Inc. v. Hevner, 2002 MT 184, 311 M 82, 53 P3d 381 (2002). See also Pioneer Min. Co. v. Bannack Gold Min. Co., 60 M 254, 198 P 748 (1921), and Godfrey v. Pilon, 165 M 439, 529 P2d 1372 (1974).

Easement by Reservation — Showing of Intent to Create Easement in Favor of Stranger to Deed Required: The Loomises contended that an easement by reservation to their property was created by two clauses within an original contract for deed when the Kolbs sold some adjoining property to the Luraskis. The language in the contract for deed purported to reserve a right-of-way and easement over and across the west 30 feet of the Luraski property for the purpose of establishing a public road and an easement for utilities. The District Court concluded that the disputed easement was outside the Loomises' chain of title, making them strangers to the deed, because the express reservation was from the Kolbs to the Luraskis and the Loomises were not parties. The Supreme Court agreed. An easement by reservation in favor of a stranger to a deed can be created only by clearly showing the grantor's intent to do so. In this case, testimony and evidence established that the Kolbs intended to preserve the option for means of access to other property only in the event that property was purchased, but the optional property was never purchased and the road was never constructed. The Supreme Court also disagreed with the Loomises' contention that no one should be considered a stranger to the deed because the reservation was for a public road. No rights are granted to the public prior to a road's actual creation and dedication. The court found it unlikely that a prudent landowner would reserve an easement for the benefit of the public at large, and the burden was on the Loomises, as strangers to the deed, to show the Kolbs' intent to reserve an easement for the Loomises' benefit. The fact that the Kolbs subsequently amended the original certificate of survey to eliminate the disputed easement was further proof that no easement reservation was created for the Loomises. Subsequent acts of the parties that tend to show the construction that they themselves placed upon the writing are also important in determining intent if intent is not clearly expressed in the deed. No easement by reservation was created in favor of the Loomises as a matter of law, and the District Court did not err in so holding. Loomis v. Luraski, 2001 MT 223, 306 M 478, 36 P3d 862 (2001).

Obstruction of Easement Properly Enjoined: Burleson filed an action to enjoin defendant from refusing access to an easement across defendant's property, and the District Court granted summary judgment to Burleson, permanently enjoining defendant from obstructing the easement. Defendant appealed, making various overlapping arguments attacking the creation of the easement, contending that the easement did not pass to subsequent purchasers, that the easement was somehow extinguished, and that defendant was not provided notice of the easement. The Supreme Court addressed each argument, noting that an easement is a nonpossessory interest in land creating a right of one person to use the land of another for a specific purpose or a servitude imposed as a burden upon the land and that an easement cannot be created, granted, or transferred except by operation of law, by an instrument in writing, or by prescription. In this case, an easement by reservation was created by the original documents and attached to the property when the dominant tenement was partitioned or subdivided. Summer access roads were clearly defined rights-of-way constituting easements that were attached to the remaining parcels in the subdivision and passed to subsequent purchasers, such as Burleson. Defendant's argument regarding lack of notice failed because each purchaser of land in the subdivision was notified of the easement through specific language in the contracts, deeds, and title insurance and defendant had actual notice of the easement when inspecting the property prior to purchase. The documents were sufficiently clear to indicate that the summer access roads, despite their designation, were intended to be available to subdivision owners for full-time access to their property. Defendant also presented no evidence to satisfy the necessary elements of extinguishment or abandonment. The owner of the servitude and the servient tenement were not the same person; there was no unity of ownership; the servient tenement was not destroyed; there was no evidence that the owner of the servitude performed or assented to an act that was incompatible with the nature of the easement; and the necessary elements of extinguishment through adverse possession were neither alleged nor satisfied. On the basis of the record, the District Court was affirmed. Burleson v. Kinsey-Cartwright, 2000 MT 278, 302 M 141, 13 P3d 384, 57 St. Rep. 1162 (2000), distinguished in Roland v. Davis, 2013 MT 148, 370 Mont. 327, 302 P.3d 91.

Public Highway Established Pursuant to 1895 Law — Mere Nonuse by County Not Considered Abandonment — Inapplicability of Prescriptive Easement and Reverse Adverse Possession: The District Court found that the Tucker Gulch Road was clearly defined and in use by the public for at least 27 years prior to enactment of sec. 2600, The Codes and Statutes of Montana (1895), which declared all highways and roads then used by the public as public highways. However, the court went on to hold that it was not a petitioned county road and that there was a prescriptive easement by the public over the road that had been lost through abandonment and by reverse adverse possession when a new road was relocated near the old one. The District Court properly found that Tucker Gulch Road was a public highway; however, mere nonuse or lack of maintenance by the county was insufficient to indicate a clear intent to abandon the road without notice and a public hearing. Moreover, the county's failure to respond to several quiet title actions in which the county was not served and the county's adoption of a resolution naming the road did not indicate an intent to abandon. Abandonment cannot be established by mere implication. The Supreme Court cited Baertsch v. Lewis & Clark County, 256 M 114, 845 P2d 106 (1992), for the general rule that title to a public road may not be obtained by adverse possession. The Supreme Court also cited Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166 (1990), and affirmed the District Court's finding that there was not a public prescriptive easement along the relocated new road because most of the nonpermissive use of the new road was by occasional recreationists. The District Court's conclusion that creation of the easement was not specific and that the easements were designed for the access of the owners for activities associated with residential living was in error, however, absent evidence in the access agreement or survey establishing such a restriction. Thus, the grant of unrestricted access to landowners who had owned a mine adjoining the property in question was not in error. McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794, 57 St. Rep. 855 (2000), distinguishing Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Boone & Crockett Club Foundation, Inc., 259 M 279, 856 P2d 525 (1993), and followed in Lee v. Musselshell County, 2004 MT 64, 320 M 294, 87 P3d 423 (2004).

Extent and Scope of Implied Easement: The extent and scope of an implied easement from existing use are determined by 70-17-106 and this section and are limited to its historical use at the time that the easement was created. In the present case, prior to severance and for over 50 years since, use of the easement was limited to agricultural and recreational purposes, and there was no evidence that the parties ever considered the easement to be unlimited in scope. Therefore, the District Court did not err when it found that the Hoyem Trust had an implied easement from existing use rather than an implied easement by necessity and that the scope and extent of the easement were limited to agricultural and recreational purposes based on the historical use of the easement at the time of its creation. Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135, 55 St. Rep. 1230 (1998), modified in Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St. Rep. 125 (2000), requiring that in determining the scope and extent of an implied easement, consideration be given to the intent and reasonable expectations of the parties at the time of severance, and followed in Wolf v. Owens, 2007 MT 302, 340 M 74, 172 P3d 124 (2007). See also Fristoe v. Drapeau, 215 P2d 729 (Calif. 1950), and Restatement of Property 484, comment b (1944). Tungsten Holdings was followed in Waters v. Blagg, 2008 MT 451, 348 M 48, 202 P3d 110 (2008), which was overruled in part in Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154.

Informal Apparent Easement — Reasonable Necessity: For a use to give rise to an implied easement from existing use, it must be apparent and continuous at the time that the tract is divided. An easement is apparent when it may be discovered upon reasonable inspection. An apparent easement need not be so formal as to be an improved, paved, or even graveled two-way road but may be as simple as a path, roadway of sorts, trail, or primitive road. In addition to the requirement that the use be apparent and continuous at the time that the tract is divided, an implied easement from existing use must also have a use that is reasonably necessary for the enjoyment of the dominant parcel. An implied easement from existing use passes to all future owners of the property pursuant to this section. In the present case, the District Court properly held that an easement from existing use, not an implied easement by necessity, existed in favor of the Hoyem Trust over and across Galts' property. The easement by necessity requirement of "strict necessity" did not exist at the time that the property was severed in 1944 because a road existed that provided practical access to a public road for ingress and egress. The presence of an implied easement from existing use necessarily defeats the strict necessity requirement of an easement by necessity. Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135, 55 St. Rep. 1230 (1998), following Michaelson v. Wardell, 186 M 278, 607 P2d 100 (1980), and followed in Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St.

Rep. 125 (2000), and Wolf v. Owens, 2007 MT 302, 340 M 74, 172 P3d 124 (2007). See also Waters v. Blagg, 2008 MT 451, 348 M 48, 202 P3d 110 (2008), wherein the Supreme Court clarified that a connection to a public road is not required when a landowner seeks declaration of an implied easement by preexisting use, overruled in part in Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154, Easement by Reservation — Written Documents — All Easements Considered Conveyed: An easement by reservation must arise from the written documents of conveyance. Deeds that reference plats are considered to convey all easements that are established by the recording of the plat. Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Parker, 282 M 387, 938 P2d 641, 54 St. Rep. 399 (1997), following Ruana v. Grigonis, 275 M 441, 913 P2d 1247 (1996), and followed in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000).

Lack of Consent by All Owners to Purchase Real Property — Contract Unenforceable: Thornton offered to purchase certain real property by executing a buy/sell agreement. The evidence showed that Thornton knew that half of the property was held in trust by Norwest and half was owned by Songstad and her sisters. Thornton obtained the signature of Songstad (representing her sisters) on the buy/sell agreement, but not that of Norwest. Citing Weigand v. Mt. Land & Real Estate Inv., Inc., 223 M 137, 724 P2d 194 (1986), and Rase v. Castle Mtn. Ranch, Inc., 193 M 209, 631 P2d 680 (1981), the Supreme Court held that even though Thornton intended to purchase 100% of the interests in the property, he did not obtain consent for the sale of 100%. Therefore, no contract was formed and specific performance was unavailable to require the sale of the property. Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994), followed in Austin v. Cash, 274 M 54, 906 P2d 669, 52 St. Rep. 1119 (1995).

Implied Easement Conveyed With Property: In the absence of any act to extinguish an implied easement, the easement acquired by a previous property owner passes with the title to the new owner upon purchase of the property. Wangen v. Kecskes, 256 M 165, 845 P2d 721, 50 St. Rep. 6 (1993).

Easement of Necessity — Strict Definition: Necessity must be strictly defined by the lack of means of ingress and egress. When at the time of severing unity of title of two parcels of land there was access across open prairie to the remainder, then no easement of necessity ever existed with respect to the road access through the severed parcel. Wagner v. Olenik, 234 M 135, 761 P2d 822, 45 St. Rep. 1790 (1988). See also Kelly v. Burlington N. RR Co., 279 M 238, 927 P2d 4, 53 St. Rep. 1132 (1996), in which an easement was granted on the basis that easement of necessity existed at the time that unity of ownership was severed.

Negative Easement Based on Oral Agreement — Statute of Frauds Inapplicable: Appellants claimed an oral agreement made in 1967 subjected land known as the Base Area Chalet to a negative easement that restricted the property to noncommercial activities. The Supreme Court found that a written 1971 agreement only contracted to convey property described as "sellers' land" which had been "subject to ski easement"; however, the chalet property was conveyed away by appellants in 1967 and had never been subject to the ski easement. Since the Base Area Chalet did not belong to "sellers" and was not subject to the easement in 1971, the 1971 agreement had no effect on the chalet property. For the same reason, the 1971 agreement could not satisfy the Statute of Frauds for any alleged oral agreement that would create a negative easement on the chalet property. Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

Finding of Way of Necessity Properly Denied: Jenkins sold a parcel of land to the defendant's predecessor in interest. The land was surrounded by other property, including state and railroad lands, and there was no access to it. The plaintiffs subsequently purchased property immediately behind the defendant's land. The District Court did not err in finding that no way of necessity in favor of the plaintiffs existed across the defendants' land. In order for a way of necessity to exist, the way must: (1) have existed prior to or at the time of the severance of the sold land; and (2) run over land, granted or reserved by the same grantor, over which there was access to a public road. In this case a third party, the state of Montana, owns land over which the way is alleged to run and, additionally, there was no access to or from a public road at the time of the conveyance. The prerequisites for a way of necessity did not exist. Schmid v. McDowell, 199 M 233, 649 P2d 431, 39 St. Rep. 1313 (1982), followed in Rathbun v. Robson, 203 M 319, 661 P2d 850, 40 St. Rep. 475 (1983), Peters v. Johnson, 203 M 120, 661 P2d 24, 40 St. Rep. 336 (1983), Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Hidden Village, Inc., 276 M 268, 915 P2d 845, 53 St. Rep. 379 (1996), and Frame v. Huber, 2010 MT 71, 355 Mont. 515, 231 P.3d 589, and relied upon and easement granted in Kelly v. Burlington N. RR Co., 279 M 238, 927 P2d 4, 53 St. Rep. 1132 (1996).

Innocent Purchaser Without Notice — Duty to Investigate Equities of Occupants: A purchaser, having actual notice of the presence of cabin owners and substantial improvements on a part of the land to be purchased suggesting outstanding equities in the cabin owners, has a duty to reasonably investigate those outstanding claims against the property, and failing to do so, the purchaser cannot claim to be an innocent purchaser without notice and rely upon written "licenses" of the cabin owners that contained never-used 30-day termination provisions that were formulated, not to allow wholesale eviction of cabin owners, but to allow the seller to rid himself of objectionable cabin owners. Rase v. Castle Mtn. Ranch, Inc., 193 M 209, 631 P2d 680, 38 St. Rep. 992 (1981), followed in Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994).

Implied Easement for Road to Residence: When, prior to selling a portion of his property, appellant built an access road to serve the residence now owned by respondents, that road was continuously used by respondents and their predecessors to serve the residence, and the road was and still is the only means of access used by respondents and their predecessors, the conveyance of the residence property to the predecessors of the respondents created a permanent easement under this statute for the use of a roadway to the residence. Michaelson v. Wardell, 186 M 278, 607 P2d 100 (1980), followed in Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135, 55 St. Rep. 1230 (1998).

Statutory Enlargement of Common Law: This statute recites the common-law principle that an easement is reserved when the dominant tenement is conveyed and a servient tenement is retained. However, this statute also extends the common law and creates an easement, nonexistent prior to the conveyance, in cases where the property in question was "obviously and permanently" used by the grantor for the benefit of what becomes the dominant estate. Michaelson v. Wardell, 186 M 278, 607 P2d 100 (1980), followed in Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135, 55 St. Rep. 1230 (1998).

Intent of Grantor to Control Creation of Easement: Before the creation of an easement in a stranger to a conveyance will be recognized, the intent of the grantor to create the easement must clearly be shown. If it appears it is as likely the purpose of the clause in the deed was to protect the grantor's warranty of title as to reserve an easement, the court will not depart from the majority rule and find an easement. The testimony presented indicated that in executing the documents that passed equitable title to the property, the grantor did not intend to create an easement. There was no testimony that any of the grantors received less than full value for the land because of the existence of an easement. Finally, although the language of the deed does locate the easement, it fails to name a dominant tenement. Considering these factors together, as in Wilson v. Chestnut, 164 M 484, 525 P2d 24 (1974), it is as likely the grantors intended to protect their warranty of title as to reserve an easement. Thus, the deeds do not establish an easement of record. Medhus v. Dutter, 184 M 437, 603 P2d 669 (1979), followed in Kelly v. Wallace, 1998 MT 307, 292 M 129, 972 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1271 (1998).

Enforcement of Easement — Laches: The plaintiff had no duty to seek judicial enforcement of an easement by prescription until the easement's benefits were in jeopardy as a result of defendant's actions. Thus, plaintiff was not barred by the doctrine of laches. Mtn. View Cemetery v. Granger, 175 M 351, 574 P2d 254 (1978).

Implied Reserved Easement of Necessity: Where all witnesses agreed that there was no visible sign of a roadway or path over defendant's property at the time when plaintiff bought the adjoining property, and defendant still owned land over which he had access, there could have been no implied reserved easement for the roadway. Godfrey v. Pilon, 165 M 439, 529 P2d 1372 (1974).

Marking of Reserved Easement: Common grantor who sold land fronting on the road could not later reserve an easement for construction of ingress road over land previously sold by placing a coffee can marker at the point where the ingress road was to be constructed. Godfrey v. Pilon, 165 M 439, 529 P2d 1372 (1974).

Implied Easement: Ample room for alternative ingress and egress to contiguous county road precluded finding of implied easement on conveyance of part of a tract, in spite of permissive use of access road by several succeeding property owners for 24 years. Poepping v. Neil, 159 M 488, 499 P2d 319 (1972).

Implied Reservations or Grants of Easement: There can be implied reservations or grants of easement by necessity. Where high-rise condominium was constructed and apartments therein sold under plan whereby corporate builders sold individual apartments to suitable applicants but management corporation retained ownership of building and deed between the two corporations reserved no easements, an implied equitable servitude attached to transfers of apartments in question, requiring that they be used for residential purposes only. Thisted v. Country Club Tower Corp., 146 M 87, 405 P2d 432 (1965), overruling holding in Simonson v. McDonald, 131 M 494, 311 P2d 982 (1957), that 70-20-304 abolishes all implied covenants except the two enumerated therein and observing that language in Simonson was too broadly put and should have been limited in application to facts of that case, and distinguished in Flaig v. Gramm, 1999 MT 181, 295 M 297, 983 P2d 396, 56 St. Rep. 710 (1999).

Conveyance of Servient Tenement: The doctrine of implied easements by reservation as set forth in this section will apply where the servient tenement is severed and conveyed but the dominant tenement is retained by the grantor. Spaeth v. Emmett, 142 M 231, 383 P2d 812 (1963).

Abandonment of Public Easement — Private Easement: Where original grantor owned fee in county road subject to public easement for highway purposes and she conveyed tracts of land bordering on such road, a private easement over such county road passed with such conveyance and such private easement would survive extinguishment of public easement upon abandonment of the road. McPherson v. Monegan, 120 M 454, 187 P2d 542 (1947).

70-20-310. Conveyance in joint tenancy — right of survivorship.

Case Notes

Law Governing Personal Property Decided by Situs of Property and Domicile of Owner — Tenancy by the Entirety Impermissible Mode of Personal Property Ownership in Montana: A Montana District Court determined that personal property jointly owned by Lurie and her husband as tenancy by the entirety in Missouri was owned by them either as joint tenancy property or as tenancy in common property after the couple moved to Montana. The property was subject to execution to satisfy a judgment against the husband on a validly issued writ. Lurie contended that as tenancy by the entirety property, it was not subject to execution to satisfy a judgment against the husband only, because Missouri law followed the personal property and should be applied in Montana. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court was correct in determining that the law governing personal property is decided by the situs of the property and the domicile of the owner, so Montana law applied. Further, under Clark v. Clark, 143 M 183, 387 P2d 907 (1963), tenancy by the entirety is not a permissible mode of real property ownership in Montana, and the District Court properly extended the reasoning in Clark with equal force to personal property in Lurie's case. Lurie v. Sheriff, 2000 MT 103, 299 M 283, 999 P2d 342, 57 St. Rep. 414 (2000), distinguishing Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998).

Death of Spouse Before Final Disposition — Distribution as Severance of Joint Tenancy: Wife contended that: (1) because husband died before final resolution of property division, her right of survivorship remained; and (2) the District Court erred in refusing to recognize that the property was held in joint tenancy and should therefore have given the wife the property upon husband's death. On review, the Supreme Court found that a lower court order distributing the property in question to the husband effectively severed the joint tenancy. In re Marriage of Butler, 232 M 418, 756 P2d 1159, 45 St. Rep. 1160 (1988).

Right of Survivorship Not Related to Estate of Deceased: The right of survivorship exists under the deed grant and is not in any way related to the estate of the deceased, the latter passing by the law of intestate succession or the law of wills. In re Estate of Matye, 198 M 317, 645 P2d 955, 39 St. Rep. 1009 (1982).

Estates by Entirety: While a joint tenancy is a joint interest, a joint interest is not limited to the estate of joint tenancy but may include estates by entirety. However, estates by the entirety are no longer a permissible mode of property ownership in this state; and where husband and wife took under a deed to them "as joint tenants with right of survivorship and not as tenants in common", the property was held in a joint tenancy, and this was not converted by divorce into a tenancy in common. Clark v. Clark, 143 M 183, 387 P2d 907 (1963), followed in Lurie v. Sheriff, 2000 MT 103, 299 M 283, 999 P2d 342, 57 St. Rep. 414 (2000), in which tenancy by the entirety as applied to personal property was held an impermissible mode of ownership in Montana in the same way that tenancy by the entirety as applied to real property was held impermissible in Clark.

Exception to Right of Survivorship: Where husband feloniously killed his wife, he did not acquire her share of jointly owned realty by right of survivorship but took the property under a constructive trust. When he thereafter committed suicide his heirs had no right to wife's share. In re Cox's Estate, 141 M 583, 380 P2d 584 (1963).

Effect: Effect of this enactment was to provide that right of survivorship exists in those classes of conveyances covered by it, whether made to joint tenants or to tenants in estates by entirety. This section does not purport to exclude the right of survivorship in other types of conveyances. Hennigh v. Hennigh, 131 M 372, 309 P2d 1022 (1957).

Right of Survivorship in Joint Tenancy: A conveyance to persons in joint tenancy carries with it the right of survivorship since Legislature did not abrogate that right as an incidence of joint tenancy. Hennigh v. Hennigh, 131 M 372, 309 P2d 1022 (1957).

Part 4
Fraudulent Conveyances

Part Case Notes

Bank's Fiduciary Duty to Customers It Gives Financial Advice — Real Estate Sales: Wife, whose husband had recently died, signed a contract for a deed to her ranch with Dittman, who signed as "trustee". There were two other purchasers, who did not sign: a person to whom, according to the evidence, wife would not have knowingly sold and the marketing officer of the bank used by the wife and husband for some 24 years. Wife was unfamiliar with real estate and financial affairs and relied upon the advice of various bank officers with regard to the sale of the ranch. This put the bank in a prima facie fiduciary relationship as to the wife. The relationship and its attendant duties extended to the advising officers in their dealings with the wife in regard to sale of the ranch. The marketing officer thus had a duty to fully inform the wife and protect her interests. This duty he breached, and the breach amounted to constructive fraud, where evidence showed that: (1) the contract price and terms were disadvantageous to the wife; (2) the true purchasers were not disclosed to her either by the contract or the marketing officer; (3) the purchasers intended to and began to subdivide and sell the ranch, though the marketing officer knew wife apparently did not wish this, having refused an earlier offer to purchase with right to subdivide; (4) the marketing officer had extensive financial interests involving loans to him from his bank, and an audit of the bank recommended that in view of this his lending authority should be eliminated or curtailed; and (5) the lower court was unimpressed with the way in which wife's attorney in the negotiations represented her interests. The lower court properly ordered the contract for deed rescinded. Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188, 41 St. Rep. 286 (1984).

70-20-401. Instrument made with intent to defraud — void.

Case Notes

Ratification of Forged Deed Considered in Equity: Commercial property in Hamilton was transferred to multiple parties in successive transactions, resulting in competing claims to the property. Some of the transactions involved fraud or forgery. Plaintiff filed a complaint against numerous parties that were involved in the transactions and sought to quiet title to the property. The District Court concluded that the documents of conveyance to three of the parties were forged and therefore void ab initio and that no rights were transferred to any of those parties. The court found that two of the parties had ratified the forged conveyances by their subsequent actions and that because plaintiff was the first to record a document of transfer, plaintiff was entitled to quiet title. One defendant appealed on grounds that a forged deed cannot be ratified, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A forged deed is void and transfers no rights, even if the subsequent purchaser is bona fide. Thus, the three deeds were void ab initio and plaintiff's interest in the property was not saved by 70-20-404, even though plaintiff parted with value, had no notice of the forgery, and duly recorded the appropriate transfer documents. However, in order to provide a legal remedy in the appropriate case, principles of equity and justice compel recognition of ratification, so a forged deed may be considered in equity. Erler v. Creative Fin. & Inv., LLC, 2009 MT 36, 349 M 207, 203 P3d 744 (2009), distinguishing Hames v. Polson, 123 M 469, 215 P2d 950 (1950), and In re Estate of Griffin, 248 M 472, 812 P2d 1256 (1991).

Claim of Material Alteration of Deed — Reliance on Public Record by Good Faith Purchaser: Appellants sought to set aside summary judgment in an action to quiet title, contending that a warranty deed, which contained no reservation of mineral interests, was materially altered. After the deed was recorded in 1950, various grantees engaged in partnership business activities involving the property. Eventually the property was mortgaged, and a number of quitclaim deeds were filed. The trial court did not find that any of this activity pointed to a material alteration of the deed or to any caveat to a title examiner that the deed had been altered. The Supreme Court noted that the document purporting to prove alteration consisted of an unsigned carbon copy warranty deed that included a mineral reservation not on the recorded deed. Under 70-20-404, protection is provided for purchasers in good faith, and the purchaser in this case had a right to rely on a document of public record for more than 30 years. Appellants "slept on their rights by not ascertaining the status of their property for nearly 40 years". Benson v. Diehl, 228 M 199, 745 P2d 315, 44 St. Rep. 1455 (1987).

Warranty Deed — Donative Intent — No Fraud or Lack of Consideration: Plaintiff filed an action to set aside a warranty deed to defendant transferring land that plaintiff had received originally as a tenant in common with defendant's father under the condition that they deed the land to defendant "when they were done with it". The District Court found that defendant was not guilty of deceit or false representation and that there was fair and adequate consideration for the transfer and refused to void the deed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that there was sufficient evidence to support the District Court's findings. Although the land was valued at $300,000 to $600,000 and the consideration for the transfer was $1, plaintiff's performance of the condition requiring transfer of the land to defendant, coupled with the payment of $1, constituted fair and adequate consideration in this case. Wright v. Blevins, 217 M 439, 705 P2d 113, 42 St. Rep. 1311 (1985).

70-20-402. Instrument not void as to purchaser with notice — exception.

Ratification of Void Deeds — Authority of Agent to Convey Property — Title Properly Quieted: Defendant third party raised three challenges to a District Court's conclusion that deeds voided by forgery during transfer were nevertheless ratified by subsequent actions of the parties and contended that the court erred by quieting title to plaintiff. The first argument dealt with the fact that one of the parties never received proper written authority to convey the property to plaintiff, so ratification was voided under the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court noted that an agreement to sell an interest in property must be in writing and that an agent's authority to sell property must also be in writing. However, the agency relationship may arise either by precedent authorization or by subsequent ratification. In this case, the warranty deeds constituted subsequent written authority for conveyance of the property, so the statute of frauds was not violated for want of written authorization. The second argument was that the criteria for ratification were not satisfied, but after examining the chain of title, the Supreme Court found that the personal actions of the principal ratified the deed and that the criteria for ratification were satisfied. The third argument was that defendant was prejudiced as a third party by ratification, but that argument did not prevail because defendant could not have been prejudiced since defendant's interest in the property was invalid both prior to and after ratification and defendant could have become aware of the void deeds by conducting a title check and avoiding the problem. Lastly, title was properly quieted in plaintiff because defendants with prior interests in the property stipulated that they no longer claimed any right, title, or interest in the property. Plaintiff's deed was superior because it was the first to be recorded and had been ratified, and plaintiff was therefore entitled to have quiet title to the property. The District Court was affirmed. 1993 Amendment: Chapter 192 at beginning deleted reference to parts 1 through 3 of Title 1, chapter 5; and made minor changes in style.

Applicability: Section 23, Ch. 192, L. 1993, provided: "[This act] applies to notarial acts performed on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective October 1, 1993.

70-21-102. Unrecorded instruments valid between parties.

Case Notes

Admissibility and Jury Instructions Related to Unrecorded Subdivision Covenants — Validity of Unrecorded Instrument Between Persons With Notice: At issue in a subdivision dispute were unrecorded covenants prohibiting commercial activity in the subdivision. The District Court allowed the unrecorded instruments into evidence and instructed the jury that the instruments were valid between the parties who had notice of them. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no error either in admission of the covenants into evidence or in the jury instruction. Witnesses testified that copies of the unrecorded instruments had been given to both parties, so the documents were clearly relevant and admissible, and because both parties were notified of the restrictive covenants, an instruction regarding the validity of the instruments was appropriate under this section. Rice v. C.I. Lanning, 2004 MT 237, 322 M 487, 97 P3d 580 (2004).

Loan of Title Based Upon Exchange of Deeds Upheld — Oral Extrinsic Evidence Controlling: Johnson agreed to loan Anderson the title to several lots that Johnson owned on Flathead Lake so that Anderson could mortgage the lots and use the proceeds for a business venture. Johnson and Anderson both executed deeds to the property, and Anderson occupied the property pursuant to a lease agreement. Later, the agreement was breached when Anderson conveyed his interest to a third party and cut trees from the property. Both parties sought a declaration of ownership in a quiet title action. The District Court admitted oral evidence showing that nothing more than a loan of title evidenced by an exchange of deeds was intended. The Supreme Court held that the timing of the execution and delivery of the two deeds was not controlling and that the deed conveying the property back to Johnson, even though it may have been signed and delivered first, was controlling in light of the circumstances of the transaction. The Supreme Court held that the deed conveying the property back to Johnson was valid as between the parties even though it was not recorded until later. Anderson v. Johnson, 264 M 66, 870 P2d 59, 51 St. Rep. 149 (1994).

Unlawful Detainer — Right of Lessor With Unrecorded Title to Sue: Plaintiff leased land to defendants and assigned her interest in the land to a trust. The assignment was recorded. The trust later reassigned the interest back to plaintiff through an unrecorded quitclaim deed. Plaintiff sued defendants when they refused to vacate at the end of the lease. Record title and legal title are not synonymous, and plaintiff had valid legal title even though it was not record title. Recording has the purposes of giving notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers and of establishing priority but has nothing to do with conveying title. Defendants' only interest in the property was a lease, and they were not within the scope of the recording statutes' protection. Plaintiff, contrary to defendants' claim, was the real party in interest, not the trust, and was entitled to bring the suit. The party with legal title is the real party in interest in real property disputes. Blakely v. Kelstrup, 218 M 304, 708 P2d 253, 42 St. Rep. 1601 (1985).

Notice of Contract That Is Unrecorded by Purchaser: A contract for deed between appellants and a life estate contracted for therein are effective and enforceable as against the parties and also against subsequent purchasers who have notice of the contract under 70-21-102. Notice to a subsequent purchaser can be constructive notice through a duly authorized, trained real estate agent who acts for the purchaser throughout the purchase transactions. A misapprehension on the part of the purchaser as to the contract provisions is not to be confused with lack of knowledge or notice. Harbeck v. Orr, 192 M 243, 627 P2d 1217, 38 St. Rep. 668 (1981).

Failure to File Sublease of State Lands — Knowledge Controls: Aye, the holder of a lease of state lands, executed a sublease to Fix, along with an unenforceable oral promise to assign the lease. The leaseholder then assigned the lease to Bruski. Section 81-419, R.C.M. 1947 (now 77-6-208), at the time of the sublease, provided that a sublease of state land was illegal unless a copy of the sublease had been filed in the state land office and approved by the Commissioner. This statute did not override 70-21-102, which provides that an unrecorded instrument is valid as between the parties and those who have notice thereof. The purpose of 77-6-208 is to facilitate the management of state lands, but it does not abrogate general principles of property law. The Bruskis were aware of the sublease, as Fix was farming the leased land at the time the lease was assigned to them. Because of this knowledge, the Bruskis had notice and the sublease was valid. Aye v. Fix, 192 M 141, 626 P2d 1259, 38 St. Rep. 578A (1981).

Burden of Proof: The burden is on the grantee in an unrecorded deed to show that a subsequent purchaser had notice. Zier v. Osten, 135 M 484, 342 P2d 1076 (1959); Custer Consol. Mines Co. v. Helena, 52 M 35, 156 P 1090 (1916); Sheldon v. Powell, 31 M 249, 78 P 491 (1904); Mullins v. Butte Hardware Co., 25 M 525, 65 P 1004 (1901); Hull v. Diehl, 21 M 71, 52 P 782 (1898).

Grazing Lease: Though unacknowledged, unrecorded grazing lease was valid as between lessor and lessee, it was not binding on one who was not a party to the lease and who had no notice thereof at time lessor contracted to sell him the land and who promptly entered into possession of the land and made improvements thereon, including plowing of almost 70 acres thereof. Attempted recording almost 9 months after contract of sale did not constitute constructive notice. Epletveit v. Solberg, 119 M 45, 169 P2d 722 (1946).

Payment of Taxes: Payment of taxes by the grantee in an unrecorded deed is not notice to a subsequent purchaser. Hurley v. O'Neill, 31 M 595, 79 P 242 (1905); Sheldon v. Powell, 31 M 249, 78 P 491 (1904).

Part 2
Recording — Procedure

70-21-201. What may be recorded — recording copy in another county.

Case Notes

Proper Deposit of Leasehold Interest Entitling Leaseholder to Notice and Right to Redeem Property Tax Lien: Section 15-18-212 requires that the purchaser or assignee of a tax sale certificate notify all persons interested in the property, including a person with properly recorded interest in the property, that a tax deed will be issued to the purchaser unless the tax lien is redeemed prior to the expiration date of the redemption period. Under 70-21-209, an acknowledged or certified instrument is considered recorded when it is deposited with the appropriate County Clerk and Recorder. In this case, an instrument reflecting plaintiffs' interest as assignee of a vendor's interest in the contract for sale of a cabin and leasehold, which constituted real property, was properly recorded at the Lewis and Clark County Clerk and Recorder's office, so plaintiffs were entitled as an interested party to notice by certified mail pursuant to 15-18-212; however, no notice was given. Plaintiffs' right to redeem the property tax lien continued indefinitely until proper notice was given; thus, a tax deed subsequently issued by the county was void for failure to comply with the notice provisions of 15-18-212. Ditto v. Kipp, 2000 MT 162, 300 M 278, 3 P3d 647, 57 St. Rep. 679 (2000). See also Kneedler v. League Wide, Inc., 1999 MT 80, 294 M 101, 979 P2d 163 (1999).

Title Insurer Not Obligated to Search City Engineer or Water Department Records — Public Records as Properly Recorded Documents — Reasonable Expectations Doctrine Inapplicable: The Millers sought to hold a title insurance company responsible for costs involved in relocating a neighbor's water and sewer lines that were discovered on the property. The lines were of record with the city engineer and the water department, but their existence was not recorded in the chain of title. The title insurance policy defined public records as "those records which by law impart constructive notice of matters relating to said land". The Supreme Court held that the definition was unambiguous and clearly related to records filed and docketed with the County Clerk and Recorder because it was proper recordation that imparted constructive notice of matters relating to the property. Nothing in Montana recordation law required the title insurer to search city engineer or water department records. For the same reason, the Millers' attempt to apply the reasonable expectations doctrine also failed because the policy did not insure against loss or damage by reason of "easements, or claims of easements, not shown by the public records". Miller v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 1999 MT 230, 296 M 115, 987 P2d 1151, 56 St. Rep. 908 (1999). See also Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co. v. Livengood, 1998 MT 329, 292 M 244, 970 P2d 1054, 55 St. Rep. 1336 (1998).

No Duty of Clerk and Recorder to Record Invalid Deed — Writ of Mandamus Improper: Under 7-4-2617, a County Clerk and Recorder is obligated to record only an instrument, paper, or notice that is authorized by law to be recorded. Under 76-3-302, a County Clerk and Recorder has a mandatory duty not to accept and record an otherwise proper deed if it fails to comply with the applicable survey requirements. The District Court did not err in refusing to issue a writ of mandamus requiring recording of deeds when a landowner attempted to divide a large parcel of land into smaller parcels by executing a deed in which the landowner was both grantor and grantee, which is not authorized by law, and when the statutorily required plat was not filed. Rocky Mtn. Timberlands, Inc. v. Lund, 265 M 463, 877 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 653 (1994).

Certificate of Sale: A certificate of sale issued by the Sheriff is a conveyance within meaning of the Recording Act (70-21-201). Lepper v. Home Ranch Co., 90 M 558, 4 P2d 722 (1931).

Attorney General's Opinions

Notice of Right to Claim Construction Lien — Acknowledgment Not Required: A notice of right to claim a construction lien filed with a County Clerk and Recorder pursuant to 71-3-531 is not subject to the acknowledgment requirements of 70-21-203. 42 A.G. Op. 53 (1988).

70-21-202. Certain transfers in trust — mortgages — when to be recorded.

Attorney General's Opinions

Recordation of Trust Indenture — Amount and Maturity Date Not Required: A County Clerk and Recorder may not refuse to accept for filing a trust indenture that does not include an amount secured and a maturity date because there are no specific requirements that such matters be set forth in the instrument. 41 A.G. Op. 11 (1985).

70-21-203. Acknowledgment of instruments required — exceptions.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 51 in introduction inserted "acknowledged as provided in subsection (1) or proved as provided in subsection (2)"; in (1) in introductory clause after "acknowledged" inserted "as acknowledgment is defined in 1-5-602"; in (1)(b) after "by the corporation" substituted "to act" for "executing the instrument"; in (2) at end substituted "Proof of execution as provided for in this subsection must be notarized as provided in Title 1, chapter 5" for "the acknowledgment or proof certified in the manner prescribed by Title 1, chapter 5"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 15, 1999.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 192 in introductory clause, before "70-21-205", deleted references to 1-5-108 and 1-5-109; in (2)(c) deleted reference to parts 1 through 3 of Title 1, chapter 5; and made minor changes in style.

Applicability: Section 23, Ch. 192, L. 1993, provided: "[This act] applies to notarial acts performed on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective October 1, 1993.

Case Notes

Negligence in Taking Acknowledgment — Liability for Damages: At the behest of the husband, a notary public took the acknowledgment of a deed transferring real property without knowing or having satisfactory evidence that the wife, whose name appeared on the deed as signator-grantor, was the individual described in and who executed the deed. The wife was not present at the time of acknowledgment and was never contacted by the notary; nevertheless, the notary signed the certificate of acknowledgment as if the wife had personally appeared and made the acknowledgment. The notary public was negligent in performance of official duty and was liable for damages proximately caused by such negligence. (See 1999 amendment.) McWilliams v. Clem, 228 M 297, 743 P2d 577, 44 St. Rep. 1536 (1987), distinguishing Mahoney v. Dixon, 31 M 107, 77 P 519 (1904), and Ellis v. Hale, 58 M 181, 194 P 155 (1920).

Constructive Notice:

For record of instrument to impart "constructive notice", the writing must be one which the law authorizes to be recorded and not one that is illegally placed of record in violation of the express mandate of statute. Epletveit v. Solberg, 119 M 45, 169 P2d 722 (1946); Lee v. Laughery, 55 M 238, 175 P 873 (1918).

To entitle an instrument to be recorded under this section, it must be acknowledged by the party who is bound by it to the performance of an act. Acknowledgment by the party to whom he is bound is of no avail, and record of it in the latter case imparts no constructive notice whatever. Lee v. Laughery, 55 M 238, 175 P 873 (1918).

Grazing Lease: A grazing lease which was not acknowledged or proved as required by this section was not entitled to be recorded, and it imparted no constructive notice to anyone. Epletveit v. Solberg, 119 M 45, 169 P2d 722 (1946).

Bill of Sale: A real estate bill of sale which was not acknowledged or proved was not entitled to record under this section, and therefore its record imparted no constructive notice to anyone. Baum v. N. Pac. Ry., 55 M 219, 175 P 872 (1918).

Attorney General's Opinions

Notice of Right to Claim Construction Lien — Acknowledgment Not Required: A notice of right to claim a construction lien filed with a County Clerk and Recorder pursuant to 71-3-531 is not subject to the acknowledgment requirements of 70-21-203. 42 A.G. Op. 53 (1988).

70-21-208. In what county to be recorded.

Case Notes

Proper Deposit of Leasehold Interest Entitling Leaseholder to Notice and Right to Redeem Property Tax Lien: Section 15-18-212 requires that the purchaser or assignee of a tax sale certificate notify all persons interested in the property, including a person with properly recorded interest in the property, that a tax deed will be issued to the purchaser unless the tax lien is redeemed prior to the expiration date of the redemption period. Under 70-21-209, an acknowledged or certified instrument is considered recorded when it is deposited with the appropriate County Clerk and Recorder. In this case, an instrument reflecting plaintiffs' interest as assignee of a vendor's interest in the contract for sale of a cabin and leasehold, which constituted real property, was properly recorded at the Lewis and Clark County Clerk and Recorder's office, so plaintiffs were entitled as an interested party to notice by certified mail pursuant to 15-18-212; however, no notice was given. Plaintiffs' right to redeem the property tax lien continued indefinitely until proper notice was given; thus, a tax deed subsequently issued by the county was void for failure to comply with the notice provisions of 15-18-212. Ditto v. Kipp, 2000 MT 162, 300 M 278, 3 P3d 647, 57 St. Rep. 679 (2000). See also Kneedler v. League Wide, Inc., 1999 MT 80, 294 M 101, 979 P2d 163 (1999).

Notice of Covenants — Forfeiture — Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs purchased real property on a contract for deed from defendants, subject to restrictive covenants filed after the contract was drawn but before it was signed. Some months later the sellers sent the buyers notice of default, citing the covenants. The issues on appeal related to summary judgment. Under former Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the moving party must show he is entitled to summary judgment. The sellers were found to have met the burden inasmuch as the validity and genuineness of all the documents in question were admitted by both parties, along with the signatures and dates of the documents. The reference in the contract put all parties on constructive notice of the covenants. The buyers failed to carry their ensuing burden to show issues of material fact and, accordingly, granting of sellers' motion for partial summary judgment was upheld. The lower court's ruling denying the buyers' motion for summary judgment was reversed. The sellers' counterclaim on this motion had raised the issue of violation of the covenants by the buyers, but the buyers argued that summary judgment should have been granted because the remedy sought by the sellers (forfeiture) was improper. The Supreme Court held that when a violation of the covenants would not defeat the main objective or purpose of the contract, a remedy of forfeiture was not warranted. The case was remanded. Van Uden v. Hendricksen, 189 M 164, 615 P2d 220 (1980).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Part 3
Effect of Recording

Part Case Notes

Broad Chain of Title Concept Adopted: Recognizing that there are two lines of authority — the broad approach and narrow approach — on the question of whether a servitude created by a common grantor in the deed to the benefited parcel is in the chain of title of the burdened parcel, the Supreme Court adopted the broad approach and concluded that a prospective purchaser is on constructive notice not only of conveyances to the prior owners of the parcel, but also of conveyances from the prior owners of the parcel during each of their respective periods of ownership. Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154.

70-21-301. Conveyance defined.

Case Notes

Broad Chain of Title Concept Adopted: Recognizing that there are two lines of authority — the broad approach and narrow approach — on the question of whether a servitude created by a common grantor in the deed to the benefited parcel is in the chain of title of the burdened parcel, the Supreme Court adopted the broad approach and concluded that a prospective purchaser is on constructive notice not only of conveyances to the prior owners of the parcel, but also of conveyances from the prior owners of the parcel during each of their respective periods of ownership. Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154.

Creation of a Negative Easement Notwithstanding Absence of a Conveyance: A written agreement in the form of a court settlement not to use property as a restaurant and bar creates a valid and enforceable covenant which runs with the land and which is binding on each of the parties and their successors in interest notwithstanding absence of a conveyance of the estate to which the covenant pertains or words to that effect in the settlement agreement. The agreement was expressly intended to constitute a covenant running with the land and to bind the present owners, heirs, and assigns and was entered into voluntarily. A negative easement, as was created here, can be created by a grant (conveyance) or agreement; the agreement being construed as a grant is binding upon purchasers of the servient tenement who have actual or constructive notice of it. Reichert v. Weeden, 190 M 95, 618 P2d 1216, 37 St. Rep. 1788 (1980).

Notice of Covenants — Forfeiture — Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs purchased real property on a contract for deed from defendants, subject to restrictive covenants filed after the contract was drawn but before it was signed. Some months later the sellers sent the buyers notice of default, citing the covenants. The issues on appeal related to summary judgment. Under former Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the moving party must show he is entitled to summary judgment. The sellers were found to have met the burden inasmuch as the validity and genuineness of all the documents in question were admitted by both parties, along with the signatures and dates of the documents. The reference in the contract put all parties on constructive notice of the covenants. The buyers failed to carry their ensuing burden to show issues of material fact and, accordingly, granting of sellers' motion for partial summary judgment was upheld. The lower court's ruling denying the buyers' motion for summary judgment was reversed. The sellers' counterclaim on this motion had raised the issue of violation of the covenants by the buyers, but the buyers argued that summary judgment should have been granted because the remedy sought by the sellers (forfeiture) was improper. The Supreme Court held that when a violation of the covenants would not defeat the main objective or purpose of the contract, a remedy of forfeiture was not warranted. The case was remanded. Van Uden v. Hendricksen, 189 M 164, 615 P2d 220 (1980).

Restrictions: Declaration of restrictions constitutes an instrument which affects title to land under this section, so that where filed, subsequent purchaser had constructive notice, pursuant to 70-21-302, and could not use his land for commercial purposes. Kosel v. Stone, 146 M 218, 404 P2d 894 (1965).

Reservation of Royalty: Recordation of royalty assignment falls within definition of conveyance of real property. Pluhar v. Guderjahn, 134 M 46, 328 P2d 129 (1958).

Mortgage:

A real estate mortgage extension agreement, executed as provided by 25-3-603, is a "conveyance" within the meaning of this section. Hastings v. Wise, 91 M 430, 8 P2d 636 (1932).

A mortgage on real property is a conveyance within the meaning of the Recording Acts (Title 70, ch. 21, part 3). Angus v. Mariner, 85 M 365, 278 P 996 (1929).

While a mortgage is a conveyance, it is a conveyance of only a chattel interest. Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4 (1905); Mueller v. Renkes, 31 M 100, 77 P 512 (1904); Hull v. Diehl, 21 M 71, 52 P 782 (1898).

Contract for Sale of Land: A contract for the sale of land is a conveyance of real property within the meaning of the law. Piccolo v. Tanaka, 78 M 445, 253 P 890 (1927).

Lease: A lease directed by the District Court to be executed by an executor of certain realty belonging to his testator's estate falls within the meaning of the term "conveyance" as used in this section. Estate of Tuohy, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

Purpose and Intent: The definition given to the term "conveyance" is to make plain the meaning of the provisions touching recordation and is not designed to change the more restricted, technical meaning in which it is used in the books. Estate of Tuohy, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

Attorney General's Opinions

Notice of Right to Claim Construction Lien — Acknowledgment Not Required: A notice of right to claim a construction lien filed with a County Clerk and Recorder pursuant to 71-3-531 is not subject to the acknowledgment requirements of 70-21-203. 42 A.G. Op. 53 (1988).

70-21-302. Recording as constructive notice — effect of recording copy in other county.

Case Notes

Broad Chain of Title Concept Adopted: Recognizing that there are two lines of authority — the broad approach and narrow approach — on the question of whether a servitude created by a common grantor in the deed to the benefited parcel is in the chain of title of the burdened parcel, the Supreme Court adopted the broad approach and concluded that a prospective purchaser is on constructive notice not only of conveyances to the prior owners of the parcel, but also of conveyances from the prior owners of the parcel during each of their respective periods of ownership. Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154.

No Misrepresentation Regarding Property Encumbrances — Actual and Constructive Notice to Plaintiffs: It was not an error for the District Court to enforce a settlement agreement despite plaintiffs' allegation of misrepresentation by the defendants regarding property encumbrances. The claims of misrepresentation failed since the plaintiffs had actual notice of the mortgages in the purchase agreement on one parcel and in the warranty deed on another parcel. Alternatively, there was no misrepresentation since the mortgages were recorded, which gave the plaintiffs constructive notice. Hinderman v. Krivor, 2010 MT 230, 358 Mont. 111, 244 P.3d 306.

Ratification of Void Deeds — Authority of Agent to Convey Property — Title Properly Quieted: Defendant third party raised three challenges to a District Court's conclusion that deeds voided by forgery during transfer were nevertheless ratified by subsequent actions of the parties and contended that the court erred by quieting title to plaintiff. The first argument dealt with the fact that one of the parties never received proper written authority to convey the property to plaintiff, so ratification was voided under the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court noted that an agreement to sell an interest in property must be in writing and that an agent's authority to sell property must also be in writing. However, the agency relationship may arise either by precedent authorization or by subsequent ratification. In this case, the warranty deeds constituted subsequent written authority for conveyance of the property, so the statute of frauds was not violated for want of written authorization. The second argument was that the criteria for ratification were not satisfied, but after examining the chain of title, the Supreme Court found that the personal actions of the principal ratified the deed and that the criteria for ratification were satisfied. The third argument was that defendant was prejudiced as a third party by ratification, but that argument did not prevail because defendant could not have been prejudiced since defendant's interest in the property was invalid both prior to and after ratification and defendant could have become aware of the void deeds by conducting a title check and avoiding the problem. Lastly, title was properly quieted in plaintiff because defendants with prior interests in the property stipulated that they no longer claimed any right, title, or interest in the property. Plaintiff's deed was superior because it was the first to be recorded and had been ratified, and plaintiff was therefore entitled to have quiet title to the property. The District Court was affirmed. Erler v. Creative Fin. & Inv., LLC, 2009 MT 36, 349 M 207, 203 P3d 744 (2009). See also U.S. v. Heinszen, 206 US 370 (1907), Audit Serv., Inc. v. Constructive Notice of Owners of Property — Owners Could Have Been Joined in Litigation — Res Judicata Properly Applied: In 1976, the Halls purchased land from the Rennes that was entirely surrounded by land belonging to the Rennes and thereby landlocked from public roads. However, the warranty deed given by the Rennes described an easement over the Rennes' property south to Kagy Lane. In 1991, the Rennes conveyed the land surrounding the Hall property to Heckerman, subject to any interest of the Halls in the conveyed property. The Halls brought a quiet title action in District Court in 1996 to declare the title to their property and the easement granted by the Rennes and prevailed in that action. However, the easement granted in the judgment ran across land conveyed by the Rennes to the Cowdreys in 1976, and the Cowdreys were not parties to the Halls' quiet title action. The Halls then brought an action against Heckerman for a prescriptive easement or easement by necessity, and Heckerman moved to dismiss, claiming that res judicata applied. The District Court held, and the Supreme Court affirmed, citing Orlando v. Prewett, 236 M 478, 771 P2d 111 (1989), that res judicata applied because the Halls were on notice by virtue of this section as to whom the owners of the property surrounding their land were and could have included the Cowdreys in their 1996 quiet title action. Hall v. Heckerman, 2000 MT 300, 302 M 345, 15 P3d 869, 57 St. Rep. 1266 (2000).

Lack of Legal Description of Tracts in Covenant Amendment Not Fatal When Landowners Provided Actual Notice of Amendment: A supermajority of subdivision property owners authorized an amendment creating new and unexpected restrictions not contained or contemplated in the original declaration of restrictive covenants. Some landowners who disagreed with the amendment appealed, contending that it was invalid because it did not contain a legal description of the affected property. The District Court found the argument unpersuasive because the amendment referred to a previous amendment that did contain a legal description. The Supreme Court agreed, noting further that none of the appellants denied that they had actual notice of the amendment, so their claims of inadequate notice failed. Windemere Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McCue, 1999 MT 292, 297 M 77, 990 P2d 769, 56 St. Rep. 1173 (1999). See also Poncelet v. English, 243 M 481, 795 P2d 436, 47 St. Rep. 1342 (1990).

Title Insurer Not Obligated to Search City Engineer or Water Department Records — Public Records as Properly Recorded Documents — Reasonable Expectations Doctrine Inapplicable: The Millers sought to hold a title insurance company responsible for costs involved in relocating a neighbor's water and sewer lines that were discovered on the property. The lines were of record with the city engineer and the water department, but their existence was not recorded in the chain of title. The title insurance policy defined public records as "those records which by law impart constructive notice of matters relating to said land". The Supreme Court held that the definition was unambiguous and clearly related to records filed and docketed with the County Clerk and Recorder because it was proper recordation that imparted constructive notice of matters relating to the property. Nothing in Montana recordation law required the title insurer to search city engineer or water department records. For the same reason, the Millers' attempt to apply the reasonable expectations doctrine also failed because the policy did not insure against loss or damage by reason of "easements, or claims of easements, not shown by the public records". Miller v. Title Ins. Co. of Minn., 1999 MT 230, 296 M 115, 987 P2d 1151, 56 St. Rep. 908 (1999). See also Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co. v. Livengood, 1998 MT 329, 292 M 244, 970 P2d 1054, 55 St. Rep. 1336 (1998).

Granting Document Considered Actual and Constructive Notice of Easement: A granting document setting out the existence of a state road easement, received by McDonald at the time of purchase of the property, as well as language in the warranty deed referring to the certificate of survey on file, plainly outlining the easement and stating that the conveyance was subject to the easement, constituted actual and constructive notice to McDonald of the existence of the easement. Bridger v. Lake, 271 M 186, 896 P2d 406, 52 St. Rep. 395 (1995).

Recording of Revocation of Trust Agreement as Constructive Delivery: This section imparts constructive delivery of the contents of the revocation instrument. The recording statutes import notice to all interested parties in matters affecting title to real property. Therefore, all cotrustees received constructive delivery when a revocation of trust was recorded with the County Clerk and Recorder. Hauseman v. Koski, 259 M 498, 857 P2d 715, 50 St. Rep. 898 (1993).

Mistake in Reference to Encumbered Property Interest — Constructive Notice: A mortgage contained no error in the legal description of the land but did contain a mistake in its reference to the specific property interest encumbered. However, the mistake was held to be immaterial, and as a matter of law, defendants, as subsequent judgment lienholders, had constructive notice of plaintiff's prior recorded mortgage. When the specific property intended to be mortgaged can be identified from the language of the instrument itself or from information gained from an inquiry clearly suggested by the language of the instrument, a mistake in the reference to the encumbered property interest does not affect the validity of the instrument. Washington v. Slack, 249 M 56, 813 P2d 447, 48 St. Rep. 576 (1991), distinguishing Poncelet v. English, 243 M 481, 795 P2d 436 (1990), and Ely v. Hoida, 70 M 542, 226 P 525 (1924).

Risk Upon First Mortgagee to Use Care in Describing Property: The risk is upon the first mortgagee to use care in correctly and properly describing property to protect against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees. Poncelet v. English, 243 M 481, 795 P2d 436, 47 St. Rep. 1342 (1990).

Recording of First Page of Deed of Trust — Constructive Notice of Contents: The recording of the first page of a deed of trust as an abstract of conveyance gave constructive notice of its contents and terms, including the future advance clause. Serv. Funding, Inc. v. Craft, 234 M 431, 763 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 2030 (1988).

No Notice of Drainage System in Warranty Deed — No Trespass: Plaintiffs who were rightfully excavating ground they owned pursuant to a warranty deed that gave no notice of a drainage system belonging to a nearby supper club could not be found guilty of trespass in the absence of evidence of intentional intrusion on supper club property. Branstetter v. Beaumont Supper Club, Inc., 224 M 20, 727 P2d 933, 43 St. Rep. 1981 (1986).

Effect of Recording:

In a suit for partition, transferor claimed that several years before she had conveyed part of her interest in less than half of a quarter section and presented a recorded deed in support of her claim. Transferees' successors in interest claimed that transferor's actions and statements after the conveyance indicated that she had conveyed a part interest in the entire half of the quarter section. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's ruling in transferor's favor since under this section, any inconsistent actions by transferor are controlled by the contents of a recorded deed. Tillotsen v. Frazer, 199 M 342, 649 P2d 744, 39 St. Rep. 1442 (1982).

Where the deed under which one holds lands is of record and the grantee takes possession, such possession is referable to such deed, and a subsequent purchaser is relieved from further inquiry to ascertain whether any other or different claim is asserted. Baum v. N. Pac. Ry., 55 M 219, 175 P 872 (1918).

The record of the assignment of a mortgage is notice to a purchaser from the mortgagor, so that payments by him to the assignor are at his own risk. Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4, 108 Am. St. Rep. 598 (1905).

Notice of Covenants — Forfeiture — Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs purchased real property on a contract for deed from defendants, subject to restrictive covenants filed after the contract was drawn but before it was signed. Some months later the sellers sent the buyers notice of default, citing the covenants. The issues on appeal related to summary judgment. Under former Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the moving party must show he is entitled to summary judgment. The sellers were found to have met the burden inasmuch as the validity and genuineness of all the documents in question were admitted by both parties, along with the signatures and dates of the documents. The reference in the contract put all parties on constructive notice of the covenants. The buyers failed to carry their ensuing burden to show issues of material fact and, accordingly, granting of sellers' motion for partial summary judgment was upheld. The lower court's ruling denying the buyers' motion for summary judgment was reversed. The sellers' counterclaim on this motion had raised the issue of violation of the covenants by the buyers, but the buyers argued that summary judgment should have been granted because the remedy sought by the sellers (forfeiture) was improper. The Supreme Court held that when a violation of the covenants would not defeat the main objective or purpose of the contract, a remedy of forfeiture was not warranted. The case was remanded. Van Uden v. Hendricksen, 189 M 164, 615 P2d 220 (1980).

Ownership of Real Property: As against purchasers and lien creditors dealing with the owners of land on the faith of a recorded title and without notice that ownership is different from what appears on record, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that land conveyed to the grantees as individuals was held by them as partnership property. Robertson v. Robertson, 180 M 226, 590 P2d 113 (1978).

Recording of Restrictions: Declaration of restrictions constitutes a conveyance under 70-21-301, so that where residential restriction was filed with subdivision plat, it constituted constructive notice to subsequent purchaser who wanted to use land for commercial purposes. Kosel v. Stone, 146 M 218, 404 P2d 894 (1965).

Reservation of Royalty: Where plaintiff, seeking to quiet title, held premises under quitclaim deed from prior owner, he took title subject to all prior recordations or conveyances concerning the land in question, including reservation of royalty appearing on face of prior conveyances. Pluhar v. Guderjahn, 134 M 46, 328 P2d 129 (1958).

Fraud — Constructive Notice No Defense: Second mortgagee was chargeable with constructive notice of recorded first mortgage; he was not estopped, in action for attachment, from showing that second mortgage, given in reliance upon mortgagor's misrepresentation that property was unencumbered, was valueless. Bailey v. Hansen, 105 M 552, 74 P2d 438 (1937).

Effect of Actual Knowledge Though Unrecorded: One who takes a mortgage upon property with actual knowledge of an earlier though unrecorded one takes it subject thereto and will not be permitted, by placing his mortgage first on record, to gain priority over the earlier lien, even though the prior instrument is imperfect in itself or is defectively executed. Angus v. Mariner, 85 M 365, 278 P 996 (1929).

Constructive Notice to Whom: The record of an instrument is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers only and does not affect a prior purchaser though he has not acquired the legal title or made full payment of the purchase price. Piccolo v. Tanaka, 78 M 445, 253 P 890 (1927).

Description of the Property: In order to give a mortgagee priority as against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee, the mortgage must describe the land covered by it with sufficient accuracy to enable one examining the record to identify the land. Ely v. Hoida, 70 M 542, 226 P 525 (1924), followed in Poncelet v. English, 243 M 481, 795 P2d 436, 47 St. Rep. 1342 (1990).

Knowledge Presumed From Record: Where, after giving an oil and gas lease upon his land to one party, which lease was not recorded, the owner gave an option to purchase the land to another party subject to the lease, the option being recorded, purchaser of land before expiration of option was chargeable with constructive notice of the option and its contents and hence of the provision therein that it was subject to the lease. Purchaser was not an innocent purchaser without notice and therefore not entitled to an injunction to prevent the lessee from going upon the land for the purpose of exploration. Guerin v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 68 M 365, 218 P 949 (1923), distinguished in Ely v. Hoida, 70 M 542, 226 P 525 (1924).

Form of Instrument: Under this section, 1-5-106 (now repealed), and 70-21-304, a certificate of acknowledgment of a mortgage by husband and wife is not rendered insufficient to charge a subsequent purchaser with notice by reason of the fact that, in the statement that the parties "severally acknowledged __he__ executed the same", the blanks before and after the word "he" were not filled so as to make the word "they". Trerise v. Bottego, 32 M 244, 79 P 1057, 108 Am. St. Rep. 521 (1905).

Oral Agreements: Oral agreements affecting the title to real property, being incapable of record, are not within the express language of this section and 70-21-304. Mullins v. Butte Hardware Co., 25 M 525, 65 P 1004, 87 Am. St. Rep. 430 (1901).

Case Notes

Ratification of Forged Deed Considered in Equity: Commercial property in Hamilton was transferred to multiple parties in successive transactions, resulting in competing claims to the property. Some of the transactions involved fraud or forgery. Plaintiff filed a complaint against numerous parties that were involved in the transactions and sought to quiet title to the property. The District Court concluded that the documents of conveyance to three of the parties were forged and therefore void ab initio and that no rights were transferred to any of those parties. The court found that two of the parties had ratified the forged conveyances by their subsequent actions and that because plaintiff was the first to record a document of transfer, plaintiff was entitled to quiet title. One defendant appealed on grounds that a forged deed cannot be ratified, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A forged deed is void and transfers no rights, even if the subsequent purchaser is bona fide. Thus, the three deeds were void ab initio and plaintiff's interest in the property was not saved by 70-20-404, even though plaintiff parted with value, had no notice of the forgery, and duly recorded the appropriate transfer documents. However, in order to provide a legal remedy in the appropriate case, principles of equity and justice compel recognition of ratification, so a forged deed may be considered in equity. Erler v. Creative Fin. & Inv., LLC, 2009 MT 36, 349 M 207, 203 P3d 744 (2009), distinguishing Hames v. Polson, 123 M 469, 215 P2d 950 (1950), and In re Estate of Griffin, 248 M 472, 812 P2d 1256 (1991).

State Law Controlling as to Ownership for Purposes of Federal Drug Forfeiture of Real Property — Right, Title, and Interest Found in Daughter of Convicted Drug Dealer — Daughter's Forfeiture Reversed: Victor "Big Vic" Nava was convicted in federal court of federal criminal offenses based upon his dealing in methamphetamines. The government also obtained forfeiture of two pieces of real estate under 21 U.S.C. 853, based upon the jury's conclusion that the property was used in the drug dealing and the District Court's conclusion that Victoria, daughter of Big Vic, who was record owner of the two properties, had failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that she had held right, title, and interest to the properties. For this reason, the District Court denied Victoria's motion to set aside the forfeiture. The court of appeals held that title must be determined by state law and not federal common law or else ownership for state law purposes would be thrown into question and "havoc" at the state courthouse (with the recordation of property rights) would be the result. The court of appeals held that Victoria's evidence that she had received the property in a purchase or a gift from her father, held record title to the property, lived at the property, and taken out a second mortgage on the property was sufficient against the evidence by the government that Victoria was unemployed, that some witnesses thought her father owned the property, that Victor had made a statement in a plea bargain that he owned it, and that Victor had made some tax payments on the property for Victoria. The court of appeals therefore reversed the forfeiture order of the District Court. U.S. v. Nava, 404 F3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2005).

Failure to Raise Conveyance Voidness Claim in Motion for Summary Judgment — Waiver of Claim on Appeal: Defendant claimed on appeal that under this section, good title had been claimed to a disputed tract of real property through first recording. Although defendant had raised the argument in principle before the District Court in one paragraph of a reply brief, defendant failed to cite any legal authority for the argument when requesting summary judgment. The District Court was not made aware of this section and never ruled on its applicability. Defendant waived the right to any claim under that section. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

Possession of Real Property Insufficient to Grant Title Against Good Faith Purchasers — No Adverse Possession Shown: In 1989, the Luloffs bought part of a ranch from the Manweilers by a deed that excluded "Tract B". The Luloffs mistakenly assumed that Tract B was the part of the ranch that had been occupied by the Blackburns for approximately 4 years. When the Luloffs later discovered that Tract B was another part of the ranch, they brought an action to have the Blackburns evicted, and the District Court granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was correctly granted because there was no contract between the Manweilers and the Blackburns satisfying the statute of frauds for the sale of the property to the Blackburns. The Supreme Court held that the Blackburns' mere possession was insufficient against the Luloffs, who had purchased the ranch as bona fide purchasers in good faith, because they were without notice of any claim of title by the Blackburns. The Supreme Court noted that the Blackburns could not make a claim of title because they had mere possession, which did not satisfy the requirements for adverse possession because the Blackburns had not paid taxes upon the property. Luloff v. Blackburn, 274 M 64, 906 P2d 189, 52 St. Rep. 1124 (1995).

Mistake in Reference to Encumbered Property Interest — Constructive Notice: A mortgage contained no error in the legal description of the land but did contain a mistake in its reference to the specific property interest encumbered. However, the mistake was held to be immaterial, and as a matter of law, defendants, as subsequent judgment lienholders, had constructive notice of plaintiff's prior recorded mortgage. When the specific property intended to be mortgaged can be identified from the language of the instrument itself or from information gained from an inquiry clearly suggested by the language of the instrument, a mistake in the reference to the encumbered property interest does not affect the validity of the instrument. Washington v. Slack, 249 M 56, 813 P2d 447, 48 St. Rep. 576 (1991), distinguishing Poncelet v. English, 243 M 481, 795 P2d 436 (1990), and Ely v. Hoida, 70 M 542, 226 P 525 (1924).

Fraudulent Conveyances: In determining the date of transfer of an alleged fraudulent conveyance under the Federal Bankruptcy Act, the date of transfer of an assignment of a note and mortgage was the date of recordation and not the date upon which the transfer was effective between the parties since it is not until recordation that subsequent transferees or purchasers could not acquire an interest superior to that of the original transferee. Raucci v. Davis, 161 M 270, 505 P2d 887 (1973).

Unrecorded Easement: In condemnation proceeding, refusal to instruct in words of statute was error where owner of adjacent land claimed compensation for unrecorded easement in condemned land. St. Highway Comm'n v. Robertson & Blossom, Inc., 151 M 205, 441 P2d 181 (1968).

Donee Not Good Faith Purchaser: Where a son receives property from his father as a gift, he cannot be considered a good faith purchaser for a valuable consideration within meaning of this section. Hughes v. Melby, 135 M 415, 340 P2d 511 (1958).

Estoppel to Record Gift Deed: Where the father executed a deed of a one-third interest in his ranch to his son as a gift but did not record or deliver such deed, then placed the ranch with a real estate broker with the power to sell, the broker and his purchaser could rely on the record ownership, and both the son and his father were estopped to defeat them by a recordation subsequent to the contract of purchase. Hughes v. Melby, 135 M 415, 340 P2d 511 (1958).

Existing Legal Obligation to Support — Not Good Faith Purchaser: While an existing legal obligation, such as rests upon children to support their indigent parents to the extent of their ability, under 40-6-214 and 40-6-301, is a good consideration for a promise under 28-2-802, "to an extent corresponding with the extent of the obligation, but no further or otherwise", that is not to say that it is such a consideration as to make defendant a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, so as to entitle him to plaintiff's property under this section. Kelly v. Grainey, 113 M 520, 129 P2d 619 (1942).

Good Faith Purchaser: A purchaser in good faith is one who at the time of his purchase advances a new consideration, surrenders some security, or does some other act which leaves him in a worse position if his purchase should be set aside. Kelly v. Grainey, 113 M 520, 129 P2d 619 (1942).

Where Recording Not Substitute for Actual Notice to Change Permissive Possession to Hostile: Although the recording of deeds to supply additional security for bank loan to sister of plaintiff would have constituted such notice as would protect a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration whose deed had been recorded first under this section, it could not take the place of actual notice to the owner of the property, involved in a quiet title action in which the defendant, another sister of plaintiff, relied upon the doctrine of adverse possession of her grantor, that the permissive nature of the possession had been changed into a hostile one. Kelly v. Grainey, 113 M 520, 129 P2d 619 (1942).

Knowledge of Royalty Assignments in Subsequent Leaseholder: Where the holder of a federal oil and prospecting permit assigned a number of royalty interests in the lands covered by it, which assignments were duly recorded, and he thereafter transferred the permit to another who secured leases on the lands, the latter took the leases subject to and with knowledge of the assignments of royalty interests, under this recording statute. Aronow v. Bishop, 107 M 317, 86 P2d 644 (1938).

Definition of "Encumbrancer": This section does not operate in favor of an attaching creditor as against a contract of sale and the assignment thereof not recorded prior to levy of the attachment, the term "encumbrancer" not being broad enough to include such creditor. Stauffacher v. Great Falls Pub. Serv. Co., 99 M 324, 43 P2d 647 (1935); Short v. Karnop, 84 M 276, 275 P 278 (1929).

Effect of Recording in General:

A real estate mortgage extension agreement executed under 71-1-203, before maturity of the last of a series of mortgage notes, was not recorded until after the period of extension had expired. Two years prior thereto the property had been conveyed to another, subject to the mortgage, the deed, however, not being recorded until some 6 weeks after recordation of the extension agreement. It was held, in mortgage foreclosure action, that the extension agreement, having been valid and first placed of record, took priority over the deed, even assuming that the vendee was a subsequent purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration. Hastings v. Wise, 91 M 430, 8 P2d 636 (1932).

Under this section it is presumed that the holder of the prior recorded title acquired the entire estate, unless he had or was charged with notice. Custer Consol. Mines Co. v. Helena, 52 M 35, 156 P 1090 (1916).

This section unequivocally makes all unrecorded deeds and conveyances except leases for 1 year void as to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers in good faith and for a valuable consideration. Sheldon v. Powell, 31 M 249, 78 P 491, 107 Am. St. Rep. 429 (1904).

General Requisites: To entitle a subsequent purchaser of real property to protection against prior conveyances under this section, he must not only have purchased for a valuable consideration but his conveyance must have been first duly recorded. Hastings v. Wise, 91 M 430, 8 P2d 636 (1932).

Creditor of Former Owner — Attachment Before Transfer Recorded: In an action to quiet title to real property, it was held that where a former owner of the property had no interest in the property at the time an attachment was levied against it by his creditor, the latter took nothing thereby as against the then owner, and his contention that under this section, since prior instruments affecting the title had not been placed of record before levy of the attachment, the title of plaintiff was subject to the attachment may not be upheld, under the above rules. Short v. Karnop, 84 M 276, 275 P 278 (1929).

"Other Conditional Estate": Under the rule of ejusdem generis, words "other conditional estate" used in this section mean such estates of the nature previously mentioned in the statute, i.e., estates created by the owner of the property or by assignment thereof. Short v. Karnop, 84 M 276, 275 P 278 (1929).

Constructive Notice of Lease in Option to Purchase: Where, after giving an oil and gas lease upon his land to one party, which lease was not recorded, the owner gave an option to purchase the land to another party subject to the lease, the option being recorded, plaintiff who purchased the land before the expiration of the option was chargeable with constructive notice of the option and its contents and hence of the provision therein that it was subject to the lease, and in the absence of inquiry from the lessee, was not an innocent purchaser without notice and therefore not entitled to an injunction to prevent the lessee from going upon the land for the purpose of exploration. Guerin v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 68 M 365, 218 P 949 (1923), distinguished in Ely v. Hoida, 70 M 542, 226 P 525 (1924).

Inquiry of Person in Possession — Purchaser in Good Faith: Where plaintiff in an action in unlawful detainer, before purchasing land had consulted the records and found that the then occupant was holding under an expired lease, and upon inquiry was informed by the latter than he was so holding and paying rent annually, he was a purchaser in good faith and without notice of defendant's claim as a life tenant under a letter from the owner to defendant that he could remain in possession so long as he used the premises for a certain purpose and paid the rent. Stoltze Land Co. v. Westberg, 63 M 38, 206 P 407 (1922).

Case Notes

Judgment Lien Against Husband's Property Not Supportive of Execution Against Interests of Second Wife and Children — Property Subject to Prior Judgments Only: Following dissolution of his marriage, Ken Jones purchased real property in 1986. In May 1987, he executed a homestead declaration on the property pursuant to 70-32-105. In July 1987, he conveyed the property by quitclaim deed, with one-half interest to himself and one-half to his second wife and their two daughters in equal shares. In January 1988, his second wife also filed a declaration of homestead. Also in 1988, Ken declared bankruptcy. As a result of that filing, a dissolution decree property settlement provision that he pay certain sums to his first wife Rita was redesignated as a maintenance obligation. Ken appealed that order, and while the appeal was pending, Ken and his second wife conveyed the real property to Poindexter. Rita executed upon one-half of the sale proceeds, which Poindexter had withheld to satisfy Ken's past-due maintenance and support, but $2,113.53 remained due on the underlying judgment. Rita moved for an order of sale of the property so that she could recover the remaining maintenance plus her attorney fees. The District Court determined that Ken's homestead exemption was abandoned when he sold the property to Poindexter and that because Rita's judgment liens had never been removed or extinguished, the liens attached and encumbered the property at the time the homestead exemption was abandoned and thus the property was conveyed to Poindexter subject to the liens and the execution order. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed because: (1) Rita had already executed on Ken's half of the sale proceeds and further execution would be against the interests of the second wife and daughters and was therefore unsupported; and (2) the maintenance payments became due and judgments were entered after Ken sold the property. Under this section, a purchaser takes property subject only to prior judgments; therefore, execution was inappropriate on the property for judgments entered after Poindexter's purchase. In re Marriage of Jones v. Poindexter, 253 M 408, 833 P2d 1044, 49 St. Rep. 501 (1992).

Recording Not Condition Precedent to Judgment Becoming a Lien: This section and 7-4-2613 define the effect of recording a final judgment as far as imparting constructive notice is concerned, but they are not controlling as to when the judgment becomes a lien. It is 25-9-301 which determines when the lien becomes effective. The lien attaches when the judgment is docketed, and recordation of the judgment is not made a condition precedent to its becoming a lien. Gaines v. Van Demark, 106 M 1, 74 P2d 454 (1937).

1991 Amendment: In (1), in three places, substituted "1991" for "1983".

1983 Amendment: In (1), substituted "October 1, 1983" for "October 1, 1981" and, in two places, substituted "January 1, 1983" for "January 1, 1981".

1981 Amendment: Substituted "pending as of October 1, 1981" for "now pending" near the beginning of (1); changed "1973" to "1981" after "January 1" near the beginning of (1); substituted "recorded" for "copied into the proper book kept" after "January 1, 1981" near the middle of (1); inserted "technical" after "notwithstanding any" near the middle of (1); deleted language relating to instruments acknowledged by corporate officers after "any such certificate" near the end of (1) (see sec. 1, Ch. 147, L. 1973, for former text); substituted "January 1, 1981" for "that date" at the end of (1).

CHAPTER 22
CORNER RECORDATION ACT
SURVEYS AND COORDINATES

Chapter Case Notes

Ambiguous Deeds of Conveyance — Intent of Parties Properly Considered: A dispute arose in a quiet title action based on subdivision surveys that differed from the original government survey. The District Court held that the property belonged to defendants, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Inconsistencies between the original plat and the location of the subdivision surveyor's monuments created an ambiguity. References to quarter section lines and quarter corners in the original survey were definite and ascertainable, and the subdivision surveyor's improperly placed monuments were considered false particulars frustrating the conveyance. The District Court properly applied Brown's Boundary Control and Legal Principles (4th Ed. 1995) to determine that the subdivision surveyor's monuments conflicted with the government's original monument and correctly considered the intent of the parties in interpreting the surveys and conveyances. Further, the original plat was part of the deeds of conveyance in defendants' chain of title, so the District Court correctly allowed the certificate of dedication into evidence. Olson v. Jude, 2003 MT 186, 316 M 438, 73 P3d 809 (2003).

Use of Original Survey for Reference — Proper Determination of Tract Boundary: A dispute arose in a quiet title action based on subdivision surveys that differed from the original government survey. When surveyors use corner sections and lines to base measurements and plot tracts, it is essential that they properly identify and authenticate the original monument. Original corners established by a government survey, if those corners can be found, or places where they were originally established, if those places can be definitely determined, are conclusive without regard to whether they were located correctly or not and must remain the true corners or monuments by which to determine the boundaries. The footsteps of the original surveyor should be followed, so far as discoverable on the ground by monuments, and it is immaterial if the lines run by the original surveyor are incorrect. Olson v. Jude, 2003 MT 186, 316 M 438, 73 P3d 809 (2003). See also Vaught v. McClymond, 116 M 542, 155 P2d 612 (1945), and Helehan v. Ueland, 223 M 228, 725 P2d 1192 (1986).

Survey Services Provided — No Breach of Contract — Judicial Determination of Survey Locations Not Warranted: Property developers contracted with professional surveyors to survey several parcels of property into 20-acre lots. A subsequent unofficial government survey concluded that the results of the contracted work may have been in error, resulting in a potential encroachment of adjacent property. The developers brought an action for breach of contract, contending that if the corners were located where the government survey located them, some lots would be less than the 20-acre units they contracted for. The District Court properly found no breach of contract because, taking into consideration the inexact nature of surveying generally and the fact that the surveyors relied on approved standards and the best available information, the developers in fact received the services they contracted for. Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. v. Burgess, 255 M 341, 843 P2d 341, 49 St. Rep. 1051 (1992).

Use of Approved Surveying Source and Best Evidence Available — Standard of Care Met: Surveyors who presented evidence that they complied with rules and regulations set out in the approved source, in this case the 1973 Manual of Surveying Instructions, and that they used the best evidence obtainable in establishing and recording corners and survey information did not breach the standard of care required of registered land surveyors. Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. v. Burgess, 255 M 341, 843 P2d 341, 49 St. Rep. 1051 (1992).

Government Survey Conclusive: The location of corners and lines established by federal government survey is conclusive and the true corners are where the U.S. surveyors in fact established them. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987), citing Stephens v. Hurly, 172 M 269, 563 P2d 546 (1977).

Conflicting Surveys: At a trial between two adjacent landowners over the exact location of the boundary, conflicting findings of several surveyors were submitted into evidence. The District Court accepted the defendant's survey, and the Supreme Court affirmed, finding substantial credible evidence that defendant's surveyor was not only experienced but also an experienced surveyor of the property in question, having surveyed the same section line in 1949 and 1976. Helehan v. Ueland, 223 M 228, 725 P2d 1192, 43 St. Rep. 1679 (1986).

Part 1
Corner Recordation Act

Part Case Notes

No Error in District Court Using Plat to Determine Right-of-Way Width When Nearby Boundary Markers Available: When no boundary markers were found marking a right-of-way at issue, the District Court did not err in determining the city's right-of-way was 60 feet in width. Although a surveyor tried to recreate where the boundary markers would have been based on nearby markers and other factors, resulting in a wider right-of-way, the District Court relied instead on another surveying expert's opinion, based on a plat showing the street's width as 60 feet. The Supreme Court noted that the original boundary markers take precedence over plats only when the markers were set and can be located by a subsequent surveyor. The District Court's conclusion was further supported by other surveying principles, a lack of other evidence that the road was intended to be wider than 60 feet, and the practice of subdividers fixing definite road widths to maximize area for lots. Wohl v. Missoula, 2013 MT 46, 369 Mont. 108, 300 P.3d 1119.

Natural and Artificial Boundaries Prevail: In this action to quiet title, the boundary line between the parties' properties, based upon a resurvey that located the original corner monuments, was correctly determined. The general rule is that courses and distances must yield to natural and artificial monuments. Bollinger v. Hollingsworth, 227 M 454, 739 P2d 962, 44 St. Rep. 1228 (1987).

70-22-204. Description of location.

Compiler's Comments

1987 Amendment: Inserted (1) providing that the position of the survey station on the designated system of plane coordinates be considered a complete, legal, and satisfactory location description; and in (2), before "coordinate", substituted "NAD 27" for "above".

70-22-205. Technical description of zones.

Compiler's Comments

1987 Amendment: In lead-in, after "coordinate", substituted "systems NAD 27 and NAD 83" for "system" and after "by" inserted "the national ocean survey/national geodetic survey (formerly"; in (1), (2), and (3), after "system", inserted "NAD 27"; near end of (1), after "parallel", substituted "47°" for "44°"; near end of (3), after "parallel", substituted "47°" for "44°"; inserted (4) describing and outlining the origin of coordinates for the Montana coordinate system NAD 83; and deleted former (2) that described position of Montana coordinate system marked on the ground by triangulation or traverse stations.

70-22-206. Conformity to standards required for use of coordinates in recorded instrument.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 494 in first sentence near beginning after "coordinate" deleted reference to system NAD 27, after "coordinates have been" deleted "established in conformity with the national prescribed standards for third-order class II horizontal control surveys and provided that these surveys have been", substituted "first-order or higher accuracy horizontal control points" for "first- or second-order horizontal control stations", and substituted "as part of the national spatial reference system" for "in the national network of geodetic control and are within 3 miles of said land boundaries. Standards of accuracy and specifications apply for first-, second-, and third-order geodetic surveying as prepared and published by the federal geodetic control committee (FGCC) of the United States department of commerce or its successors. Publication of the existing control stations or acceptance with intent to publish newly established control stations by the national ocean survey/national geodetic survey constitutes evidence of adherence to FGCC specifications" and at end inserted last sentence that read: "Public land or deed records presented for recording that purport to define the position of a point on a land boundary based on coordinates from the Montana coordinate system NAD 83 must contain a statement that identifies the first-order or higher accuracy control stations used in the survey, the specific NAD 83 datum adjustment tag of the coordinates used, and the type of equipment and methods used to perform the survey"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

1987 Amendment: In first sentence, after "Montana coordinate", substituted "systems NAD 27 and NAD 83" for "system" and after "unless" substituted remainder of section describing establishment and publication of coordinates according to federal specifications for "such point is within one-half mile of a triangulation or traverse station established in conformity with the standards prescribed in 70-22-205, provided that said one-half mile limitation may be modified by a duly authorized state agency to meet local conditions".

70-22-207. Use of term Montana coordinate system limited.

Compiler's Comments

1987 Amendment: In middle of first sentence, after "system", inserted "NAD 27 north, central, or south zone" or "Montana coordinate system NAD 83""; and made minor changes in phraseology.

70-22-208. Public land survey description to prevail.

Compiler's Comments

1987 Amendment: At end of section, after "record", deleted "and in the event of any conflict, the description by reference to the subdivision, line, or corner of the United States public land surveys shall prevail over the description by coordinates".

Case Notes

Government Survey Conclusive: The location of corners and lines established by federal government survey is conclusive and the true corners are where the U.S. surveyors in fact established them. CHAPTER 23
UNIT OWNERSHIP ACT — CONDOMINIUMS

Chapter Case Notes

Property Within Certificate of Survey but Not Within Condominium Declaration Not Subject to Declaration or Bylaws: Pursuant to 70-23-103, Big Sky Camper Village, Inc., filed a declaration that submitted Tract I-A to the Unit Ownership Act and allowed Big Sky Camper Village, Inc., to expand the number of condominium units in its development within 10 years. Additional lands within certificate of survey (COS) 1605 were at various later times also submitted to the declaration by amendment. Hidden Village, Inc. (HVI), the successor in interest of Big Sky Camper Village, sought to construct improvements on property adjacent to the Big Sky Hidden Village Condominium, but the owners' association, Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Association, brought an action to prevent development without its permission, claiming that all the land within COS 1605 was subject to the 10-year limitation contained in the original declaration. The Supreme Court held that only a declaration and not a COS can submit land to the Unit Ownership Act and that only the original declaration and its subsequent amendments determine the land subject to the Act. The Supreme Court therefore held that the limitation on expansion contained in the declaration applied only to land subject to the declaration and not to other property outside the declaration but shown on the COS. Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Hidden Village, Inc., 276 M 268, 915 P2d 845, 53 St. Rep. 379 (1996).

Apartment Building — Implied Equitable Servitude: There can be implied reservations or grants of easement by necessity. Where high-rise condominium was constructed and apartments therein sold under plan whereby corporate builders sold individual apartments to suitable applicants but management corporation retained ownership of building and deed between the two corporations reserved no easements, an implied equitable servitude attached to transfers of apartments in question, requiring that they be used for residential purposes only. Case Notes

Carport Not Considered Part of Home — Privacy Standard Inapplicable to DUI Search of Condominium Carport: Large was arrested for misdemeanor DUI while seated in her running car that was parked in the carport outside her condominium. Large moved to suppress the evidence because she was arrested at night at her home for a misdemeanor committed elsewhere, in violation of 46-6-105. She also contended that the arrest was in violation of her right to privacy. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a carport may be structurally contiguous with the rest of a private house or dwelling, presence in a carport does not equate to presence in the home, and although lot lines do convey certain concrete ownership rights, the right to be free from misdemeanor arrest at night is reserved for the home, not coterminous property appurtenant to the home. Further, under 61-8-101, ways of the state open to the public include parking areas and other public or private places adapted for public travel that are in common use by the public. Large could not be considered to be in her home while sitting in a car parked in the common-area parking lot in her condominium complex where officers could see what was readily visible to any visitor without being overly intrusive. Thus, Large had no reasonable expectation of privacy that prohibited her arrest in her own carport, nor did a violation of 46-6-105 occur. Whitefish v. Large, 2003 MT 322, 318 M 310, 80 P3d 427 (2003). See also St. v. Hubbel, 286 M 200, 951 P2d 971 (1997).

Property Within Certificate of Survey but Not Within Condominium Declaration Not Subject to Declaration or Bylaws: Pursuant to 70-23-103, Big Sky Camper Village, Inc., filed a declaration that submitted Tract I-A to the Unit Ownership Act and allowed Big Sky Camper Village, Inc., to expand the number of condominium units in its development within 10 years. Additional lands within certificate of survey (COS) 1605 were at various later times also submitted to the declaration by amendment. Hidden Village, Inc. (HVI), the successor in interest of Big Sky Camper Village, sought to construct improvements on property adjacent to the Big Sky Hidden Village Condominium, but the owners' association, Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Association, brought an action to prevent development without its permission, claiming that all the land within COS 1605 was subject to the 10-year limitation contained in the original declaration. The Supreme Court held that only a declaration and not a COS can submit land to the Unit Ownership Act and that only the original declaration and its subsequent amendments determine the land subject to the Act. The Supreme Court therefore held that the limitation on expansion contained in the declaration applied only to land subject to the declaration and not to other property outside the declaration but shown on the COS. Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Hidden Village, Inc., 276 M 268, 915 P2d 845, 53 St. Rep. 379 (1996).

Right of Third Party to Use Water and Sewer Lines Under Condominium Property — Indicia of Ownership Determinative: Big Sky Camper Village, Inc., filed a declaration that submitted Tract I-A to the Unit Ownership Act and allowed Big Sky Camper Village, Inc., to expand the number of condominium units in its development within 10 years. Hidden Village, Inc. (HVI), the successor in interest of Big Sky Camper Village, sought to construct improvements on property adjacent to the Big Sky Hidden Village Condominium and to use the existing water and sewer lines for the new improvements. The owners' association, Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Association, brought an action to prevent development without its permission, claiming that the water and sewer lines sought to be used by HVI were the common property of the Association for the exclusive use of the Association and could not be used without permission of the Association. However, the Supreme Court found that the water and sewer lines were constructed and maintained by third parties, a water delivery company and a water and sewer district, and that the Association asserted ownership but provided no evidence of indicia of ownership. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the Association could not interfere with or control the hookup and servicing of HVI on the water and sewer lines used by the members of the Association. Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Hidden Village, Inc., 276 M 268, 915 P2d 845, 53 St. Rep. 379 (1996).

Developers as "Unit Owners" and the "Association": Until the final declaration is filed, those who are the fee owners of the condominium project are the fee owners of the units of the project and thus "unit owners". As such, these persons are the parties contemplated by statute to sign and file the final declaration. As "unit owners" they are the "association" who must adopt bylaws and whose officers must certify the bylaws, such certificate to be recorded simultaneously with the final declaration. In the present case, the developers of the project were such parties and did so validly file the final declaration and bylaws. Jordan v. Elizabethan Manor, 181 M 424, 593 P2d 1049 (1979).

Case Notes

No Express Warranties Found in Repair Contracts, Protective Covenants, and Preliminary Declaration: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of express warranties in failing to originally construct and later repair construction defects in fireplaces in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky, Montana, in accordance with applicable fire and building codes. The plaintiffs based their claim of express warranty upon the repair contracts, claiming that the contracts called for the repairs to be done according to applicable plumbing, electrical, and building codes. Plaintiffs also based their claim of express warranty on protective covenants that require compliance with the same codes and on the preliminary declaration for the condominiums that required compliance with those codes. The plaintiffs contended that the declaration ran with the land because it had to be recorded. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, dismissing Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly found that no express warranties existed. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Part 4
Nature of the Ownership Interest

Part Case Notes

Lack of Membership in Homeowners' Association — Insufficient Standing to Sue Association — Lack of District Court Jurisdiction Affirmed: Edwards and other plaintiffs sued Burke and others for allegedly illegal fencing of tract 3, property commonly owned by a homeowners' association. The District Court dismissed the suit for lack of jurisdiction, ruling that Edwards was not a member of the homeowners' association, had no ownership interest in tract 3, and therefore had no standing to bring the action. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that in as much as Edwards was not a tenant in common with the members of Burke's homeowners' association, he had no standing to sue. The Supreme Court, citing Rehder v. Rankin, 91 NW 2d 399 (Iowa 1958), and in part following and in part distinguishing Winchell v. Dept. of State Lands, 262 M 328, 865 P2d 249 (1993), which held that because an unincorporated association cannot hold property, the members of the association hold the property in place of the association, said, in dicta, that the association could not hold title to the tract 3 common property. However, the Supreme Court said that whether the association or members of the association owned the property made no difference because Edwards was not even a member of the homeowners' association. Although Edwards argued that he now owns land that would have made him a member of the association, his ownership interest in the common property at issue in the case is, according to the Rehder decision, only one of beneficial ownership caused by his potential membership in the homeowners' association, and he still was not a member of the association or, if ever a member, was divested of his membership when the association's articles changed. Without a sufficient interest in the association's common property by virtue of association membership, Edwards had no standing to bring the action regarding fencing of the common property, and the District Court therefore had no jurisdiction over the action. Edwards v. Burke, 2004 MT 350, 324 M 358, 102 P3d 1271 (2004).

CHAPTER 24
RESIDENTIAL LANDLORD AND TENANT ACT OF 1977

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Uniform Act: The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 is a substantial adoption of the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act as approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, but it contains numerous variations, omissions, and additional matters from the Uniform Act. The commissioners' comments to sections of the Uniform Act are included under corresponding sections of the Montana Act when there is substantial similarity between the sections.

Chapter Case Notes

Fire Protection Services Not Required of Mobile Home Court Owners: Appellant claimed that the owners of a mobile home court violated The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 (similar to The Montana Residential Mobile Home Lot Rental Act) by failing to provide fire protection services. While 70-24-303 requires all common areas to be kept in a clean and safe condition and 70-24-105 extends the principles of law and equity relating to safety and fire prevention to the Act, absent the existence between the parties of any contractual obligation to provide fire protection services and absent proof of a statutory or common-law duty to provide those services, the complaint was properly dismissed. Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989).

Oral Contract for Purchase of House — Part Performance — Statute of Frauds Inapplicable — No Refund to Purchasers on Default: Defendant agreed to sell home to friends upon a $10,000 downpayment and assumption of defendant's loan. Plaintiffs did not qualify for assumption, so defendant prepared lease for plaintiffs' signature. They refused to sign because it was not a contract for deed. Defendant allowed plaintiffs to take occupancy, and they made sporadic payments for 4 years. Defendant's patience waned when the bank exercised acceleration provision for delinquencies. Plaintiffs sued for refund of payments. The court found an oral contract for deed. The Statute of Frauds was inapplicable because defendant was, at all times, willing to effect sale and transfer of the home. He was not required to refund plaintiffs' payments. Since no lease was ever signed and no rental relationship created, landlord and tenant law was inapplicable. Hayes v. Hartelius, 215 M 391, 697 P2d 1349, 42 St. Rep. 457 (1985).

Availability of Wrongful Death Remedy Under Former Law: The defendants in this wrongful death and survival action owned a rental house leased to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's husband died of an electrical shock received through the plumbing of the house. The plaintiff appealed the granting of a summary judgment motion in favor of the defendants. The Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 was adopted after this case arose, so its adoption of the doctrine of implied warranty of habitability was inapplicable. The Supreme Court here examined case law prior to the new statute and overruled a holding in the Dier case that if the landlord fails to repair, after notice, the tenant may himself repair, within a certain limit, or move out; but he has no redress in damages for injury to person or property consequent upon the landlord's failure to repair. That holding was not applicable to cases involving tenant suits for personal injuries against a landlord. Citing Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., the court said that it would be patently unconstitutional to deny a tenant all causes of action for personal injuries or wrongful death arising out of the alleged negligent management of rental premises by a landlord. A repair and deduct statute provides no alternative remedy for damages caused by personal injury or wrongful death. The duty of care in section 58-607, R.C.M. 1947, now 27-1-701, was held applicable. This is a duty to exercise ordinary care in the management of the premises to avoid exposing persons thereon to an unreasonable risk of harm, subject to the defenses of contributory negligence or assumption of risk. Corrigan v. Janney, 192 M 99, 626 P2d 838, 38 St. Rep. 545 (1981).

Part 1
General Provisions

70-24-101. Short title.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 1.101 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

This Act concerns landlord-tenant relationships under rental agreements for residential purposes. The Act does not apply to rental agreements made for commercial, industrial, agricultural or any purpose other than residential.

70-24-102. Purposes — liberal construction to promote.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 1.102 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

Existing landlord-tenant law in the United States, save as modified by statute or judicial interpretation, is a product of English common law developed within an agricultural society at a time when doctrines of promissory contract were unrecognized. Thus, the landlord-tenant relationship was viewed as conveyance of a lease-hold estate and the covenants of the parties generally independent. These doctrines are inappropriate to modern urban conditions and inexpressive of the vital interests of the parties and the public which the law must protect.

This Act recognizes the modern tendency to treat performance of certain obligations of the parties as interdependent.

Liberal construction of this Act and its application for promotion of its underlying purposes and policies will permit development by the courts in light of unforeseen and new circumstances and practices. However, proper construction of the Act requires that its interpretation and application be limited to its reason.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 1.301 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

[Subsection (7)] Accordingly, in the case of an active trust where all the duties and powers of management inure to the trustee and the rights of the beneficiary are limited to the receipt of income from the trust estate and the beneficiary has no right to the present use and enjoyment of the property, the trustee would be considered an owner but the beneficiary would not. In the case of the so-called "naked title" trust encountered in some jurisdictions where the trustee holds legal title but all powers of management and direction are vested in the beneficiary, the trustee, as the holder of legal title, would be considered an owner; the beneficiary, since he has a right under the trust agreement to present use and enjoyment of the property, would also be considered an owner. The same result would be reached if the trust were revocable at the direction of the beneficiary. In the case of property held in the name of a nominee or straw the beneficial owner would be considered an owner.

[Subsection (9)] Agricultural leases are excluded from operation of the Act ([70-24-104]). Inclusion of "grounds, areas and facilities held out for the use of tenants" does not alter the exclusion.

[Subsection (11)] "Rental agreement" will thus include the original agreement between landlord and tenant as well as any modification and all valid rules and regulations concerning use and occupancy as provided in Section 3.102.

[Subsection (12)] This Act provides lesser rights to a roomer as distinguished from the tenant of a dwelling unit. The definition requires certain facilities to be provided by the landlord. This requirement is not met by provision of the same by the tenant.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 267 in definition of dwelling unit in second sentence after "park" substituted "and rents" for "but does not rent" and after "means" deleted "the space rented and not"; in definition of landlord deleted former (a)(ii) that read: "(ii) a mobile home park"; deleted definition of mobile home owner that read: ""Mobile home owner" means the owner of a manufactured mobile home dwelling unit entitled under a rental agreement to occupy a mobile home park space in a mobile home park"; deleted definition of mobile home park that read: ""Mobile home park" means a trailer court as defined in 50-52-101"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 401 in definition of case of emergency, in second sentence and near end after "in which the tenant", inserted "or landlord"; and made minor changes in style.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 18 at end of (8) substituted "50-52-101" for "50-52-102"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 222 inserted definition of case of emergency; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 343 in definition of court, after "district court", deleted "or the appropriate" and after "justice's court" inserted "or city court".

Chapter 470 in definition of landlord inserted reference to a mobile home park; inserted definitions of mobile home owner and mobile home park; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 21, 1993.

Chapter 487 in definition of landlord, after "part", inserted "or of a mobile home park" and at end, after "position", inserted "and the operator of a mobile home park"; inserted definitions of mobile home owner and mobile home park; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 470, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana residents currently face a housing crisis that includes a lack of affordable housing and a lack of available mobile home park spaces; and

WHEREAS, mobile homes are not "mobile" without substantial moving costs and the potential for substantial damage to the mobile homes; and

WHEREAS, under 70-24-441 landlords of mobile home parks may, without supplying a reason, evict tenants who rent space in mobile home parks; and

WHEREAS, if evicted unfairly, mobile home owners who rent space in mobile home parks may be forced to sell their mobile homes at a fraction of their costs and within an unreasonable amount of time (30 days pursuant to 70-24-441) in order to comply with the eviction.

THEREFORE, the Legislature of the State of Montana finds it necessary to define justifiable and reasonable grounds on which landlords may evict mobile home owners who rent space in mobile home parks."

70-24-104. Exclusions from application of chapter.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 1.202 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

This Act regulates landlord-tenant relations in residential properties. It is not intended to apply where residence is incidental to another primary purpose such as residence in a prison, a hospital or nursing home, a dormitory owned and operated by a college or school, or residence by a landlord's employee such as a custodian, janitor, guard or caretaker rendering service in or about the demised premises. This Act is intended to apply to government or public agencies acting as landlords ([70-24-103(8)]).

This Act does not apply to occupancy by a purchaser under a contract of sale. This Act applies to occupancy by the holder of an option to purchase, as distinguished from a contract of sale.

This Act applies to roomers and boarders but is not intended to apply to transient occupancy. In many jurisdictions transient hotel operations are subject to special taxes and regulations and, where available, determinations under such authority constitute appropriate criteria.

All of the exclusions enumerated apply only to genuine, bona fide arrangements not created to avoid the application of the Act and are subject to the test of good faith (see [70-24-109]).

[Subsection (3)] A fraternal or social organization is deemed to also cover "athletic club".

Case Notes

Termination of Lease — Removal of Holdover Tenant — Agricultural Exception to Landlord-Tenant Act: Defendant sold plaintiff her property. The instrument contained a lease back to defendant of the buildings and 6 acres. Plaintiff gave notice that the lease was to terminate. Defendant refused to vacate. Plaintiff brought an action under the unlawful detainer statutes, which provide for an award of treble damages. Defendant contended the dispute was governed by the Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977. Plaintiff contended the lease was within the "agricultural" exclusion contained in 70-24-104(8). The lease provisions gave no indication of the nature of the buildings or of the intended use of the 6 acres. The trial court allowed the introduction of photographs and oral testimony regarding the lease, which established that the use of the land was for maintenance of defendant's livestock. The trial court properly allowed parol evidence to resolve an ambiguity in the lease. The Supreme Court determined that the legislative intent of 70-24-104 was for a comprehensive coverage of all agricultural operations, whether they are large-scale operations for profit or small-scale operations secondary to the use of the residence. The unlawful detainer provisions were properly applied. Dussault v. Hjelm, 192 M 282, 627 P2d 1237, 38 St. Rep. 738 (1981).

70-24-105. Supplementary principles of law applicable.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 1.103 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

This section, adapted from Section 1-103 of the Uniform Commercial Code, indicates the continued applicability to landlord-tenant relations of all supplemental bodies of law except in so far as they are explicitly displaced by this Act. The listing given in this section is merely illustrative; no listing could be exhaustive.

Case Notes

Jury Instruction Related to Common-Law Tort and Contract Law Not Contrary to Landlord and Tenant Act: During Bugger's trial against a landlord, the District Court presented the jury with a special verdict form that contained questions of common law tort and contract law, which Bugger contended on appeal violated The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977. The Supreme Court disagreed. Bugger did not object to the verdict form at trial or demonstrate how the form was prejudicial. Additionally, this section permits the principles of law and equity, including law relating to mutuality of obligations, principal and agent, real property, estoppel, fraud, misrepresentation, or other validating or nonvalidating causes, to supplement the provisions of the Act, so the District Court correctly presented the jury with the applicable and correct statements of the law of the case. Bugger v. McGough, 2006 MT 248, 334 M 77, 144 P3d 802 (2006).

Fire Protection Services Not Required of Mobile Home Court Owners: Appellant claimed that the owners of a mobile home court violated The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 by failing to provide fire protection services. While 70-24-303 requires all common areas to be kept in a clean and safe condition and this section extends the principles of law and equity relating to safety and fire prevention to the Act, absent the existence between the parties of any contractual obligation to provide fire protection services and absent proof of a statutory or common-law duty to provide those services, the complaint was properly dismissed. Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989).

70-24-106. Construction against implicit repeal.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 1.104 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

This section indicates the policy that no Act which bears evidence of carefully considered permanent regulative intention should lightly be regarded as impliedly repealed by subsequent legislation. This Act, carefully integrated and intended as a uniform codification of permanent character covering an entire "field" of law, is to be regarded as particularly resistant to implied repeal.

70-24-108. What constitutes notice.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 222 in (1)(c) substituted "mailed with a certificate of mailing" for "mailed by registered" and inserted last sentence regarding date of service by mailing; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Receipt, Not Mailing, of Certified Letter Constituting Effective Notice: A lease provided that if the lessee defaulted and did not cure the default within 10 days after written notice from the lessor, then the lessor could retake possession of the property. The method for providing written notice was not described in the lease. When Anderson defaulted on rent, Grenfell sent a default notice by certified mail to Anderson's address as listed in the lease, but Anderson never picked up the letter, and it was returned to Grenfell as unclaimed. Nevertheless, after 11 days, Grenfell retook possession of the leased property, changed the locks, and filed suit, alleging breach of the lease agreement, unlawful detainer, and violation of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The District Court held in favor of Grenfell, and Anderson appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that Anderson never received proper notice. Citing 58 Am. Jur. 2d Notice §35 (1989), the court applied the common-law rule that when a statute or rule merely states that written notice must be given without stating how it is to be given, it is not enough that the notice is mailed—it must also be received. The same rule applies to contracts in the absence of express provisions to the contrary. Thus, Grenfell's decision to enforce the 10-day default cure period was effective only upon actual receipt of a written notice by Anderson, whether hand-delivered, mailed, or otherwise. The District Court's conclusion that Anderson had actual notice, effective by certified mailing alone, was in error. Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999), following Hill v. Zuckerman, 138 M 230, 355 P2d 521 (1960).

Unclaimed Notice Not Considered Constructive Notice: Grenfell sent a certified letter to Anderson regarding default on a lease, but Anderson never picked up the letter and it was returned to Grenfell as unclaimed. The District Court held that Anderson had constructive notice of the default. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although a party may not escape the effect of the giving of a written notice by refusing to receive it when it is presented in person as a notice, thereby profiting from a wrongful act, in the context of giving notice by certified mail, this rule requires an actual refusal to accept. In this case, there was no indication that the address to which the letter was sent was ever contemplated as a proper place of serving notice, yet Grenfell inexplicably served the default letter in a manner that Grenfell himself acknowledged would not be effective, even though Anderson had previously accepted all manner of lease-related business matters in person at Anderson's place of business. Although the District Court correctly found that Anderson did not claim the letter, the court incorrectly deduced that Anderson had refused the letter. Failure to claim the letter, of itself, was insufficient to impute Anderson's constructive notice absent evidence that receipt of the letter was refused. Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999), following Long v. Crum, 267 NW 2d 407 (Iowa 1978). See also Hill v. Zuckerman, 138 M 230, 355 P2d 521 (1960).

Unsanitary Conditions in Trailer Court — Breach of Warranty of Habitability — Notice Adequate: Various maintenance problems in a trailer court, including garbage accumulation due to inadequate collection services, septic system overflows and backups, and a contaminated water system necessitating a "boil order" by the county health department, which problems persisted over a period of years despite tenants' numerous complaints, constituted evidence that landlords breached the warranty of habitability by failing to maintain the premises in a safe and clean condition. Landlords were unable to escape their responsibility by claiming that they were never notified of the problems in writing because the trailer court manager was also a resident of the trailer court and even participated in rules infractions. Mathes v. Adams, 254 M 347, 838 P2d 390, 49 St. Rep. 723 (1992).

70-24-109. Obligation of good faith.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 1.302 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

Section [70-24-109] is adapted from Section 1-203 of the Uniform Commercial Code. As the commentators there said, "This section sets forth a basic principle running throughout this Act. The principle involved is that in commercial transactions good faith is required in the performance and enforcement of all agreements or duties." The commentators there drew attention to particular applications of this general principle. The intention is that the rule be identical in landlord-tenant relationships and, similarly, particular applications of this general principle appear in specific provisions of this Act such as exclusions ([70-24-104]), retaliatory eviction as well as complaints made to public authorities ([70-24-431]), and obligation of the landlord to repair.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 332, L. 2009, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature declares that:

(1) the right of Montanans to defend their lives and liberties, as provided in Article II, section 3, of the Montana Constitution, and their right to keep or bear arms in defense of their homes, persons, and property, as provided in Article II, section 12, of the Montana Constitution, are fundamental and may not be called into question;

(2) the use of firearms for self-defense is recognized within the right reserved to the individual people of Montana in Article II, section 12, of the Montana Constitution;

(3) self-defense is a natural right under section 1-2-104, MCA, and is included in sections 49-1-101 and 49-1-103, MCA;

(4) the lawful use of firearms for self-defense is not a crime or an offense against the people of the state;

(5) in a criminal case in which self-defense is asserted, the burden of proof is as provided in [section 10] [actually section 9, Ch. 332, L, 2009, enacting 46-16-131];

(6) in self-defense, the use of justifiable force discourages violent crime and prevents victimization; and

(7) the purpose of [sections 1 through 3] [enacting 45-3-110 through 45-3-112] is to clarify and secure the ability of the people to protect themselves."

Part 2
Rental Agreements

70-24-201. Rental agreement — terms and conditions.

Case Notes

Agreement to Agree to Future Lease Terms Unenforceable: Defendant agreed to lease plaintiff farmland on a cash per acre basis for 5 years with an option to extend the lease on terms to be determined later. Toward the end of the 5-year lease, defendant offered to sell the land to plaintiff, but plaintiff declined, so defendant sold the land to a third party, and plaintiff filed a complaint alleging breach of the lease agreement. Both parties moved for summary judgment, and the District Court concluded that because the lease extension language constituted an agreement to agree and was vague and unenforceable, defendant was entitled to summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because the parties failed to include complete and material terms for determining the duration and payments for another lease term in the negotiation clause, the clause was rendered unenforceable, and specific performance was unavailable to enforce an agreement to agree to material terms in the future. Additionally, damages were not clearly ascertainable and calculation of damages was also untenable under the lease extension, so plaintiff could not recover damages. GRB Farm v. Christman Ranch, Inc., 2005 MT 59, 326 M 236, 108 P3d 507 (2005), following Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957), Riis v. Day, 188 M 253, 613 P2d 696, (1980), and Quirin v. Weinberg, 252 M 386, 830 P2d 537 (1992), and followed in Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Ltd. v. W. Star Trucks, Inc., 2007 MT 48, 336 M 145, 153 P3d 627 (2007).

Amount of Rent — Essential Lease Term Requiring Certainty: Appellants signed a lease with an option to renew the lease. Although the appellants properly gave notice of intent to exercise the option, the renewal provision failed for lack of certainty regarding the amount of the rent because a determination of the amount of the rent upon renewal was based on bids from third parties. In this case, there was no such bid and therefore no means of determining the amount of the rent. The renewal provision of the lease was void for lack of certainty regarding the essential term of rent. Riis v. Day, 188 M 253, 613 P2d 696 (1980), followed in Nentwig v. United Indus., Inc., 256 M 134, 845 P2d 99, 49 St. Rep. 1172 (1992), and GRB Farm v. Christman Ranch, Inc., 2005 MT 59, 326 M 236, 108 P3d 507 (2005).

70-24-202. Prohibited provisions in rental agreements.

Case Notes

Lease Provision May Not Require Tenant to Waive Rights Provided by Landlord and Tenant Act: The landlord's standardized rental agreement contained a provision holding a tenant terminating a lease prior to the lease's expiration date liable for all attorney fees and costs incurred by the landlord due to the tenant's breach of the lease. The Supreme Court held that the language of the Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act specifically authorized the awarding of attorney fees to the prevailing party and also provided that a lease agreement could not contain a provision requiring a tenant to waive a right granted by the Act. Summers v. Crestview Apartments, 2010 MT 164, 357 Mont. 123, 236 P.3d 586.

Acceptance of Refund of Deposit as Waiver of Claims — Prohibited Lease Provision — Allegations Under Two Acts: Solem and others rented an apartment from Chilcote under a written lease containing a provision stating that acceptance of a refund of a security deposit constituted a waiver of all claims against the landlord. The tenants brought an action for return of their security deposit under Title 70, ch. 25, commonly known as the Residential Tenants' Security Deposits Act, and made other claims under The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 as well. The Supreme Court held that the provision waiving claims against the landlord was illegal under 70-24-442 and this section. The fact that the tenants had sued for return of their security deposit did not prohibit their right to recover fees under the Act. Solem v. Chilcote, 274 M 72, 906 P2d 209, 52 St. Rep. 1128 (1995), followed in Whalen v. Taylor, 278 M 293, 925 P2d 462, 53 St. Rep. 914 (1996).

70-24-203. Agreement not to permit receipt of rent free of obligation.

Case Notes

Duty of Landlord — Domestic Water Supplied by Garden Hose — Sufficiency of Complaint: A tenant's sole source of domestic water supply for her rented residence was a garden hose run above ground from a neighboring house. After terminating the tenancy, the tenant brought an action against the landlord for actual damages, claiming that under this section the landlord was not entitled to collect rent because the water supply situation constituted failure to comply with his statutory duties under 70-24-303. The landlord's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim was improperly granted as the complaint was sufficient. Busch v. Kammerer, 200 M 130, 649 P2d 1339, 39 St. Rep. 1624 (1982).

70-24-204. Effect of unsigned or undelivered rental agreement.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 1.402 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

The subsections above [in this section] apply to transactions in which a written rental agreement has been signed and delivered by either landlord or tenant, the parties have agreed on terms, and the defect is solely the absence of a signature. Delivery thus means legal rather than physical delivery alone. Thus knowledge or notice of the signing of the rental agreement is required. These subsections do not apply to applications for leases or similar writings regarded by the parties as preliminary to written agreements.

Case Notes

Receipt, Not Mailing, of Certified Letter Constituting Effective Notice: A lease provided that if the lessee defaulted and did not cure the default within 10 days after written notice from the lessor, then the lessor could retake possession of the property. The method for providing written notice was not described in the lease. When Anderson defaulted on rent, Grenfell sent a default notice by certified mail to Anderson's address as listed in the lease, but Anderson never picked up the letter, and it was returned to Grenfell as unclaimed. Nevertheless, after 11 days, Grenfell retook possession of the leased property, changed the locks, and filed suit, alleging breach of the lease agreement, unlawful detainer, and violation of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The District Court held in favor of Grenfell, and Anderson appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that Anderson never received proper notice. Citing 58 Am. Jur. 2d Notice §35 (1989), the court applied the common-law rule that when a statute or rule merely states that written notice must be given without stating how it is to be given, it is not enough that the notice is mailed—it must also be received. The same rule applies to contracts in the absence of express provisions to the contrary. Thus, Grenfell's decision to enforce the 10-day default cure period was effective only upon actual receipt of a written notice by Anderson, whether hand-delivered, mailed, or otherwise. The District Court's conclusion that Anderson had actual notice, effective by certified mailing alone, was in error. Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999), following Hill v. Zuckerman, 138 M 230, 355 P2d 521 (1960).

Unclaimed Notice Not Considered Constructive Notice: Grenfell sent a certified letter to Anderson regarding default on a lease, but Anderson never picked up the letter and it was returned to Grenfell as unclaimed. The District Court held that Anderson had constructive notice of the default. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although a party may not escape the effect of the giving of a written notice by refusing to receive it when it is presented in person as a notice, thereby profiting from a wrongful act, in the context of giving notice by certified mail, this rule requires an actual refusal to accept. In this case, there was no indication that the address to which the letter was sent was ever contemplated as a proper place of serving notice, yet Grenfell inexplicably served the default letter in a manner that Grenfell himself acknowledged would not be effective, even though Anderson had previously accepted all manner of lease-related business matters in person at Anderson's place of business. Although the District Court correctly found that Anderson did not claim the letter, the court incorrectly deduced that Anderson had refused the letter. Failure to claim the letter, of itself, was insufficient to impute Anderson's constructive notice absent evidence that receipt of the letter was refused. Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999), following Long v. Crum, 267 NW 2d 407 (Iowa 1978). See also Hill v. Zuckerman, 138 M 230, 355 P2d 521 (1960).

Rights and Duties of the Parties

70-24-301. Duty to disclose name of person responsible.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 2.102 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

This section requires disclosure to the tenant of names and addresses of persons who (a) have power to negotiate, make repairs, etc., in the operation of the premises; (b) are empowered to receive service of notice and process which binds all of the owners. In the absence of such disclosure the person collecting the rent shall be deemed to have the authority to accept notices and service and to provide for the necessary maintenance and repairs.

The purpose of this section is to enable the tenant to proceed with the appropriate legal proceeding, to know to whom complaints must be addressed and, failing satisfaction, against whom the appropriate legal proceedings may be instituted.

Stat. 1972, Chapter 493 inserts into Chapter 143 of Massachusetts General Laws a provision requiring the posting of a non-resident owner's name, address and telephone number as well as the name, address and telephone number of any non-resident manager or agent subject to a fine of not more than $50.00 for each day of violation. However, this statute does not make available to the tenant the remedies provided in the Uniform Act.

70-24-302. Landlord to deliver possession of dwelling unit.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 2.103 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

Thus, the landlord may proceed directly against a squatter. The tenant may also, pursuant to [70-24-405], proceed with an action for possession. Where appropriate such actions may be in summary proceedings. It is thus possible that both landlord and tenant may have the right of action against third parties wrongfully in possession of the premises.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 222 inserted (2) concerning acceptance of rent or deposit as consent for possession.

70-24-303. Landlord to maintain premises — agreement that tenant perform duties — limitation of landlord's liability for failure of smoke detector or carbon monoxide detector.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 2.104 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

[Subsections (1) and (2)] Vital interests of the parties and public under modern urban conditions require the proper maintenance and operation of housing. It is thus necessary that minimum duties of landlords and tenants be set forth. Generally duties of repair and maintenance of the dwelling unit and the premises are imposed upon the landlord by this section. Major repairs, even access, to essential systems outside the dwelling unit are beyond the capacity of the tenant. Conversely, duties of cleanliness and proper use within the dwelling unit are appropriately fixed upon the tenant (see [70-24-321] and [70-24-311]).

This section follows the warranty of habitability doctrine now recognized in the jurisdictions of:

California—Hinson v. Delis, 26 C.A.3d 62.
Washington, D.C.—Javins v. First National Realty, (U.S.C.A.D.C. 1970) 428 F.2d 1071.
Wisconsin—Pines v. Perssion, (1961) 111 N.W.2d 409.
New Jersey—Reste Realty Corp. v. Cooper, (1969) 53 N.J. 444, 251 A2d 268.
Illinois—Jack Springs Inc. v. Little, (1972) 280 N.E.2d 208.
Hawaii—Lemler v. Breedin, (1969) 462 P.2d 470.
Michigan—Rome v. Walker, (1972) 196 N.W.2d 850.
New Hampshire—Kline v. Burns, (1971) 276 A.2d 248.
Colorado—Guesenbury v. Patrick, (March 1972) C.C.H.Pov.L.Rptr. Sec. 15, 803.
Georgia—Genvens v. Gray, (April 1972) C.C.H.Pov.L.Rept. Sec. 15, 412.

Standards of habitability dealt with in this section are a matter of public police power rather than the contract of the parties or special landlord-tenant legislation. This section establishes minimum duties of landlords consistent with public standards. Generally duties of repair and maintenance of the dwelling unit and the premises are imposed upon the landlord by this section. Major repairs, even access, to essential systems outside the dwelling unit are beyond the capacity of the tenant. Conversely, duties of cleanliness and proper use within the dwelling unit are appropriately fixed upon the tenant.

Except as specifically provided, these obligations may not be waived ([70-24-403]).

(ii) operation of an unlawful clandestine laboratory, as prohibited by 45-9-132; or

(iii) gang-related activities, as prohibited by Title 45, chapter 8, part 4". Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 43 in (1)(h) at beginning after "install" inserted "in each dwelling unit under the landlord's control an approved carbon monoxide detector, in accordance with rules adopted by the department of labor and industry, and an approved smoke detector" and at end of first sentence deleted "an approved smoke detector in each dwelling unit under the landlord's control", in second and third sentences inserted reference to carbon monoxide detector, in fourth sentence near beginning inserted "approved carbon monoxide detector, as defined in 70-20-113" and near middle after "smoke detector" substituted "as defined in 70-20-113, bear" for "is a device that is capable of detecting visible or invisible particles of combustion and that bears"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 408 inserted (1)(b) prohibiting a landlord from knowingly allowing a tenant or other person to engage in activities on the premises that create a reasonable potential of damage or destruction to the premises or injury to neighboring tenants by criminal production or manufacture of dangerous drugs, operation of a clandestine drug laboratory, or gang-related activity; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 401 in (1)(e), at beginning, inserted "unless otherwise provided in the rental agreement"; and made minor changes in style.

Name Change — Code Commissioner Correction: Section 1, Ch. 706, L. 1991, provided: "(1) The name of the state fire marshal is changed to the state fire prevention and investigation program of the department of justice.

(2) Unless inconsistent with [sections 1 through 36] [Ch. 706, L. 1991], wherever the term "state fire marshal" or "fire marshal" appears in the Montana Code Annotated, the code commissioner shall change the term to the "state fire prevention and investigation program of the department of justice", "fire prevention and investigation program" (of the department of justice), or "program", as appropriate. The code commissioner shall also conform internal references and grammar to these changes". As directed, the Code Commissioner has changed the term, as appropriate, wherever it appears in this section. Amendment effective April 29, 1991.

1989 Amendment — Applicability: Inserted (1)(g) requiring installation of smoke detector in each dwelling unit; in (2) inserted reference to subsection (1)(g); and inserted (5) exempting landlord from liability. Amendment effective April 18, 1989, and, pursuant to sec. 3, Ch. 567, L. 1989, applies to all rental dwelling units after January 1, 1990.

Case Notes

City Alley Not Considered Common Area or Sidewalk for Which Landlord Has Maintenance Responsibility: Willden was visiting her son in an apartment building owned by defendant when she slipped and fell in an icy alley, sustaining injuries. Willden sued defendant and the landlord of the apartment building on the other side of the alley, alleging that the landlords had a duty under 70-24-303 and under the city code to keep the alley clean and safe. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Section 70-24-303 requires a landlord to keep safe all common areas on the landlord's premises. However, the landlords in this case did not own or have control over the city-owned alley, nor could the alley be considered a common area for which the landlords were responsible, so 70-24-303 did not apply. The city code required landowners to keep sidewalks free of ice and snow, but the alley was not a sidewalk, so the city code also did not apply. Willden's argument that the landlords of adjacent properties had a duty to keep the alley free of ice and snow that presented a hazard to guests visiting their tenants also failed. Willden's use of the alley as a guest was indistinguishable from general public use of that alley at any time for any lawful purpose. The Supreme Court declined to create a requirement that adjacent landowners have a legal duty to keep a public way that is owned by a municipality free from an accumulation of ice and snow or to post a notice warning persons that the public way might be slippery. Willden v. Neumann, 2008 MT 236, 344 M 407, 189 P3d 610 (2008), distinguishing Piedalue v. Clinton Elementary School District, 214 M 99, 692 P2d 20 (1984), and Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491 (1985).

Jury Instruction on Comparative Negligence Improper Absent Evidence of One Party's Negligence: A landlord who failed to maintain rental property in a safe condition was negligent per se. Pursuant to Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937 (1984), even in negligence per se cases, the factfinder must apportion negligence between the parties in reaching a verdict. Therefore, the trial court in this case gave the jury an instruction on comparative negligence. However, there was no evidence to show that plaintiff was negligent in any way, and all liability for plaintiff's injury on defendant's rental property lay with defendant. Thus, giving the instruction on comparative negligence was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005).

Landlord Who Fails to Provide Safe Rental Property Negligent Per Se — Summary Judgment on Liability Proper: Plaintiff was injured in a fall in the staircase of a rental home because the stairwell light was not functional. Plaintiff claimed that the defendant landlord was negligent for failing to provide a safe and habitable premises and moved for partial summary judgment on the liability issue. The trial court denied the motion, and the jury found for defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Under this section, a landlord is required to keep rental premises in a fit and habitable condition and to maintain electrical facilities in good and safe working order. Defendant could have avoided liability by entering a separate written agreement signed by all parties in which plaintiff agreed to repair the light, but no such agreement existed, so defendant was negligent per se, and summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Defendant's attempt to shift responsibility to plaintiff for failing to notify defendant of the inoperative light was misplaced because the duty of repair is on the landlord and there is no duty of the tenant to notify. Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005).

Damages for Carbon Monoxide Poisoning — Applicability of Landlord and Tenant Act to Third Parties — Act Sufficiently Pleaded — Fees Payable Though Not Specifically Requested: Kunst, a guest at the apartment leased by Erpenbach, and Erpenbach were granted a directed verdict as to liability in their suit against Pass, the landlord, that both were poisoned by carbon monoxide in the apartment building. (See 2009 amendment requiring carbon monoxide monitor.) The jury returned an award of $5,000 to each plaintiff. The District Court Judge, who had taken over the case from a judge who had retired after hearing the case, denied attorney fees on the basis that the previous judge concluded that Pass was liable only under a "general theory of negligence". The Supreme Court reviewed the record and determined that the former judge had in fact left open the issue of whether The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 applied. The Supreme Court pointed out that the complaint either made reference in every count to the Act or incorporated the Act by reference and that a review of the record showed that the plaintiffs had also moved for a directed verdict pursuant to the Act. Although the District Court didn't expressly hold that Pass had violated the Act, the Supreme Court held that as a matter of law, Pass had violated certain provisions of the Act. The Supreme Court also held that a third party, such as Kunst, was covered by the Act because: (1) a third party is an "aggrieved party", as used in 70-24-401, as demonstrated by the official comments to the corresponding section of the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act; (2) Oregon, with a similar statute, includes third parties as aggrieved parties; and (3) the official comments to the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act also demonstrate that the standards contained in the Act apply more broadly than only to persons who have a contract with the landlord. Because the Act applies, the Supreme Court held that the attorney fee provisions contained in 70-24-442 also apply. In response to the defendants' argument that the complaint did not specifically request payment of attorney fees, the Supreme Court responded that: (1) the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure require only notice pleading and that because the action was brought pursuant to the Act and the Act contains a provision for attorney fees, it should have been apparent to the defendants that they could be ordered to pay fees; (2) the defendants' argument that they had no opportunity to defend against the claim for fees was without merit; and (3) the plaintiffs were a "prevailing party", the motion for fees was timely filed because it was done immediately after the District Court granted the plaintiffs' motion for a directed verdict, and there is no statutory time limit in Montana in which to file a motion for fees, as there is a time limit in 25-10-501 to file a motion for costs. Because fees were denied by the District Court for a legal reason and the District Court misconstrued the law, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court in order for the District Court to exercise its discretion in awarding fees. Kunst v. Pass, 1998 MT 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 289 (1998).

Common Areas to Be Maintained by Landlord — Summary Judgment for Landlord Improper: Calder filed a complaint against the Andersons after falling on steps leading from an apartment rented from the Andersons. Summary judgment was granted for the Andersons when the court found that the injuries were not caused by a hidden or lurking danger subjecting the Andersons to liability. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was improperly granted. As landlords, the Andersons had a duty to keep the area where Calder fell in a clean and safe condition, and by failing to do so, the Andersons were negligent as a matter of law. Calder v. Anderson, 275 M 273, 911 P2d 1157, 53 St. Rep. 139 (1996).

Fire Protection Services Not Required of Mobile Home Court Owners: Appellant claimed that the owners of a mobile home court violated The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 by failing to provide fire protection services. While this section requires all common areas to be kept in a clean and safe condition and 70-24-105 extends the principles of law and equity relating to safety and fire prevention to the Act, absent the existence between the parties of any contractual obligation to provide fire protection services and absent proof of a statutory or common-law duty to provide those services, the complaint was properly dismissed. Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989).

Duty of Landlord — Domestic Water Supplied by Garden Hose — Sufficiency of Complaint: A tenant's sole source of domestic water supply for her rented residence was a garden hose run above ground from a neighboring house. After terminating the tenancy, the tenant brought an action against the landlord for actual damages, claiming that under 70-24-203 the landlord was not entitled to collect rent because the water supply situation constituted failure to comply with his statutory duties under this section. The landlord's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim was improperly granted as the complaint was sufficient. Busch v. Kammerer, 200 M 130, 649 P2d 1339, 39 St. Rep. 1624 (1982).

Duty of Landlord — Visitors: The duty a landlord owes a tenant under 70-24-303 to keep all common areas of the premises in a clean and safe condition does not extend to visitors of the tenant. Instead, the injured visitor must look to Montana law concerning the status of the injured party in relation to the property owner and the corresponding duty of the property owner. Rennick v. Hoover, 186 M 167, 606 P2d 1079 (1980), overruled, as to the standard that a property owner is absolved of liability because a dangerous condition upon the premises is open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997).

70-24-304. Transfer of premises or termination of management — relief from liability.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 2.105 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

This section relieves a landlord, unless otherwise agreed, from liability under the rental agreement and this Act as to events occurring after a good faith sale and conveyance to a bona fide purchaser and after written notice to the tenant of the conveyance except as to security recoverable under Section 2.101 and all prepaid rent. As between the original landlord and tenant, it is intended that the loss for failure to account for security and prepaid rent if recoverable should fall upon the landlord who, in contrast to the tenant, can take steps to protect the integrity of the security and prepaid rent account at the time of sale. The landlord for the time being is liable for compliance with the rental agreement and this Act. See definition of "landlord" in [70-24-103]. See also [70-24-203] and [70-24-304].

2007 Amendment: Chapter 267 deleted former (2) and (3) that read: "(2) The sale or rental of a mobile home located upon a rental lot does not entitle the purchaser or renter to retain rental of the lot unless the purchaser or renter enters into a rental agreement with the owner of the lot.

(3) A mobile home owner who owns the mobile home but rents the lot space has the exclusive right to sell the mobile home without interference or conditions by the landlord. The new purchaser shall make suitable arrangements with the landlord in order to become a tenant on the mobile home lot. The purchase of the mobile home does not automatically entitle the purchaser to rent the mobile home lot"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 389 deleted former (2) that read: "(2) As provided in subsection (1) and in conformance with the provisions of this chapter, the landlord of a mobile home park may adopt written rules concerning the tenant's use and occupancy of the premises"; in (2), after "landlord", deleted "of a mobile home park", after "each" deleted "mobile home owner or", after "tenant" deleted "of a mobile home owner", after "residing" substituted "on the premises" for "in the mobile home park", and after "new" substituted "tenant" for "resident"; in (3), in two places before "notice", inserted "written"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 470 inserted (3) relating to mobile home parks. Amendment effective May 21, 1993.

Chapter 487 inserted (2) providing that mobile home park landlord may adopt written rules concerning tenant's use and occupancy of premises; inserted (3) requiring that adopted rules be written and given to each tenant residing in mobile home park and to new tenants; and made minor changes in style.

The codifier has not codified (3) as enacted by Ch. 487 because it covered the same subject matter and content as (3) enacted by Ch. 470. Chapter 470 included mobile home owners in addition to tenants, so the version of (3) enacted by Ch. 470 was codified.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 470, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana residents currently face a housing crisis that includes a lack of affordable housing and a lack of available mobile home park spaces; and

WHEREAS, mobile homes are not "mobile" without substantial moving costs and the potential for substantial damage to the mobile homes; and

WHEREAS, under 70-24-441 landlords of mobile home parks may, without supplying a reason, evict tenants who rent space in mobile home parks; and

WHEREAS, if evicted unfairly, mobile home owners who rent space in mobile home parks may be forced to sell their mobile homes at a fraction of their costs and within an unreasonable amount of time (30 days pursuant to 70-24-441) in order to comply with the eviction.

THEREFORE, the Legislature of the State of Montana finds it necessary to define justifiable and reasonable grounds on which landlords may evict mobile home owners who rent space in mobile home parks."

Case Notes

"Apartment Manager" Defense to Burglary Inadequate: Defendant who forcefully entered an apartment at night without consent and removed a rifle and ammunition claimed he entered the apartment in his capacity as apartment manager and, as part of the process of evicting tenant, removed the rifle as a "protective measure". However, defendant acted far beyond his capacity as agent of the landlord, having used destructive means to gain entry and having entered at night without tenant's consent and without notice. Defendant's "apartment manager" defense to burglary was found inadequate. St. v. McKimmie, 232 M 227, 756 P2d 1135, 45 St. Rep. 1011 (1988).

Abandonment — Characteristics — Subtenant Vacation: Abandonment of leased premises is an absolute relinquishment of the premises by the tenant and consists of both an act or omission and an intent to abandon. A subtenant's vacation of the premises in no way indicates an intent to abandon on the part of the tenant. LIC, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 215 M 44, 692 P2d 1264, 42 St. Rep. 162 (1985).

Case Notes

Allegation That Lessee Violated Implied Covenant Not to Create Nuisance on Leased Premises: Plaintiffs, owners of a building in which defendants, lessees, operated a bar, filed an unlawful detainer action against defendants pursuant to 70-27-108. Plaintiffs claimed that defendants, by allowing loud music and noise in the bar, were violating an implied covenant not to operate their bar in such a manner as to create a nuisance. The trial judge ruled that the lease could not be canceled under any theory of nuisance because defendants were doing what they had a right to do, operate a bar. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that because substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's finding that the bar was not being operated as a nuisance, it was unnecessary to determine whether Montana law recognizes in real property leases an implied covenant on the part of the lessee to use the leased premises so as not to injure the lessor by creating a nuisance. Lease Provision Requiring Accelerated Payment of Future Rent Unenforceable as Unconscionable: The landlord's standardized rental agreement contained a provision holding a tenant terminating a lease prior to the lease's expiration date liable for all remaining future monthly payments. The Supreme Court held that the accelerated rent provision conflicted with the landlord's statutory duty to mitigate damages by taking away any incentive on the landlord's part to rent the apartment as soon as possible and therefore was unconscionable and unenforceable. Summers v. Crestview Apartments, 2010 MT 164, 357 Mont. 123, 236 P.3d 586.

Damages for Carbon Monoxide Poisoning — Applicability of Landlord and Tenant Act to Third Parties — Act Sufficiently Pleaded — Fees Payable Though Not Specifically Requested: Kunst, a guest at the apartment leased by Erpenbach, and Erpenbach were granted a directed verdict as to liability in their suit against Pass, the landlord, that both were poisoned by carbon monoxide in the apartment building. Lease Containing Provisions Prohibited by Landlord and Tenant Act Unenforceable and May Subject Landlord to Claim for Damages: The landlord's standardized rental agreement contained provisions holding a tenant terminating a lease prior to the lease's expiration date liable for all remaining future monthly payments and for all attorney fees and costs incurred by the landlord due to the tenant's breach of the lease. The Supreme Court held that the entire lease was unenforceable due to the illegal provisions and that the tenant could be entitled to actual damages, an amount up to three times the periodic rent, and attorney fees. Summers v. Crestview Apartments, 2010 MT 164, 357 Mont. 123, 236 P.3d 586.

Imposition of Single Treble Damage Award Despite Two Separate Violations: Whalen unlawfully excluded Taylor from Taylor's apartment and used a rental agreement that contained a prohibited provision, both violations that call for treble damage awards. However, absent a clear legislative mandate for cumulative imposition of penalties, the provisions of The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 are adequately served when only one treble damage award is imposed, despite two separate violations of the Act. Whalen v. Taylor, 278 M 293, 925 P2d 462, 53 St. Rep. 914 (1996).

Acceptance of Refund of Deposit as Waiver of Claims — Prohibited Lease Provision — Allegations Under Two Acts: Solem and others rented an apartment from Chilcote under a written lease containing a provision stating that acceptance of a refund of a security deposit constituted a waiver of all claims against the landlord. The tenants brought an action for return of their security deposit under Title 70, ch. 25, commonly known as the Residential Tenants' Security Deposits Act, and made other claims under The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 as well. The Supreme Court held that the provision waiving claims against the landlord was illegal under 70-24-202 and 70-24-442. The fact that the tenants had sued for return of their security deposit did not prohibit their right to recover fees under the Act. Solem v. Chilcote, 274 M 72, 906 P2d 209, 52 St. Rep. 1128 (1995), followed in Whalen v. Taylor, 278 M 293, 925 P2d 462, 53 St. Rep. 914 (1996).

70-24-404. Unconscionability — court discretion to refuse enforcement.

Commissioners' Comment to Section 1.303 of Uniform Act

[See chapter compiler's comments]

This Section, adapted from the Uniform Commercial Code and the Consumer Credit Code, is intended to make it possible for the courts to police explicitly against rental agreements, clauses, settlements, or waivers of claim or right which they find to be unconscionable. This section is intended to allow the courts to pass directly on the issue of unconscionability and to make a conclusion of law as to unconscionability. The basic test is whether, in light of the background and setting of the market, the conditions of the particular parties to the rental agreement, settlement or waiver of right or claim are so one-sided as to be unconscionable under the circumstances existing at the time of the making of the agreement or settlement. Thus, the particular facts involved in each case are of utmost importance since unconscionability may exist in some situations but not in others. Either landlords or tenants may, in appropriate circumstances, avail themselves of this section.

Unsanitary Conditions in Trailer Court — Breach of Warranty of Habitability — Notice Adequate: (Decided prior to the enactment of The Montana Residential Mobile Home Lot Rental Act, see Title 70, ch. 33.) Various maintenance problems in a trailer court, including garbage accumulation due to inadequate collection services, septic system overflows and backups, and a contaminated water system necessitating a "boil order" by the county health department, which problems persisted over a period of years despite tenants' numerous complaints, constituted evidence that landlords breached the warranty of habitability by failing to maintain the premises in a safe and clean condition. Landlords were unable to escape their responsibility by claiming that they were never notified of the problems in writing because the trailer court manager was also a resident of the trailer court and even participated in rules infractions. 70-24-411. Unlawful ouster, exclusion, or diminution of service — tenant's remedies.

Case Notes

Writ Not Properly Granted When Defendant Failed to Invoke Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy: Marks obtained a writ of certiorari from the District Court remanding his case with Marcher to Justice's Court with instructions to set aside Marcher's default judgment against Marks on the grounds that the damages and treble damages awarded to Marcher in the landlord-tenant dispute exceeded the $5,000 jurisdictional limit of the Justice's Court. The Supreme Court held that the writ had been improperly granted because Marks did not appear in the original case in Justice's Court and did not appeal the default judgment that was entered against him, which was a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy available to him. By not taking advantage of an available remedy, Marks failed to meet the statutory requirement for a writ through a showing that no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy was available to him. Marcher v. Bonzell, 2004 MT 294, 323 M 364, 104 P3d 436 (2004).

Abandonment Not Shown — Landlord Not Entitled to Recovery of Property: Taylor lived consistently in his apartment for over 1 year, and although he was habitually late in paying rent, he always made arrangements for payment. In response to Taylor's late payment in June 1995, Whalen changed the locks on the apartment, declined to accept the late rent payment, and refused to allow Taylor access to the apartment to collect his belongings. Nothing in the evidence indicated absolute relinquishment of the apartment by Taylor, nor did he commit any act or omission to indicate abandonment. The issue of surrender was never raised, nor did Whalen follow the statutory remedies to recover possession, resorting instead to the self-help procedure of changing the locks, an extrajudicial procedure in violation of 70-24-428. Whalen was thus liable under this section, and the District Court properly awarded Taylor 3 months' periodic rent and possession of the apartment. Whalen v. Taylor, 278 M 293, 925 P2d 462, 53 St. Rep. 914 (1996).

Imposition of Single Treble Damage Award Despite Two Separate Violations: Whalen unlawfully excluded Taylor from Taylor's apartment and used a rental agreement that contained a prohibited provision, both violations that call for treble damage awards. However, absent a clear legislative mandate for cumulative imposition of penalties, the provisions of The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 are adequately served when only one treble damage award is imposed, despite two separate violations of the Act. Whalen v. Taylor, 278 M 293, 925 P2d 462, 53 St. Rep. 914 (1996).

Evidence of Retaliatory Conduct — Award of Damages Proper: Section 70-24-431 prohibits retaliatory conduct by a landlord against a tenant under certain circumstances. Whether a landlord has engaged in retaliatory conduct is a question of fact. In the present case, substantial evidence supported the trial court's findings that a landlord's attempt to evict tenants was retaliatory after the tenants wrote to the landlord complaining of conditions, joined a tenants' association, and testified before the Legislature in support of amendments to The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977. Given the finding of retaliatory conduct, the court properly awarded the tenants damages equal to 3 months' rent pursuant to this section. Further, the landlord's violation of the retaliation statute was a defense to the landlord's action to regain possession pursuant to 70-24-441. Swenson v. Janke, 274 M 354, 908 P2d 678, 52 St. Rep. 1272 (1995).

Abandonment — Lawful Termination — No Landlord Liability for Stolen Property: The Supreme Court rejected appellants' contention that they were unlawfully removed by respondents from rental premises and entitled to the rental value, plus the value of property stolen from the premises. The court found substantial evidence to support the District Court findings that the appellants had abandoned the premises and that the respondents lawfully terminated the rental agreement. Respondents committed no negligent act in retaking possession that would make them liable for appellants' stolen property. Furthermore, the respondents had a valid claim for rent and damages, contrary to the judgment of the District Court. Napier v. Adkison, 209 M 163, 678 P2d 1143, 41 St. Rep. 619A (1984).

Lease Provision Precluding Recovery of Unpaid Rent Beyond Time of Repossession: Tenant Anderson defaulted on payment of a commercial lease, and lessor Grenfell changed the locks, effectively retaking possession of the property. The District Court awarded Grenfell unpaid rent and utilities, plus future rent, utilities, and penalties for the remaining term of the lease. Applying Knight v. OMI Corp., 174 M 72, 568 P2d 552 (1977), the Supreme Court held that in order for future liability for rent subsequent to the landlord's cancellation and repossession to accrue, the lease must contain clear language to that effect. Here, the lease provided that Grenfell could recover rent due up to the time of entry, but the award for unpaid rent and utilities beyond the time that Grenfell took repossession could not be sustained. Further, Grenfell's claim for unlawful detainer was also void because once locked out, Anderson could in no sense unlawfully detain the premises absent a showing of reentry. Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999). See also Gallatin Valley Medical Dental Center, Inc. v. Lemley, 206 M 241, 670 P2d 83, 40 St. Rep. 1622 (1983).

2013 Amendment: Chapter 343 in (4) substituted "in violation" for "as evidenced by the tenant being arrested for or charged with an act that violates the provisions"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 267 deleted former (1)(f) that read: "(f) This subsection (1) does not apply to a rental agreement involving a tenant who rents space for a mobile home but does not rent the mobile home"; in (2) deleted second sentence that read: "This subsection does not apply to a rental agreement involving a tenant who rents space for a mobile home but does not rent the mobile home"; deleted former (7) that read: "(7) Subsections (3) through (6) apply to all rental agreements, including those involving a tenant who rents space for a mobile home but does not rent the mobile home"; deleted former (8)(a) that read: "(a) the rental agreement does not involve a tenant who rents space for a mobile home but does not rent the mobile home"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 408 inserted (4) providing that if the tenant creates a reasonable potential that the premises may be damaged or destroyed or neighboring tenants injured, the landlord may terminate the rental agreement upon 3 days' written notice specifying the violation and noncompliance; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 456 throughout section substituted "noncompliance" for "breach"; in (1) in first sentence after "70-24-321" deleted "affecting health and safety", after "date" substituted "specified in the notice not less than the minimum number of days" for "not less than 14 days", and at end inserted "provided for in this section" and at beginning of second sentence deleted "If the breach is not remedied within that time"; in (1)(b) at end of first sentence substituted "the notice period is 3 days" for "landlord may deliver a written notice to the tenant that the rental agreement will terminate upon a date not less than 3 days after receipt of the notice if the breach is not remedied within that time" and deleted former second sentence that read: "This subsection does not apply to a rental agreement involving a tenant who rents space to park a mobile home but who does not rent the mobile home"; in (1)(c) at end of first sentence substituted "the notice period is 3 days" for "the landlord may deliver a written notice to the tenant that the rental agreement will terminate upon a date not less than 3 days after receipt of the notice if the breach is not remedied within that time" and deleted former second sentence that read: "This subsection does not apply to a rental agreement involving a tenant who rents space to park a mobile home but who does not rent the mobile home"; inserted (1)(d) concerning 14-day notice period; inserted (1)(f) concerning nonapplicability to tenant who rents space for a mobile home but who does not rent the mobile home; in (2) at beginning of first sentence deleted "Except as provided in subsection (2)" and inserted second sentence concerning nonapplicability to tenant who rents space for a mobile home but who does rent the mobile home; deleted former (2)(b) that read: "(b) For a rental agreement involving a tenant who rents space to park a mobile home but who does not rent the mobile home, the notice period referred to in subsection (2)(a) is 15 days"; inserted (6) concerning applicability to all rental agreements; inserted (7)(a) concerning rental agreement not involving tenant who rents space for a mobile home but who does not rent the mobile home; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 456, L. 2001, provided: "The notice provisions of 70-24-422 and 70-24-436 apply to existing rental agreements to the extent that an existing rental agreement does not contain specific notice provisions."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 389 inserted (1)(b) concerning termination of a rental agreement due to the presence of an unauthorized pet; inserted (1)(c) concerning termination of a rental agreement due to the presence of unauthorized persons; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 222 inserted (6) concerning election of notice provision; and made minor changes in style.

1987 Amendment: In (4), at beginning of second sentence, inserted "Except as provided in subsection (5)"; and inserted (5) disallowing recovery of treble damages for tenant's early tenancy termination.

1985 Amendment: At beginning of (2)(a) inserted exception clause; and inserted (2)(b) establishing a notice period for renters of space for mobile homes.

1983 Amendment: Inserted (3) establishing a notice period if a tenant damages or removes rental property.

Failure to Affirmatively Assert Defect in Notice — Issue Not Preserved on Appeal: The Leistikos were sent three notices regarding noncompliance with their rental agreement. At trial, they denied the factual allegations related to the circumstances surrounding the giving of the notices of noncompliance, but they did not deny that the notices complied with this section or allege that the notices were defective. They argued on appeal that the eviction action against them should have been dismissed because the noncompliance notices were defective in failing to adequately specify the acts and omissions that constituted noncompliance, as required by this section. However, failure to raise the issue in the pleadings or to argue the issue at trial precluded their ability to raise the issue for the first time on appeal. Nason v. Leistiko, 1998 MT 217, 290 M 460, 963 P2d 1279, 55 St. Rep. 910 (1998), following Marsh v. Overland, 274 M 21, 905 P2d 1088 (1995).

Conversion Evidenced by Notification and Procedural Shortcomings: (Decided prior to the enactment of The Montana Residential Mobile Home Lot Rental Act, see Title 70, ch. 33.) Johnston owned a mobile home, entitling her to possession, and Galayda owned the property on which the mobile home was located. Galayda claimed that by virtue of various notices to quit the premises, a default judgment against Johnston for back rent, and a writ of assistance directing the Sheriff to remove the mobile home, Galayda had legal authority to physically evict Johnston and her mobile home from the premises. However, a number of procedural errors occurred during the removal process that rendered the eviction actions unauthorized, including: (1) Galayda's failure under a prior version of this section to give Johnston notice to pay rent prior to filing a complaint for nonpayment and possession of the premises; (2) basing the default judgment on Galayda's incorrect sworn affidavit that Johnston owed back rent, which had in fact been paid; (3) Galayda's contract with a third party to remove the mobile home under the writ of assistance rather than having the Sheriff carry out the process, in violation of 25-13-301; (4) Galayda's service on Johnston of a notice of abandonment without sufficient facts showing absolute abandonment, in violation of 70-24-430; and (5) Galayda's failure to notify Johnston under 70-24-730 of the location of the property and of the steps necessary to reclaim the property. Failure to meet these notification and procedural steps was evidence that Johnston was wrongfully deprived of her property and constituted conversion on the part of Galayda. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 253 M 253, 833 P2d 176, 49 St. Rep. 495 (1992).

Dog Bite — No Duty of Defendant to Plaintiff: Where the defendant purchased a duplex subject to a preexisting lease that allowed the lessee to keep a dog in the duplex and required the defendant to give the lessee 15 days' notice to dispose of the dog if it created a nuisance (see 1995 amendment) and the plaintiff's child was later bitten by the dog 8 days after the defendant purchased the duplex, the court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendant. Before a claim for relief may be made against a defendant for negligence, the existence of a duty to the plaintiff must be shown. The defendant had no legal duty to the plaintiff because the defendant had no control over the dog and no right to dispose of it prior to the child's injury. Roy v. Neibauer, 191 M 224, 623 P2d 555, 38 St. Rep. 173 (1981).

70-24-423. Waiver of landlord's right to terminate for breach.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 132 near beginning of first sentence, after "rent due", substituted "is a waiver of a claimed breach of a rental agreement only when the claimed breach is the nonpayment of rent" for "with knowledge of a tenant's default or acceptance by the landlord of a tenant's performance that varies from the terms of the rental agreement constitutes a waiver of the landlord's right to terminate the rental agreement for that breach unless otherwise agreed after the breach has occurred"; and inserted second sentence related to nonwaiver of rights by acceptance of rent when claimed breach is not for nonpayment of rent.

Case Notes

Acceptance of Rent as Waiver of Tenants' Breach of Rental Agreement: The parties' rental agreement contained a provision requiring the tenants to obtain renter's insurance. The tenants were unable to obtain the insurance because of bad credit, and the landlords gave notice to them to vacate the premises. The tenants refused to give up possession of the property, and the landlords filed suit. During the months leading up to the trial, the landlords continued to accept rent. The tenants argued that acceptance of the rent was a waiver of their breach for failure to obtain insurance. The landlords argued that this section applies only to acceptance of rent when the breach is for failure to pay rent and additionally that a landlord is required to accept the rent in order to mitigate damages. The Supreme Court held that under this section, acceptance of the rent waived the right to terminate the agreement because of the tenants' failure to obtain renter's insurance. Kreger v. Francis, 271 M 444, 898 P2d 672, 52 St. Rep. 493 (1995).

70-24-426. Remedies for absence or abandonment.

Case Notes

Abandonment — Characteristics — Subtenant Vacation: Abandonment of leased premises is an absolute relinquishment of the premises by the tenant and consists of both an act or omission and an intent to abandon. A subtenant's vacation of the premises in no way indicates an intent to abandon on the part of the tenant. LIC, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 215 M 44, 692 P2d 1264, 42 St. Rep. 162 (1985).

Abandonment — Repossession by Changing Locks: After a leased store held a going-out-of-business sale and closed, the manager of the shopping center the store was in entered the store to determine for lessor whether and how the premises were used. Thirteen days later the lessor changed the locks. Repossession occurred at that time and not when the shopping center manager entered. LIC, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 215 M 44, 692 P2d 1264, 42 St. Rep. 162 (1985). See also Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999).

Abandonment — Proper Mailed Notice of Lessor's Intent: Tenant leased a store so that his daughter could operate it. The daughter held a going-out-of-business sale and closed the store. Lessor mailed tenant a letter detailing the rent owed and lessor's intention to find a new tenant. The letter was proper notice of intent to reenter, since the written lease provided that a notice be mailed to a party at his post-office box number. LIC, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 215 M 44, 692 P2d 1264, 42 St. Rep. 162 (1985).

Abandonment With Rent Due — Rights of Lessor: Tenant leased premises so his daughter could operate a store. At the end of August, the daughter held a going-out-of-business sale and the store closed September 1. The 5-year lease had not ended at that time. On September 8, the lessor notified the tenant that rent was delinquent, requested its payment, and stated that an attempt would be made to find another tenant. The lease stated that if the store was vacated and the rent was not paid the lessor could retake and rent the store and that the tenant was liable for the remainder of the rent due under the lease. Under the lease, the court upheld summary judgment granting the lessor rent for the remainder of the lease term and attorney fees. The lessor was entitled to reenter and relet and was not liable for forcible entry or unlawful detainer. LIC, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 215 M 44, 692 P2d 1264, 42 St. Rep. 162 (1985).

Abandonment — Lawful Termination — No Landlord Liability for Stolen Property: The Supreme Court rejected appellants' contention that they were unlawfully removed by respondents from rental premises and entitled to the rental value, plus the value of property stolen from the premises. The court found substantial evidence to support the District Court findings that the appellants had abandoned the premises and that the respondents lawfully terminated the rental agreement. Respondents committed no negligent act in retaking possession that would make them liable for appellants' stolen property. Furthermore, the respondents had a valid claim for rent and damages, contrary to the judgment of the District Court. Napier v. Adkison, 209 M 163, 678 P2d 1143, 41 St. Rep. 619A (1984).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 585 inserted (2) concerning 20-day time limit for hearing claim for possession; inserted (3) concerning stipulation to a continuance; and inserted (4) concerning 5-day time for ruling. Amendment effective April 28, 1993.

Case Notes

Jurisdiction of Justice's Court in Landlord-Tenant Action — Failure to Timely Assert Quiet Title Action Constituting Waiver of Jurisdictional Claim: Plaintiffs filed an action in Justice's Court to enforce a rental contract that defendant allegedly violated. Both parties initially argued that the case was governed by landlord-tenant law, but defendant subsequently argued in District Court that the case was actually an action to quiet title in a life estate granted to defendant by the contract and that because Justice's Courts may not hear actions concerning title to real property, the Justice's Court did not have subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case. The District Court concluded that the Justice's Court had jurisdiction, and on appeal, the Supreme Court concurred. Plaintiffs' pleadings established that the action was based on landlord-tenant law, and the Justice's Court therefore had subject matter jurisdiction at the onset. If defendant had raised the quiet title action in a proper and timely manner, the Justice's Court could have been divested of jurisdiction, but because defendant did not raise the title question in answer to the pleadings or in a timely amended answer, the Supreme Court held that the question was waived, and the District Court was affirmed. Stanley v. Lemire, 2006 MT 304, 334 M 489, 148 P3d 643 (2006).

Discovery and Trial Schedule Properly Expedited: Landlord Whalen insisted that this section provides a landlord, not a tenant, the right to an expedited trial and that tenant Taylor thus perpetrated sanctionable conduct by requesting an expedited hearing. This section mandates that an action for possession must be heard within 20 days unless both landlord and tenant stipulate to a continuance. Taylor's attorney requested that the trial court expedite the trial for possession and may not be sanctioned for demanding precisely what the statute authorizes. Further, the court did not abuse its discretion in properly limiting the time and extent of discovery to expedite the claim for possession. Whalen v. Taylor, 278 M 293, 925 P2d 462, 53 St. Rep. 914 (1996).

Conversion Evidenced by Notification and Procedural Shortcomings: (Decided prior to the enactment of The Montana Residential Mobile Home Lot Rental Act, see Title 70, ch. 33.) Failure to meet these notification and procedural steps was evidence that Johnston was wrongfully deprived of her property and constituted conversion on the part of Galayda. Johnston v. Am. 2013 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 93 in (1)(a) near beginning after "except by court order and the landlord" substituted "has clear and convincing evidence" for "reasonably believes" and near middle after "a period of time of at least" substituted remainder of subsection concerning removal of property for "5 days has elapsed since the occurrence of events upon which the landlord formed that belief, the landlord may remove the property from the premises"; inserted (1)(b) concerning rent to own or leased items; inserted (1)(c) defining terms; in (2) in first sentence near beginning substituted "all abandoned personal property of the tenant that the landlord reasonably believes is valuable" for "all goods, chattels, and personal property of the tenant"; in (3) substituted current language for "After complying with subsections (1) and (2), the landlord shall:

(a) make a reasonable attempt to notify the tenant in writing that the property must be removed from the place of safekeeping;

(b) notify the local law enforcement office of the property held by the landlord;

(c) make a reasonable effort to determine if the property is secured or otherwise encumbered; and

(d) send a notice by certified mail to the last-known address of the tenant, stating that at a specified time, not less than 15 days after mailing the notice, the property will be disposed of if not removed"; in (5) in first sentence near end after "the tenant's property" inserted "whether of value or not"; inserted (9) concerning notification to tenants; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

Chapter 123 in (7) substituted "30-9A-610" for "30-9A-601". Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 305 in (7) substituted "30-9-601" (renumbered 30-9A-601) for "30-9-504(3)". Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 401 in (2), in second sentence after "charge a reasonable storage", inserted "and labor"; in (5), near middle of first sentence, substituted "7 days" for "15 days"; in (6), near end, substituted "actual damages" for "double damages"; in (8), after "costs of notice, storage", inserted "labor"; and made minor changes in style.

1985 Amendment: In (1) at end after "premises", deleted "the landlord shall:

(a) make reasonable attempts to notify the tenant in writing that the property must be removed:

(i) from the premises; or

(ii) from the place of safekeeping if the landlord has stored the goods as provided in subsection (3) of this section; and

(b) specify a day not less than 15 days after delivery of a notice mailed by certified mail to the last-known address of the tenant, at which specified time the property will be disposed of if not removed.

(2) The landlord may dispose of the property by:

(a) selling all or part of the property at a public or private sale; or

(b) destroying or otherwise disposing of all or part of the property if he reasonably believes the value of the property is so low that the cost of storage or sale exceeds the reasonable value thereof" and inserted "and a period of time of at least 5 days has elapsed since the occurrence of events upon which the landlord formed that belief, the landlord may remove the property from the premises"; in (2), at beginning deleted "After notifying the tenant as required by subsection (1) of this section", in first sentence, before "store all goods", inserted "inventory and", inserted second sentence relating to storage charge; inserted (3) establishing landlord's notice requirements if a tenant abandons personal property; and inserted (4) providing methods of disposal of tenant's abandoned property; in (5), near beginning substituted "subsection (3)" for "subsection (1) of this section", near end of second sentence, before "storage costs", deleted "reasonable or actual", and inserted last two sentences of (5) allowing storage costs to be paid to landlord; in (7) after "30-9-504(3)", inserted "or the sheriff's sale provisions of Title 25, chapter 13, part 7"; and in (8) near middle of first sentence, after "sale", inserted "and any delinquent rent or damages owing on the premises".

Case Notes

Conversion Evidenced by Notification and Procedural Shortcomings: (Decided prior to the enactment of The Montana Residential Mobile Home Lot Rental Act, see Title 70, ch. 33.) Johnston owned a mobile home, entitling her to possession, and Galayda owned the property on which the mobile home was located. Galayda claimed that by virtue of various notices to quit the premises, a default judgment against Johnston for back rent, and a writ of assistance directing the Sheriff to remove the mobile home, Galayda had legal authority to physically evict Johnston and her mobile home from the premises. However, a number of procedural errors occurred during the removal process that rendered the eviction actions unauthorized, including: (1) Galayda's failure under a prior version of 70-24-422 to give Johnston notice to pay rent prior to filing a complaint for nonpayment and possession of the premises; (2) basing the default judgment on Galayda's incorrect sworn affidavit that Johnston owed back rent, which had in fact been paid; (3) Galayda's contract with a third party to remove the mobile home under the writ of assistance rather than having the Sheriff carry out the process, in violation of 25-13-301; (4) Galayda's service on Johnston of a notice of abandonment without sufficient facts showing absolute abandonment, in violation of this section; and (5) Galayda's failure to notify Johnston under 70-24-730 of the location of the property and of the steps necessary to reclaim the property. Failure to meet these notification and procedural steps was evidence that Johnston was wrongfully deprived of her property and constituted conversion on the part of Galayda. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 253 M 253, 833 P2d 176, 49 St. Rep. 495 (1992).

Abandonment — Lawful Termination — No Landlord Liability for Stolen Property: The Supreme Court rejected appellants' contention that they were unlawfully removed by respondents from rental premises and entitled to the rental value, plus the value of property stolen from the premises. The court found substantial evidence to support the District Court findings that the appellants had abandoned the premises and that the respondents lawfully terminated the rental agreement. Respondents committed no negligent act in retaking possession that would make them liable for appellants' stolen property. Furthermore, the respondents had a valid claim for rent and damages, contrary to the judgment of the District Court. Napier v. Adkison, 209 M 163, 678 P2d 1143, 41 St. Rep. 619A (1984).

A number of states by statute have recognized the defense: Cal.C.C. Sec. 1942.5; Conn.Gen.St.Ann., Sec. 42-540a [Supp.1969]; Del.Ch. 25 Sec. 5917 [Supp.1971]; Ha.Ch. 666 Sec. 43 [Supp.1971]; Ill.Rev.St.Ch. 80, Sec. 71 [Supp.1971]; Me.Rev.St.Tit. 14 Sec. 6001, 6002; Md.Laws Ch. 687 Sec. 9-10 [Supp.1971]; Mass.Comp.Laws Ann., Ch. 186 Sec. 18 [Supp.1970]; Mich.Comp.Laws Ann., Ch. 600, Sec. 5646 [Am'd P.S.1969]; Minn.Stat.Ch. 240 Sec. 566.03 [Supp. 1971]; N.J.Stat.Ann. 2A Sec. 42-10.10; N.Y. [McKinney's] Unconsolidated Laws, Tit. 23 Sec. 8590, 8609 [Supp.1971]; Pa.St.Ann.Ch. 35, Sec. 1700-1 [Supp.1971]; R.I.Gen.Laws Ann. Sec. 34-20-10 [1968]. The legislatures of Maine, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Michigan, and Rhode Island also protect tenants from eviction if they have organized or become a member of a tenants' union or similar organization.

The question as to whether the landlord is engaging in retaliatory conduct as prohibited by the statute is a question of fact to be determined by the court. In an action by or against the tenant, evidence of a complaint within one year before the alleged act of retaliation creates a rebuttable presumption that the landlord's conduct was in retaliation. This presumption will not arise if the tenant made the complaint after notice of a proposed rent increase or diminution of services.

Case Notes

Evidence of Retaliatory Conduct — Award of Damages Proper: This section prohibits retaliatory conduct by a landlord against a tenant under certain circumstances. Whether a landlord has engaged in retaliatory conduct is a question of fact. In the present case, substantial evidence supported the trial court's findings that a landlord's attempt to evict tenants was retaliatory after the tenants wrote to the landlord complaining of conditions, joined a tenants' association, and testified before the Legislature in support of amendments to The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977. Given the finding of retaliatory conduct, the court properly awarded the tenants damages equal to 3 months' rent pursuant to 70-24-411. Further, the landlord's violation of the retaliation statute was a defense to the landlord's action to regain possession pursuant to 70-24-441. Swenson v. Janke, 274 M 354, 908 P2d 678, 52 St. Rep. 1272 (1995).

Evidence of Retaliatory Conduct — Award of Damages Proper: Section 70-24-431 prohibits retaliatory conduct by a landlord against a tenant under certain circumstances. 70-24-442. Attorney fees — costs.

Case Notes

Landlord-Tenant Dispute — Denial of Attorney Fees for Minor Award Proper — Denial of Costs Improper — Remanded for Award of Costs: Landlords sued their former tenants, alleging that the tenants had caused considerable damage to the rental property. After significant litigation, which involved the obtaining of and setting aside of a default judgment, the landlords were awarded approximately $2,000. They then sought to recover their costs and attorney fees of $20,000. The District Court denied both their requests. The landlords appealed, and the Supreme Court agreed that the District Court had correctly interpreted the rental agreement as providing for attorney fees only in the event of an eviction, which had not occurred in this case. Furthermore, 70-24-442, which allows for the award of attorney fees, is discretionary; 25-10-101, however, which provides for an award of costs to the successful plaintiff, is mandatory. Therefore, the denial of attorney fees was proper given the circumstances, but the District Court erred in ordering the parties to pay their own costs. Accordingly, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court to determine the proper amount of costs to award the landlords. Benintendi v. Hein, 2011 MT 298, 363 Mont. 32, 265 P.3d 1239.

Lease Provision May Not Require Tenant to Waive Rights Provided by Landlord and Tenant Act: The landlord's standardized rental agreement contained a provision holding a tenant terminating a lease prior to the lease's expiration date liable for all attorney fees and costs incurred by the landlord due to the tenant's breach of the lease. The Supreme Court held that the language of the Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act specifically authorized the awarding of attorney fees to the prevailing party and also provided that a lease agreement could not contain a provision requiring a tenant to waive a right granted by the Act. Summers v. Crestview Apartments, 2010 MT 164, 357 Mont. 123, 236 P.3d 586.

Failure of Either Party to Prevail in Landlord-Tenant Case — Attorney Fees Inappropriate: The Justice's Court awarded plaintiffs attorney fees and costs in a landlord-tenant action, and the District Court agreed and remanded for a determination of reasonableness of the amount of fees and costs to be awarded. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that reasonable attorney fees are statutorily authorized to the prevailing party in a landlord-tenant action pursuant to this section and that with respect to reasonableness, there must be some type of proof of amount and reasonableness introduced into the record by counsel. Although the disposition by the District Court was otherwise correct, the court erred in affirming that plaintiffs were entitled to attorney fees in the first place because there was no prevailing party in the case. Both parties had separate final judgments rendered in their favor, though on different claims for relief set forth in the complaint, and because each party prevailed on different issues, neither party was entitled to attorney fees, and the Supreme Court reversed the award. Stanley v. Lemire, 2006 MT 304, 334 M 489, 148 P3d 643 (2006).

Insured Landlord Allowed Attorney Fees Under Residential Landlord and Tenant Act — Tripp Standard Inapplicable: Plaintiffs suffered damages when a fire in a mobile home owned by landlord defendant spread to plaintiffs' property. After a jury found in favor of defendant, the trial court awarded defendant attorney fees, and plaintiffs appealed the award. Plaintiffs asserted that defendant was not entitled to attorney fees as an insured landlord and argued that if an insured landlord is permitted to recover fees under this section, the court should extend Tripp v. Jeld-Wen, Inc., 2005 MT 121, 327 M 146, 112 P3d 1018 (2005), and require that a successful defendant show that plaintiff's action was frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation before awarding attorney fees. The Supreme Court disagreed on both issues. Nothing in this section distinguishes between insured and uninsured parties in an award of attorney fees to the successful parties. In addition, the Tripp standard applies to actions under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973 in providing a preference for protecting the interests of a plaintiff over a defendant, but The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 provides equal protections for both landlord and tenant, even in cases when a plaintiff is represented by pro bono counsel. The Supreme Court declined to extend the Tripp standard to a successful defendant entitled to collect attorney fees under The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act. Coleman Constr., Inc. v. Kudrna, 2006 MT 98, 332 M 112, 136 P3d 970 (2006).

Damages for Carbon Monoxide Poisoning — Applicability of Landlord and Tenant Act to Third Parties — Act Sufficiently Pleaded — Fees Payable Though Not Specifically Requested: Kunst, a guest at the apartment leased by Erpenbach, and Erpenbach were granted a directed verdict as to liability in their suit against Pass, the landlord, that both were poisoned by carbon monoxide in the apartment building. The jury returned an award of $5,000 to each plaintiff. The District Court Judge, who had taken over the case from a judge who had retired after hearing the case, denied attorney fees on the basis that the previous judge concluded that Pass was liable only under a "general theory of negligence". The Supreme Court reviewed the record and determined that the former judge had in fact left open the issue of whether The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 applied. The Supreme Court pointed out that the complaint either made reference in every count to the Act or incorporated the Act by reference and that a review of the record showed that the plaintiffs had also moved for a directed verdict pursuant to the Act. Although the District Court didn't expressly hold that Pass had violated the Act, the Supreme Court held that as a matter of law, Pass had violated certain provisions of the Act. The Supreme Court also held that a third party, such as Kunst, was covered by the Act because: (1) a third party is an "aggrieved party", as used in 70-24-401, as demonstrated by the official comments to the corresponding section of the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act; (2) Oregon, with a similar statute, includes third parties as aggrieved parties; and (3) the official comments to the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act also demonstrate that the standards contained in the Act apply more broadly than only to persons who have a contract with the landlord. Because the Act applies, the Supreme Court held that the attorney fee provisions contained in this section also apply. In response to the defendants' argument that the complaint did not specifically request payment of attorney fees, the Supreme Court responded that: (1) the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure require only notice pleading and that because the action was brought pursuant to the Act and the Act contains a provision for attorney fees, it should have been apparent to the defendants that they could be ordered to pay fees; (2) the defendants' argument that they had no opportunity to defend against the claim for fees was without merit; and (3) the plaintiffs were a "prevailing party", the motion for fees was timely filed because it was done immediately after the District Court granted the plaintiffs' motion for a directed verdict, and there is no statutory time limit in Montana in which to file a motion for fees, as there is a time limit in 25-10-501 to file a motion for costs. Because fees were denied by the District Court for a legal reason and the District Court misconstrued the law, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court in order for the District Court to exercise its discretion in awarding fees. Kunst v. Pass, 1998 MT 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 289 (1998).

Attorney Fees Properly Awarded to Prevailing Tenant: Tenant Taylor prevailed in District Court on all issues except whether landlord Whalen included a prohibited provision in the rental agreement. That issue was also decided in Taylor's favor by the Supreme Court; therefore, Taylor was entitled to attorney fees, costs, and necessary disbursements. The fact that the award was made to legal services, despite Congress's 1996 prohibition on those awards, had no affect in this case because the assistance was provided prior to enactment of the federal provision. Whalen v. Taylor, 278 M 293, 925 P2d 462, 53 St. Rep. 914 (1996).

Reasonable Attorney Fees in Landlord and Tenant Act Action: Applying the guidelines for determining reasonableness of attorney fees as set out in Majers v. Shining Mtn., 230 M 373, 750 P2d 449 (1988), in light of the fact that defendants' witness testified to all seven guideline factors and plaintiff neither objected to nor rebutted the testimony, the Supreme Court affirmed the award of attorney fees in the initial case in which defendants prevailed and granted an award of attorney fees in the appellate case that affirmed the trial court award. Swenson v. Janke, 274 M 354, 908 P2d 678, 52 St. Rep. 1272 (1995).

Acceptance of Refund of Deposit as Waiver of Claims — Prohibited Lease Provision — Allegations Under Two Acts: Solem and others rented an apartment from Chilcote under a written lease containing a provision stating that acceptance of a refund of a security deposit constituted a waiver of all claims against the landlord. The tenants brought an action for return of their security deposit under Title 70, ch. 25, commonly known as the Residential Tenants' Security Deposits Act, and made other claims under The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 as well. The Supreme Court held that the provision waiving claims against the landlord was illegal under 70-24-202 and this section. The fact that the tenants had sued for return of their security deposit did not prohibit their right to recover fees under the Act. Solem v. Chilcote, 274 M 72, 906 P2d 209, 52 St. Rep. 1128 (1995).

1991 Amendment: In (1), near end after "deduction", inserted "including rent owed under 70-24-441(3)"; inserted (2) relating to inspection of premises; and in (3), in second sentence before "notice", inserted "written" and inserted last sentence relating to notice by certified mail.

Applicability: Section 6, Ch. 505, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to all tenancies in existence 30 days after [the effective date of this act] [effective October 1, 1991]."

Case Notes

Future Rent Not Deductible From Security Deposit: When the tenants terminated a lease agreement 8 months prior to the lease's expiration date, the landlord deducted the future monthly rent from the tenants' security deposit. The Supreme Court said statutory language clearly stated that a landlord could deduct only rent owed at the time of termination from the security deposit. Summers v. Crestview Apartments, 2010 MT 164, 357 Mont. 123, 236 P.3d 586.

Withholding for Repairs and Rent — Proration of Rent Under Unexecuted Lease Modification Upheld: Solem and other tenants leased an apartment from Chilcote under a written month-to-month lease with a $300 security deposit. On March 15, the tenants gave an oral 30-day notice of termination, but Chilcote offered to prorate their rent if they would leave by April 1, which the tenants agreed to do. Chilcote also gave the tenants a written notice of damages and cleaning expenses and deducted charges for damages and cleaning and the prorated rent. The tenants objected to the deductions. The Supreme Court held that Chilcote was not required to give written notice of needed repairs but only notice of damages, which he did, entitling Chilcote to retain $8 for a nail hole. The Supreme Court found that the District Court did not misapprehend the evidence that no notice of necessary cleaning was received by the tenants and that there was no credible proof of a working smoke detector and approved the return of the money withheld for cleaning and the smoke detector. However, because the District Court properly held that the written lease could not be modified by an unexecuted oral agreement, the Supreme Court allowed Chilcote to charge the tenants for the time that the property was not re-leased to another renter. Solem v. Chilcote, 274 M 72, 906 P2d 209, 52 St. Rep. 1128 (1995).

The Supreme Court held that the tenants were still the prevailing party under this section and were entitled to

CHAPTER 26
LANDLORD AND TENANT
RESIDENTIAL AND COMMERCIAL

Chapter Case Notes

Claimed Fraud Resulting in Benefit to Lessee — Summary Judgment Proper: Nentwig claimed fraud in failure by United Industry to renew her commercial lease. However, Nentwig received everything to which she would have been entitled under the lease in effect at the time the lease extension would have been signed, and in fact, rather than being damaged by the alleged fraud, she actually received benefits in the form of lower rent during the term of the lease. It was not error for the trial court to summarily dismiss the fraud claim based on the void option provision. Nentwig v. United Indus., Inc., 256 M 134, 845 P2d 99, 49 St. Rep. 1172 (1992).

Allegation That Lessee Violated Implied Covenant Not to Create Nuisance on Leased Premises: Plaintiffs, owners of a building in which defendants, lessees, operated a bar, filed an unlawful detainer action against defendants pursuant to 70-27-108. Plaintiffs claimed that defendants, by allowing loud music and noise in the bar, were violating an implied covenant not to operate their bar in such a manner as to create a nuisance. The trial judge ruled that the lease could not be canceled under any theory of nuisance because defendants were doing what they had a right to do, operate a bar. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that because substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's finding that the bar was not being operated as a nuisance, it was unnecessary to determine whether Montana law recognizes in real property leases an implied covenant on the part of the lessee to use the leased premises so as not to injure the lessor by creating a nuisance. Martinson v. Thompson, 205 M 264, 667 P2d 423, 40 St. Rep. 1259 (1983).

Permission to Sublease Unreasonably Withheld in Violation of Lease Provision: Where the defendants, who rented office space from the plaintiff, were refused permission to sublet the space to the state parole board and were subsequently sued for damages when they quit the premises, the finding by the District Court that permission was "unreasonably withheld" in violation of the lease was not clearly erroneous. When a lessor agrees he will not unreasonably withhold consent to sublease, he is governed by principles of fair dealing and commercial reasonableness. Arbitrary considerations of taste, sensibility, or convenience are not proper criteria for the landlord's consent. As there was no showing that the parole board had been or would be a commercially unsuitable tenant, the plaintiff's failure to consent was unreasonable. Brigham Young Univ. v. Seman, 206 M 440, 672 P2d 15, 40 St. Rep. 1767 (1983).

Rights and Liabilities of Assignee:

Under an oil and gas lease whatever remedies the lessor has against the lessee may be enforced against an assignee of the lessee. Irwin v. Marvel Petroleum Corp., 139 M 413, 365 P2d 221 (1961).

Where one holds as assignee of an oil and gas sublease, his rights and liabilities in an action seeking its termination must be determined from it and not from the original lease to the sublessor, there being neither privity of estate nor privity of contract between him and the lessor.

This section has no application as between the original lessor and the assignee of the sublease but does apply as between the assignee and the sublessor. McNamer Realty Co. v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 76 M 332, 247 P 166 (1926).

70-26-109. Change of lease terms by notice.

Case Notes

Essential Terms: A letter between landlord and tenant was not an enforceable lease on which the tenant could bring a contract action because it failed to set forth material and essential terms necessary for the enforcement of the renewal provisions of a lease. Therefore, only a month-to-month lease existed. Drug Fair NW. v. Hooper Enterprises, Inc., 226 M 31, 733 P2d 1285, 44 St. Rep. 435 (1987).

Intent: Intent of this section is to inform tenants of rent increase, not to gain jurisdiction over them. Walker v. Tschache, 162 M 213, 510 P2d 9 (1973).

Notice Served Upon Tenant: Notice requirement of this section did not mean jurisdictional service and was fulfilled when landlord placed timely rent increase notices in addressed envelopes in tenants' mailboxes. Walker v. Tschache, 162 M 213, 510 P2d 9 (1973).

Increase in Rent: A tenant from month to month, upon being served with statutory notice of increase in rent upon expiration of the month, may deliver up the premises to landlord at expiration of the month, or tenant may hold over and continue in possession, in which event he assents to changed terms, rents, and conditions specified in the notice. State ex rel. Needham v. Justice Court, 119 M 89, 171 P2d 351 (1946).

Tenant Holding Over:

A tenant must deliver up premises to landlord on termination of lease, and a tenant can hold over rightfully only pursuant to valid agreement with landlord. The tenant may hold over by laches of landlord who at his election may treat tenant as a trespasser or accept him as tenant, but a tenant holding over has no election to regard himself as a tenant. State ex rel. Needham v. Justice Court, 119 M 89, 171 P2d 351 (1946).

Where tenant from month to month refused to pay increased rental as required by statutory notice served upon him by landlords, landlords by serving upon tenant 3 days' notice in writing elected to treat him as a tenant from month to month, and upon being served with such notice, tenant had 3 days in which to pay the rent or to deliver up the premises. By continuing in possession without paying the rent or delivering up the possession, tenant became guilty of unlawful detainer. State ex rel. Needham v. Justice Court, 119 M 89, 171 P2d 351 (1946).

70-26-110. Lease of city lot for over 75 years void.

"City Lot" Defined: The words "city lot" mean a lot within the limits of a city, regardless of its other characteristics. Lerch v. Missoula Brick & Tile Co., 45 M 314, 123 P 25 (1912).

Operation and Effect: This section applies to city and town lots and has no bearing upon 70-26-207 (since repealed). Lerch v. Missoula Brick & Tile Co., 45 M 314, 123 P 25 (1912).

Part 2
Commercial

Part Case Notes

Lease Provision Precluding Recovery of Unpaid Rent Beyond Time of Repossession: Tenant Anderson defaulted on payment of a commercial lease, and lessor Grenfell changed the locks, effectively retaking possession of the property. The District Court awarded Grenfell unpaid rent and utilities, plus future rent, utilities, and penalties for the remaining term of the lease. Applying Knight v. OMI Corp., 174 M 72, 568 P2d 552 (1977), the Supreme Court held that in order for future liability for rent subsequent to the landlord's cancellation and repossession to accrue, the lease must contain clear language to that effect. Here, the lease provided that Grenfell could recover rent due up to the time of entry, but the award for unpaid rent and utilities beyond the time that Grenfell took repossession could not be sustained. Further, Grenfell's claim for unlawful detainer was also void because once locked out, Anderson could in no sense unlawfully detain the premises absent a showing of reentry. Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999). See also Gallatin Valley Medical Dental Center, Inc. v. Lemley, 206 M 241, 670 P2d 83, 40 St. Rep. 1622 (1983).

Breach of Indefinite Term Sublease: A corporate business manager caused a corporation to pay the entire amount of rent for property subleased by the corporation from his solely owned business after he and another corporate shareholder agreed the corporation would pay only one-half of the rent. The court properly found a breach of an indefinite term sublease agreement. Evidence did not support the contention that the business manager orally modified the sublease agreement. He made unauthorized expenditures by unilaterally causing the corporation to pay the full amount of his solely owned company's obligation under the lease. Northwest Plating Co. v. Hoffman, 234 M 360, 763 P2d 44, 45 St. Rep. 1971 (1988).

Ratification of Lease by Accepting Compensation — Lease in Trust: Real property for which a lease was executed by husband and wife to lessee in 1956 for a 10-year term with 3-year extensions was transferred to a trust upon their divorce. The trustees were husband, wife, and daughter, with husband having "general control" over the business of the trust, but in other matters two of the three trustees were required to sign. At the expiration of the lease and the original three renewals, husband alone executed a new lease agreement to original lessee that was similar to the original but increased the rent. The rent increase was received and noted by wife and daughter. Three years later they sued husband and lessee for damages, unlawful detention, and liquidated damages, contending there was no valid lease signed by two of the three trustees. The Supreme Court held that by "generally operating" the trust the husband had authority to make a new lease. The actions of wife and daughter receiving increased compensation were notification to them of the lease change, and failure to act ratified the lease agreement even if the signature of one of them was required for its execution. Wyman v. Wyman, 208 M 57, 676 P2d 181, 41 St. Rep. 170 (1984).

Action to Collect Rent on Default of Commercial Lease — Interpretation of Lease and Default Notice: In a commercial lease, the lessee's obligation to pay the difference in rent between the lease amount and the amount received by the landlord upon reletting after default was not extinguished by a provision in the default notice letter which provided that the landlord "does elect without further notice to terminate the lease . . . reserving to itself all other rights and remedies contained in said lease in the event of default". The lease contained a provision allowing the landlord the right to collect lost rent. Construction of the lease instrument and the default notice letter provided for a termination of the lessee's rights in the lease in order to allow for reletting while holding the lessee liable for rent. Gallatin Valley Medical Dental Center, Inc. v. Lemley, 206 M 241, 670 P2d 83, 40 St. Rep. 1622 (1983).

Assignment of Lease — Waiver of Landlord's Right to Object: A lease contained a provision requiring the lessee to obtain the written consent of the lessor before subleasing or assigning any part of the leased premises. Lessee obtained written consent for the 1968 assignment but not for the 1971 assignment. The court held that the landlord's consent to the original assignment obviates the necessity of consent to subsequent assignments. In addition, the landlord knew the lease had been assigned and continued to receive rent payments for 4 years before a dispute arose. Under these facts, the landlord has long waived any right to assert breach of the restriction. Kosena v. Eck, 195 M 12, 635 P2d 1287, 38 St. Rep. 1736 (1981).

70-26-201. Term of lease when none specified.

Case Notes

Jury Instructions — Oral Agreement for Lease: In trial involving oral agreement for lease of land for grazing purposes, when term of lease was in dispute and when there was no preponderance of evidence contrary to the presumption of a yearly lease, it was not error to refuse to instruct on a presumption of a month-to-month tenancy. Hill v. Turley, 218 M 511, 710 P2d 50, 42 St. Rep. 1783 (1985).

Oral Lease — Usage — Partial Performance: The parties entered into an oral agreement for lease of defendants' lands for purposes of grazing cattle. The plaintiff claimed the lease was month-to-month, and defendants claimed lease was a 3-year lease. Payments were monthly. After 1 ½ years, the plaintiff terminated the lease. The defendants refused to allow the plaintiff to remove his cattle and asserted an agister's lien on the cattle. At trial, there was testimony that standard practice and usage in the area was to lease grazing land by the year. The jury found in favor of a yearly lease and awarded damages to the defendants. The Supreme Court affirmed. The partial performance of an oral lease for a term beyond that allowed by the Statute of Frauds will take it out of the operation of the statute. Hill v. Turley, 218 M 511, 710 P2d 50, 42 St. Rep. 1783 (1985).

Notice to Quit: Landlord could not maintain an action for unlawful detainer where notice to quit was not given to tenant 30 days prior to expiration of year-to-year tenancy. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Oral Lease:

Entry by a tenant under an invalid oral lease may create a tenancy from year to year, month to month, or a tenancy at will depending upon the circumstances. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Under this section it is possible to have an oral lease for at least 1 year without an expression as to time therein. This is consistent with 28-2-903, Statute of Frauds, which voids an oral agreement for the leasing of realty of a period longer than 1 year. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Presumption as to Term:

When tenant, pursuant to an oral agreement, entered into possession of property on April 1, 1957, to conduct a meat processing and selling business, his hiring of the property was presumed to be for 1 year from its commencement. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Where a store building is leased and there is no testimony of any usage on the subject, the lease is presumed to run for at least 1 year. Giovanetti v. Schab, 41 M 297, 109 P 141 (1910).

Presumption Rebuttable: The presumption that hiring is to be for 1 year is a rebuttable presumption. If the presumption is not controverted, the facts must be found according to the presumption. If it is controverted, the presumption must be given weight as evidence. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Tenancy From Month to Month: Payment of a monthly rental does not compel the conclusion that a tenancy is from month to month where other facts indicate to the contrary. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Tenancy From Year to Year: Where tenant hired property for meat business under an oral agreement, the tenancy was initially for a year with implied renewals for 1 year, resulting in a tenancy from year to year. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Construction of Oral Farm Lease: Judgment for tenant in action for construction of an oral farm lease was reversed and the case was remanded for a new trial where the evidence was insufficient to show either a mutual agreement or usage and the record was completely confused as to when the lease commenced. Enott v. Hinkle, 140 M 206, 369 P2d 413 (1962).

70-26-202. Rent — when payable.

Case Notes

Time for Payment of Rent: Where landlord and tenant agree upon a certain rental per year, it is payable at the end of each year of the tenancy, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. Besse v. McHenry, 89 M 520, 300 P 199 (1931).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Improper Invocation of Statutory Remedies: Lessee Bengala complained to lessor bank regarding flooding, sidewalk repairs, and sewer system malfunctions on the leased premises. The sidewalk settled back down and was no longer in need of immediate repair; the sewer system was repaired and functioned properly; and the bank was making efforts to repair the flood control structure. Bengala remained a tenant but refused to pay rent even though his use of the leasehold was not substantially impaired. Bengala presented no evidence to support his claims of damage to reputation and loss of business profits. Bengala not only failed to properly invoke lessee's remedies pursuant to this section, but he was not entitled to invoke them. The District Court properly found Bengala liable for rent payments, late payment penalties, and reasonable attorney fees. Bengala v. Conservative Sav. Bank, 250 M 101, 818 P2d 371, 48 St. Rep. 880 (1991).

Substantial Interference Required — Remedies Exclusive: Plaintiff entered into a lease agreement for a motel in Forsyth that was not yet completed. The attorney for plaintiff prepared the lease. The county health and building code inspector found deficiencies requiring correction before the motel could be licensed. The parties negotiated a reduction of payments to a percentage of actual income. Many of the deficiencies were corrected, and the facility was issued a city business license. Plaintiff moved out of the motel and made no further payments. Plaintiff brought suit claiming breach by the defendant. The District Court awarded judgment and net damages to defendant. Plaintiff contended on appeal that the court had ignored this section. The Supreme Court held that the dilapidations that a landlord ought to repair under this section are those which significantly diminish the enjoyment of the premises or substantially interfere with the purposes for which the premises are intended. The court found the deficiencies were not significant enough to have an adverse financial impact upon the motel's operation and that steps had been taken to repair them. The court also found that the reduction in lease payments suggested an agreement to deduct and repair. Plaintiff could not both deduct and repair and vacate the premises without further obligation under this section. The judgment was affirmed. Bunke, Inc. v. Johnson, 205 M 125, 666 P2d 1234, 40 St. Rep. 1163 (1983).

Tenant Unilaterally Terminating Lease — Damages: Plaintiff entered into a lease agreement for a motel in Forsyth that was not yet completed. The attorney for plaintiff prepared the lease. The county health and building code inspector found deficiencies requiring correction before the motel could be licensed. The parties negotiated a reduction of payments to a percentage of actual income. Many of the deficiencies were corrected, and the facility was issued a city business license. Plaintiff moved out of the motel and made no further payments. Plaintiff brought suit claiming breach by the defendant. The District Court awarded judgment and net damages to defendant. Plaintiff contended that by taking possession of the motel and operating it, defendant impliedly consented to the surrender, thereby extinguishing further obligations under the lease. The Supreme Court held that when a tenant unilaterally terminates the lease of commercial residential premises and vacates, without justification under 70-26-203, and the landlord expressly refuses consent and subsequently operates the facility to mitigate damages, the tenant is liable for net damages. Bunke, Inc. v. Johnson, 205 M 125, 666 P2d 1234, 40 St. Rep. 1163 (1983).

Damages Denied: Lessee of hotel had the choice of making repairs demanded by fire marshal (now state fire prevention and investigation program of the Department of Justice) and deducting costs from the rent payment to the extent of 1 month's rent or vacating the premises, but lessee cannot recover damages from lessors for their failure to put the hotel into good condition. Lowe v. Root, 166 M 150, 531 P2d 674 (1975).

Extent of Dilapidation: The provisions of this and the preceding section apply only to dilapidations which render the leased premises unfit for habitation. Lake v. Emigh, 118 M 325, 167 P2d 575 (1946).

Damages: Where a landlord, after notice of dilapidations in a hotel building in need of repair, failed to repair, the tenant under this section had the option of making the repairs himself at a cost not to exceed 1 month's rent and deducting the expense from the rent or vacating the premises without further liability for rent, but had no cause of action for damages for injury to his personal property and for loss of profits. Noe v. Cameron, 62 M 527, 205 P 256 (1922).

CRP Contract — No Extension of Lease Term — Tenants Remain on Property as Holdover Tenants Under Same Terms as Existed Prior to Expiration of Lease: The Smiths argued that when they and their landlord entered into a contract with the federal government to enroll the farm land that they leased in a conservation program, that contract extended the term of the lease because the government contract was for a period longer than the original lease term. The Supreme Court held that the government contract did not affect the underlying lease agreement and that it could not extend the term of the lease. The Supreme Court further held that the Smiths, by remaining on the land and continuing to work it, did so as holdover tenants under the same lease terms as existed prior to the expiration of the lease. Eagle Watch Inv., Inc. v. Smith, 278 M 187, 924 P2d 257, 53 St. Rep. 757 (1996).

Terms to Be Contained in Oral Agreement Made After First Year's Oral Renewal: Any oral agreement made after a renewal of 1 year cannot be presumed to contain all terms of the initial written agreement. An oral agreement made after the first year's oral renewal constitutes a new agreement and must contain its own terms. In the present case, the right of first refusal was not renewed pursuant to the renewal clause in the original written lease because that renewal clause was inadequate to renew the written lease. Therefore, the right of first refusal located in the original lease agreement ended at the conclusion of the written lease. Willson v. Terry, 265 M 119, 874 P2d 1234, 51 St. Rep. 462 (1994), following Lee v. Shaw, 251 M 118, 822 P2d 1061 (1992), and distinguishing Nevala v. McKay, 178 M 327, 583 P2d 1065 (1978), and Rumph v. Dale Edwards, Inc., 183 M 359, 600 P2d 163 (1979).

Option to Purchase as to Holdover Tenant: An option to purchase contained in an agreement for lease of agricultural lands does not carry over into a holdover tenancy. Upon expiration of the term of the lease, as specified in the lease agreement, the lessee became a holdover tenant and lost his right of first refusal, even though the holdover was by permission of the lessor. Nevala v. McKay, 178 M 327, 583 P2d 1065 (1978). See also Situ v. Smole, 2013 MT 33, 369 Mont. 1, 303 P.3d 747.

Term of Lease Modified: When an agricultural lease containing a provision for automatic renewal was modified to extend the original term of the lease, the modification constituted a new agreement as to the term of the lease, thus abrogating the automatic renewal provision. The lessee was rendered a holdover tenant upon expiration of the term of the lease as modified. Nevala v. McKay, 178 M 327, 583 P2d 1065 (1978).

"Or" Type Mining Lease: Where lease contained provision that lessee may pay minimum delay rental, 8-month retention by lessor of payment resulted in a valid extension as the effect of the provision obligated the lessee to produce "or" pay delay rentals making it incumbent upon the lessor to declare a forfeiture at the close of the primary term. Lessee's tender of payment was a valid and binding extension of the lease as lessor's only response was to hold the same for a period of time in excess of 8 months. Carroll v. Eaton, 168 M 150, 541 P2d 64 (1975).

Notice to Quit: Where notice to quit was not given by landlord to tenant 30 days prior to expiration of year-to-year tenancy, tenancy was deemed to be renewed for another year and unlawful detainer action could not be maintained by landlord. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Tenancy From Year to Year:

Where property was hired for meat business under 70-26-201, the tenancy was initially for a year with implied renewal for 1 year, resulting in a tenancy from year to year. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Where a tenant, after the expiration of his lease, held over at the invitation of the owner, paying rental to the latter, a tenancy from year to year was created, which upon proper notice was terminable at the pleasure of the purchaser of the property. Stoltze Land Co. v. Westberg, 63 M 38, 206 P 407 (1922).

Payments Under Expired Lease: Where at the time a Writ of Assistance was issued pursuant to foreclosure decree, the land in question was held by a lessee whose term had expired, a payment was made by him to the owner, not as rent but as the owner's share of wool grown by the tenant under the lease agreement, such payment did not have the effect of a renewal of the lease under this section and hence did not defeat the Writ. Lepper v. Home Ranch Co., 90 M 558, 4 P2d 722 (1931).

Notice Insufficient to Terminate Lease at End of Month Sufficient to Terminate Tenancy at End of Following Month: The tenant, Rogers, argued that his commercial month-to-month lease had never been properly terminated because the notice given to him on October 3 was not sufficient to terminate the lease on October 30. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court held that while the notice was not timely with respect to terminating the lease on October 30, additional notice need not be given by the landlord in order to have the lease terminate on November 30. Sage v. Rogers, 257 M 229, 848 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 244 (1993).

Judicial Proceedings Required: Unlawful detainer and statutory treble damages awarded pursuant to a finding of unlawful detainer are not viable remedies available to a plaintiff/lessor until either expiration of the lease term with a finding of the lessee's wrongful holding over or termination of the lease agreement and forfeiture are established by judicial proceedings. Mont. Williams Double Diamond Corp. v. Hill, 175 M 248, 573 P2d 649 (1978).

State Action — Procedural Due Process — Contents of Notice: Where landlord has freedom to select tenants, receipt of federal benefits in the form of mortgage insurance and rent supplements does not make him an agency of federal government or State of Montana so as to require him to include in his 30-day notice of termination and notice to quit to tenant reasons which would amount to good cause and entitle tenant to a hearing to establish existence of good cause, even though tenant qualified to receive federal rent supplement, as no state action is involved. Flamm v. Real-Blt, Inc., 168 M 351, 543 P2d 190 (1975).

Time for Giving Notice:

An action in unlawful detainer cannot be maintained under 70-27-108 if the tenant is lawfully in possession under a tenancy from year to year without first giving notice 30 days prior to the anniversary date of the tenancy. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Where the parties had a verbal rental arrangement from month to month, notice given April 15, 1949, to vacate May 1, 1949, was not sufficient to form a basis of a court action to remove the tenants from the premises. Welsh v. Roehm, 125 M 517, 241 P2d 816 (1952).

Reversion of Crop and Proceeds Upon Termination of Lease: In determining that a crop reverted to landlords and that they became entitled to all proceeds upon termination of a lease of which they were not advised, the District Court was correct in not applying the doctrine of wayward crops. Section 70-26-206 provided the proper authority concerning entitlement to the crop because the tenancy came to an end due to a default before the lease was up and because no rent was paid for the year in question. Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477, 45 St. Rep. 108 (1988).

Share of "Away Going" Crop: When a tenant's farm lease terminated in the fall, he was not entitled to a share of the next year's crop because he didn't plant, cultivate, or harvest that crop. Chamberlain v. Evans, 180 M 511, 591 P2d 237 (1979), following Johnson v. Anderson Ranch Co., 142 M 251, 384 P2d 271 (1963).

Ownership of Crops: Unless a tenant at will becomes a wrongdoer by holding over, he may take the annual products of the soil and may cultivate and harvest the crops growing at the end of his tenancy, which makes him at all times the owner, as against the landlord, of the crops, whether growing or severed. Power Mercantile Co. v. Moore Mercantile Co., 55 M 401, 177 P 406 (1918), distinguished in Hamilton v. Rock, 121 M 245, 191 P2d 663 (1948).

CHAPTER 27
FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER
UNLAWFUL DETAINER

Chapter Case Notes

Claimed Fraud Resulting in Benefit to Lessee — Summary Judgment Proper: Nentwig claimed fraud in failure by United Industry to renew her commercial lease. However, Nentwig received everything to which she would have been entitled under the lease in effect at the time the lease extension would have been signed, and in fact, rather than being damaged by the alleged fraud, she actually received benefits in the form of lower rent during the term of the lease. It was not error for the trial court to summarily dismiss the fraud claim based on the void option provision. Nentwig v. United Indus., Inc., 256 M 134, 845 P2d 99, 49 St. Rep. 1172 (1992).

Part 1
Definitions and Preliminary Procedure

Part Case Notes

Abandonment With Rent Due — Rights of Lessor: Tenant leased premises so his daughter could operate a store. At the end of August, the daughter held a going-out-of-business sale and the store closed September 1. The 5-year lease had not ended at that time. On September 8, the lessor notified the tenant that rent was delinquent, requested its payment, and stated that an attempt would be made to find another tenant. The lease stated that if the store was vacated and the rent was not paid the lessor could retake and rent the store and that the tenant was liable for the remainder of the rent due under the lease. Under the lease, the court upheld summary judgment granting the lessor rent for the remainder of the lease term and attorney fees. The lessor was entitled to reenter and relet and was not liable for forcible entry or unlawful detainer. LIC, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 215 M 44, 692 P2d 1264, 42 St. Rep. 162 (1985).

70-27-102. Forcible entry defined.

Case Notes

Changing of Locks by Lessor Not Considered Forcible Entry or Forcible Detainer: When lessee Anderson defaulted on rent, Grenfell sent a default notice by certified mail to Anderson's address as listed in the lease, but Anderson never picked up the letter, and it was returned to Grenfell as unclaimed. Nevertheless, after 11 days, Grenfell retook possession of the leased property, changed the locks, and filed suit, alleging breach of the lease agreement, unlawful detainer, and violation of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Anderson filed a counterclaim against Grenfell, alleging forcible entry and forcible detainer for changing the locks. The District Court denied the counterclaims, and Anderson appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Grenfell broke nothing and entered the premises peaceably and without force, so no forcible entry occurred. Further, in Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818 (1999), it was determined that changing the locks effectively terminated the lease. Thus, Anderson's counterclaim for forcible detainer also failed because once the lease was terminated, Anderson's obligations under the agreement ended as a matter of law and Anderson could no longer claim a legal right to reenter and repossess the property. Grenfell v. Anderson, 2002 MT 225, 311 M 385, 56 P3d 326 (2002).

Landlord Evicting Tenant: Where the right to possession of real property is in dispute, the owners thereof may not take the law into their own hands and proceed by violence to evict the lessee and take possession. In order to secure such possession, resort must be had to the peaceful process of law. Brown v. Grenz, 127 M 49, 257 P2d 246 (1953).

Breaking of Door: Within the meaning of the forcible entry statute any opening of a closed door involving the use of force, however slight, even with the use of a key, if done without the consent of the person actually and peaceably in possession, is to be regarded as breaking open the door. Herzog v. The Texas Co., 88 M 580, 294 P 962 (1930).

Remedy for Possession: The purpose of this chapter is to furnish a summary remedy to obtain possession of real property and to prevent even rightful owners from taking the law into their own hands and proceeding to recover possession by violence. Herzog v. The Texas Co., 88 M 580, 294 P 962 (1930); Spellman v. Rhode, 33 M 21, 81 P 395 (1905).

Right to Possession:

Since neither title to nor the right of possession of real property can be made an issue in an action for forcible entry and detainer, allegation of either in a complaint in an action of that nature before a Justice of the Peace may be treated as surplusage and the complaint, otherwise sufficient, upheld. Lambert v. Helena Adjustment Co., 69 M 510, 222 P 1057 (1924).

In an action for forcible entry under this section, neither the title nor the right to the possession of land may be made matters of investigation. Spellman v. Rhode, 33 M 21, 81 P 395 (1905).

Pleadings: A complaint alleging that plaintiff was in possession of certain described lands, engaged in cultivating them as a homestead settlement, and that defendant forcibly and without right entered thereon and by force and arms ejected plaintiff therefrom states a cause of action for a forcible entry under subsection (1) of this section. Spellman v. Rhode, 33 M 21, 81 P 395 (1905).

Subsequent Acts of Plaintiff: Acts of plaintiff subsequent to the entry are no defense, and his abandonment of the land subsequent to the wrong complained of does not justify the previous wrongful acts of defendant. Spellman v. Rhode, 33 M 21, 81 P 395 (1905).

70-27-103. Forcible detainer defined.

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED AFTER 1979 AMENDMENT

Sufficient Evidence of Force and Possession to Constitute Forcible Detainer — Treble Damages Proper: Savoy contended that there was insufficient evidence of force and possession to satisfy the definition of forcible detainer, so the award of treble damages was erroneous. Applying Grenfell v. Anderson, 2002 MT 225, 311 M 385, 56 P3d 326 (2002), the Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's conclusion that Savoy's actions in destroying fences around disputed land, digging ditches across disputed roads, denying plaintiffs and the Sheriff access to the disputed land, and calling the Sheriff to complain of trespass whenever plaintiffs attempted to access the disputed property satisfied the definition of force and possession sufficient to constitute forcible detainer, so a treble damage award was warranted. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Changing of Locks by Lessor Not Considered Forcible Entry or Forcible Detainer: When lessee Anderson defaulted on rent, Grenfell sent a default notice by certified mail to Anderson's address as listed in the lease, but Anderson never picked up the letter, and it was returned to Grenfell as unclaimed. Nevertheless, after 11 days, Grenfell retook possession of the leased property, changed the locks, and filed suit, alleging breach of the lease agreement, unlawful detainer, and violation of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Anderson filed a counterclaim against Grenfell, alleging forcible entry and forcible detainer for changing the locks. The District Court denied the counterclaims, and Anderson appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Grenfell broke nothing and entered the premises peaceably and without force, so no forcible entry occurred. Further, in Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818 (1999), it was determined that changing the locks effectively terminated the lease. Thus, Anderson's counterclaim for forcible detainer also failed because once the lease was terminated, Anderson's obligations under the agreement ended as a matter of law and Anderson could no longer claim a legal right to reenter and repossess the property. Grenfell v. Anderson, 2002 MT 225, 311 M 385, 56 P3d 326 (2002).

Previous Possession Required: Plaintiff, d/b/a Starhaven Ranch, Ltd., purchased a ranch on a contract for deed from Crofts. Crofts had purchased the land on a contract basis from Clarnos. Crofts assigned their purchasers' interest in the contract to defendant. Crofts defaulted on a contract provision requiring them to obtain grazing permits and on their contract with Clarnos. Starhaven fell in default on its final downpayment. Crofts fell in default on the loan with defendant. The bank recorded the quitclaim deed from Crofts. The bank asserted it succeeded to the rights of the Croft-Starhaven contract and took action against Starhaven. Crofts disappeared. Starhaven made payment on the Clarno-Croft contract to prevent Clarnos from declaring a forfeiture. The bank asserted absolute ownership rights against Starhaven. The bank obtained the quitclaim deed Starhaven had executed to Crofts and recorded it. The bank then sent Starhaven a notice to vacate, triggering the proceedings. Starhaven refused to vacate. The trial court held Starhaven guilty of forcible detainer. On appeal, the Supreme Court held the trial court ignored the fact Starhaven had been in possession long before default on the downpayment and had obtained a temporary injunction entitling it to possession during the pendency of the proceedings. The bank was never in possession, so the elements of subsection (2) of this section were not present. No evidence of either force or threats of violence was presented. Neither the bank nor Crofts had a cause of action for forcible detainer. On rehearing, the court held that there were no facts in the record to support a finding of forcible detainer. Erickson v. First Nat'l Bank, 215 M 350, 697 P2d 1332, 42 St. Rep. 423 (1985).

Contract for Deed — Regaining Possession: The plaintiff entered into a contract to sell certain real property and an on-premises beer license. The contract was assigned to Borkoski. Borkoski allowed the beer license to be revoked and as a result was served with notice of default and cancellation of the contract. Plaintiff then brought an action for forcible detainer against Borkoski. On appeal, Borkoski argued that the summary proceeding of forcible detainer may not be used to recover property sold under contract for deed. The court distinguished Kransky v. Hensleigh, 146 M 486, 409 P2d 537 (1965), which held that an unlawful detainer action is proper only where there is a landlord-tenant relationship. The court said that Kransky applied only to actions brought under 70-27-108. The case at bar was brought under 70-27-103, and that section does not require a landlord-tenant relationship. The District Court did not commit error by allowing the forcible detainer action in this case. Kootenai Corp. v. Dayton, 184 M 19, 601 P2d 47 (1979).

CASES DECIDED BEFORE 1979 AMENDMENT

Evidence Before Justice: While actions to determine title to real estate are not triable in Justices' Courts, where title becomes important in determining the right of possession in forcible entry, forcible detainer, or unlawful detainer action, evidence thereof as an incident tending to show right to possession is admissible in such courts. State ex rel. Hamshaw v. Justice Court, 108 M 12, 88 P2d 1 (1939).

Pleadings:

An allegation in forcible detainer that defendant has unlawfully withheld possession by menaces and threats of violence and still unlawfully withholds possession of the property from plaintiff is a sufficient allegation of such facts. Kennedy v. Dickie, 27 M 70, 69 P 672 (1902).

Where the complaint in forcible detainer did not allege that defendant took possession in the night or in the absence of the owners, the action was under subsection (1) of this section, and the complaint was not invalid in failing to allege that plaintiff had been in peaceable and undisputed possession within 5 days before the entry of defendant; the plaintiff is not required to establish such fact either by subsection (1) of this section or by 70-27-203. Kennedy v. Dickie, 27 M 70, 69 P 672 (1902).

Under 70-27-103(1), a demand for possession is not essential to be alleged in a complaint which charges that the possession was peaceably acquired but is withheld unlawfully and by force. McCleary v. Crowley, 22 M 245, 56 P 227 (1899).

Verdict: In forcible detainer, a verdict is defective which fails to find that defendant detained the property. McCleary v. Crowley, 22 M 245, 56 P 227 (1899).

70-27-104. Tenancy at will — termination by notice.

Case Notes

Trust Indenture Foreclosure Sale — Waiver of Right to Notice: By executing a trust indenture and agreeing by one of its paragraphs to vacate the trust property on the 10th day following a foreclosure sale, the grantor named in the trust indenture waived any right to notice to vacate under this section. Rocky Mtn. Bank v. Stuart, 280 M 74, 928 P2d 243, 53 St. Rep. 1305 (1996).

Essential Terms: A letter between landlord and tenant was not an enforceable lease on which the tenant could bring a contract action because it failed to set forth material and essential terms necessary for the enforcement of the renewal provisions of a lease. Therefore, only a month-to-month lease existed. Drug Fair NW. v. Hooper Enterprises, Inc., 226 M 31, 733 P2d 1285, 44 St. Rep. 435 (1987).

State Action — Procedural Due Process — Contents of Notice: Where landlord has freedom to select tenants, receipt of federal benefits in the form of mortgage insurance and rent supplements does not make him an agency of federal government or State of Montana so as to require him to include in his 30-day notice of termination and notice to quit to tenant reasons which would amount to good cause and entitle tenant to a hearing to establish existence of good cause, even though tenant qualified to receive federal rent supplement, as no state action is involved. Flamm v. Real-Blt, Inc., 168 M 351, 543 P2d 190 (1975).

Notice to Surrender Possession: An action in unlawful detainer to recover possession of real property from a tenant at will cannot be maintained, under this section, 70-27-105, 70-27-106, and 70-27-108, without first terminating the tenancy by giving at least 30 days' notice in writing and after its termination, giving 3 days' notice to surrender possession. The complaint must show that both notices were given. Hence, where plaintiff alleged that the 30-day notice was given but failed to aver that the 3-day notice was likewise given, the complaint did not state a cause of action and the Justice's Court before which the action was brought was without jurisdiction to try the cause. Boucher v. St. George, 88 M 162, 293 P 315 (1930).

Notice of Change of Landlords: A notice to a tenant that at a day named a certain person would become his landlord and that he should "take due and timely notice and act accordingly" is not such a notice as is required by this section to be given by a landlord for purpose of terminating tenancy. Centennial Brewing Co. v. Rouleau, 49 M 490, 143 P 969 (1914).

Void Lease: One who enters into possession of real property under a lease rendered void by the Statute of Frauds becomes a tenant at will, which tenancy may be terminated by giving the notice prescribed by this section. Centennial Brewing Co. v. Rouleau, 49 M 490, 143 P 969 (1914).

Contract to Purchase: Mere occupancy of premises by defaulting vendee does not convert him into a tenant at will. To create the relation of landlord and tenant there must be a contract, express or implied. There cannot be an implied agreement for the occupancy of land, in face of an express contract that vendee holds possession under his right to purchase. Arnold v. Fraser, 43 M 540, 117 P 1064 (1911).

70-27-106. Reentry — when and how to be made.

Case Notes

Abandonment — Proper Mailed Notice of Lessor's Intent: Tenant leased a store so that his daughter could operate it. The daughter held a going-out-of-business sale and closed the store. Lessor mailed tenant a letter detailing the rent owed and lessor's intention to find a new tenant. The letter was proper notice of intent to reenter, since the written lease provided that a notice be mailed to a party at his post-office box number. LIC, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 215 M 44, 692 P2d 1264, 42 St. Rep. 162 (1985).

Abandonment — Repossession by Changing Locks: After a leased store held a going-out-of-business sale and closed, the manager of the shopping center the store was in entered the store to determine for lessor whether and how the premises were used. Thirteen days later the lessor changed the locks. Repossession occurred at that time and not when the shopping center manager entered. LIC, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 215 M 44, 692 P2d 1264, 42 St. Rep. 162 (1985).

70-27-108. Unlawful detainer defined.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Opinion Viability Affected by Amendment: Rules of cases decided under this section prior to July 1, 1979, may be affected by the 1979 amendment to 70-27-101, which added subsection (1) on applicability.

Case Notes

Lease Provision Precluding Recovery of Unpaid Rent Beyond Time of Repossession: Tenant Anderson defaulted on payment of a commercial lease, and lessor Grenfell changed the locks, effectively retaking possession of the property. The District Court awarded Grenfell unpaid rent and utilities, plus future rent, utilities, and penalties for the remaining term of the lease. Applying Knight v. OMI Corp., 174 M 72, 568 P2d 552 (1977), the Supreme Court held that in order for future liability for rent subsequent to the landlord's cancellation and repossession to accrue, the lease must contain clear language to that effect. Here, the lease provided that Grenfell could recover rent due up to the time of entry, but the award for unpaid rent and utilities beyond the time that Grenfell took repossession could not be sustained. Further, Grenfell's claim for unlawful detainer was also void because once locked out, Anderson could in no sense unlawfully detain the premises absent a showing of reentry. Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999). See also Gallatin Valley Medical Dental Center, Inc. v. Lemley, 206 M 241, 670 P2d 83, 40 St. Rep. 1622 (1983).

Grant of Equitable Relief From Forfeiture — Conditions: Defendant defaulted on a contract to operate a coal mine. The District Court granted summary judgment, finding no genuine issue of material fact regarding defendant's unlawful detainer. Defendant sought equitable relief pursuant to 28-1-104. The Supreme Court may, under appropriate circumstances, equitably relieve a party from the harsh effects of a forfeiture. Circumstances warranting equitable relief must not only meet the statutory requirements of tendering full compensation within a reasonable time after service of notice of default and not acting in a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent manner, but the party seeking relief must also assert facts that appeal to the conscience of the court of equity. Mere financial inability is not sufficient to appeal to the court's conscience. In this case, defendant's request for equitable relief was deficient because it did not meet statutory and common-law criteria, so the grant of summary judgment was affirmed. Glacier Park Co. v. Mtn., Inc., 285 M 420, 949 P2d 229, 54 St. Rep. 1222 (1997), following Kovacich v. Metals Bank & Trust Co., 139 M 449, 365 P2d 639 (1961), distinguishing Parrott v. Heller, 171 M 212, 557 P2d 819 (1976), and followed in Weter v. Archambault, 2002 MT 336, 313 M 284, 61 P3d 771 (2002).

Construction — Provisions Relating to Agricultural Tenant Who Holds Over for More Than Sixty Days: The provisions of subsection (2) of this section relating to a tenant on agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days apply only to a subsection (2) default in rent on agricultural lands and do not apply to a case under subsection (1) or (3) or to a subsection (2) case of a default in rent on nonagricultural lands. Cases to the contrary (cited in the opinion) are overruled. Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996).

No Right Under Terminated Agreements to Holdover Upon Land: Lee waived his right of first refusal, which had ripened when the owner considered an offer to buy. Lee refused to vacate the property after his lease terminated and the owner asked him to leave. In the owner's unlawful detainer action against Lee, the only obstruction to a sale was Lee's refusal to leave. One cannot benefit from one's own wrong, and Lee could not successfully claim that his possession was lawful under the agreement granting him the right of first refusal. Summary judgment for the owner was proper because the owner initially showed that there were no genuine issues of material fact, and Lee presented nothing to the contrary. Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996).

Unlawful Detainer Distinguished From Wrongful Occupation — Damages: Personal representative took possession of real property that had been sold under contract by the deceased owner and filed action to rescind the contract because of fraud, misrepresentation, undue influence, and unconscionability. The personal representative's claims were determined to be without merit in a prior appeal of this case. Buyers counterclaimed for recovery of lost rent, based on the personal representative's unlawful possession of the property. Both parties referred to the action as one for forcible or unlawful detainer. The court held that the action was properly described as one for wrongful occupation under 27-1-318. The court further held that, in contrast to damages provided in 70-27-205 for forcible or unlawful detainer, no treble damages are provided in an action for wrongful occupation. Westlake v. Osborne, 230 M 364, 750 P2d 444, 45 St. Rep. 277 (1988).

Unlawful Detainer — Right of Lessor With Unrecorded Title to Sue: Plaintiff leased land to defendants and assigned her interest in the land to a trust. The assignment was recorded. The trust later reassigned the interest back to plaintiff through an unrecorded quitclaim deed. Plaintiff sued defendants when they refused to vacate at the end of the lease. Record title and legal title are not synonymous, and plaintiff had valid legal title even though it was not record title. Recording has the purposes of giving notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers and of establishing priority but has nothing to do with conveying title. Defendants' only interest in the property was a lease, and they were not within the scope of the recording statutes' protection. Plaintiff, contrary to defendants' claim, was the real party in interest, not the trust, and was entitled to bring the suit. The party with legal title is the real party in interest in real property disputes. Blakely v. Kelstrup, 218 M 304, 708 P2d 253, 42 St. Rep. 1601 (1985).

Allegation That Lessee Violated Implied Covenant Not to Create Nuisance on Leased Premises: Plaintiffs, owners of a building in which defendants, lessees, operated a bar, filed an unlawful detainer action against defendants pursuant to 70-27-108. Plaintiffs claimed that defendants, by allowing loud music and noise in the bar, were violating an implied covenant not to operate their bar in such a manner as to create a nuisance. The trial judge ruled that the lease could not be canceled under any theory of nuisance because defendants were doing what they had a right to do, operate a bar. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that because substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's finding that the bar was not being operated as a nuisance, it was unnecessary to determine whether Montana law recognizes in real property leases an implied covenant on the part of the lessee to use the leased premises so as not to injure the lessor by creating a nuisance. Martinson v. Thompson, 205 M 264, 667 P2d 423, 40 St. Rep. 1259 (1983).

Termination of Agricultural Lease — Removal of Holdover Tenant — Application of Unlawful Detainer Laws: Defendant sold plaintiff her property. The instrument contained a lease back to defendant of the buildings and 6 acres. Plaintiff gave notice that the lease was to terminate. Defendant refused to vacate. Plaintiff brought an action under the unlawful detainer statutes, which provide for an award of treble damages. Defendant contended the dispute was governed by the Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977. Plaintiff contended the lease was within the "agricultural" exclusion contained in 70-24-104(8). The lease provisions gave no indication of the nature of the buildings or of the intended use of the 6 acres. The trial court allowed the introduction of photographs and oral testimony regarding the lease, which established that the use of the land was for maintenance of defendant's livestock. The trial court properly allowed parol evidence to resolve an ambiguity in the lease. The Supreme Court determined that the legislative intent of 70-24-104 was for a comprehensive coverage of all agricultural operations, whether they are large-scale operations for profit or small-scale operations secondary to the use of the residence. The unlawful detainer provisions were properly applied. Dussault v. Hjelm, 192 M 282, 627 P2d 1237, 38 St. Rep. 738 (1981).

Unlawful Detainer by Tenant in Common — Amendment of Pleading Properly Denied: Where the plaintiff and her sister leased farmland they owned as tenants in common to the defendant for a 6-year period and the sister conveyed her interest in the property to the defendant shortly before the expiration of the lease, the court did not err, in an action by the plaintiff brought in 1974 for an accounting of rents and profits from the defendant, in refusing to allow the plaintiff to plead and prove an unlawful detainer against the defendant. Leave of court should not be granted to allow amendments that present theories totally inapplicable to the case. As a tenant in common is an owner of an undivided interest in the property, a claim of unlawful detainer may not be asserted against a cotenant, but only against a tenant for a term less than life. A cotenant is allowed to possess and use commonly held property, and an action will lie for waste but not unpermitted use. Fry v. Heble, 191 M 272, 623 P2d 963, 38 St. Rep. 228 (1981).

Contract for Deed — Regaining Possession: The plaintiff entered into a contract to sell certain real property and an on-premises beer license. The contract was assigned to Borkoski. Borkoski allowed the beer license to be revoked and as a result was served with notice of default and cancellation of the contract. Plaintiff then brought an action for forcible detainer against Borkoski. On appeal, Borkoski argued that the summary proceeding of forcible detainer may not be used to recover property sold under contract for deed. The court distinguished Kransky v. Hensleigh, 146 M 486, 409 P2d 537 (1965), which held that an unlawful detainer action is proper only where there is a landlord-tenant relationship. The court said that Kransky applied only to actions brought under 70-27-108. The case at bar was brought under 70-27-103, and that section does not require a landlord-tenant relationship. The District Court did not commit error by allowing the forcible detainer action in this case. Kootenai Corp. v. Dayton, 184 M 19, 601 P2d 47 (1979).

Option to Purchase as to Holdover Tenant: An option to purchase contained in an agreement for lease of agricultural lands does not carry over into a holdover tenancy. Upon expiration of the term of the lease, as specified in the lease agreement, the lessee became a holdover tenant and lost his right of first refusal, even though the holdover was by permission of the lessor. Nevala v. McKay, 178 M 327, 583 P2d 1065 (1978). See also Situ v. Smole, 2013 MT 33, 369 Mont. 1, 303 P.3d 747.

Term of Lease Modified: When an agricultural lease containing a provision for automatic renewal was modified to extend the original term of the lease, the modification constituted a new agreement as to the term of the lease, thus abrogating the automatic renewal provision. The lessee was rendered a holdover tenant upon expiration of the term of the lease as modified. Nevala v. McKay, 178 M 327, 583 P2d 1065 (1978).

Unlawful Detainer: When an agricultural tenant held over and received no notice to quit within 60 days, he was free from the action for unlawful detainer for the term of the previous lease, and since the plaintiff prayed for relief solely under the unlawful detainer statute, the court properly dismissed the action without discussing recovery of rent. Holliday Land & Livestock Co. v. Pierce, 174 M 393, 571 P2d 93 (1977), overruled in Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996), to the extent that it conflicts with Rasmussen's holding that the subsection (2) provisions of this section relating to a tenant on agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days apply only to a subsection (2) default in rent on agricultural lands and do not apply to a case under subsection (1) or (3) or to a subsection (2) case of a default in rent on nonagricultural lands.

Lease Cancellation — Saving Clause: The general rule is that cancellation and reentry by the landlord terminates the lease agreement. A saving clause imposes a special liability on the tenant which would otherwise not exist but to have effect must be explicit as to the right reserved. Knight v. OMI Corp., 174 M 72, 568 P2d 552 (1977), followed in Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999).

State Action — Procedural Due Process — Contents of Notice: Where landlord has freedom to select tenants, receipt of federal benefits in the form of mortgage insurance and rent supplements does not make him an agency of federal government or State of Montana so as to require him to include in his 30-day notice of termination and notice to quit to tenant reasons which would amount to good cause and entitle tenant to a hearing to establish existence of good cause, even though tenant qualified to receive federal rent supplement, as no state action is involved. Flamm v. Real-Blt, Inc., 168 M 351, 543 P2d 190 (1975).

Agricultural Tenant Holding Over:

This section provides relief to the agricultural tenant from a forfeiture of crops because it requires a demand after holding over after the expiration of the lease term. Pipkin v. Connolly, 167 M 284, 538 P2d 347 (1975), overruled in Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996), to the extent that it conflicts with Rasmussen's holding that the subsection (2) provisions of this section relating to a tenant on agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days apply only to a subsection (2) default in rent on agricultural lands and do not apply to a case under subsection (1) or (3) or to a subsection (2) case of a default in rent on nonagricultural lands.

Statute gives agricultural tenant right to hold over for no other purpose than to harvest crops and protect investment and does not mean that tenant can exercise option to purchase contained in expired lease. Miller v. Meredith, 149 M 125, 423 P2d 595 (1967), overruled in Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996), to the extent that it conflicts with Rasmussen's holding that the subsection (2) provisions of this section relating to a tenant on agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days apply only to a subsection (2) default in rent on agricultural lands and do not apply to a case under subsection (1) or (3) or to a subsection (2) case of a default in rent on nonagricultural lands.

Expiration of Term of Lease — Right of First Refusal Provision: A provision in an agricultural lease which gives the lessees the right to meet any offer for the sale of the land is one which permits the cancellation of the lease upon sale by the lessor, after the lessee declines to exercise his right, since the lessor always has the right to sell the land, and in no other way can the presence of the clause be explained. Pipkin v. Connolly, 167 M 284, 538 P2d 347 (1975), overruled in Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996), to the extent that it conflicts with Rasmussen's holding that the subsection (2) provisions of this section relating to a tenant on agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days apply only to a subsection (2) default in rent on agricultural lands and do not apply to a case under subsection (1) or (3) or to a subsection (2) case of a default in rent on nonagricultural lands.

Landlord-Tenant Relationship Required: An action for unlawful detainer can succeed only where the relation of landlord-tenant exists. Kransky v. Hensleigh, 146 M 486, 409 P2d 537 (1965).

Unlawful Ejectment: In case of unlawful ejectment, plaintiff, who had farmed land for 3 years, paying one-third of each crop as rent, was not a sharecropper but a tenant with an interest in the land for a term, and it was proper for the judge to instruct the jury that if plaintiff held without notice to quit more than 60 days after expiration of his term he was considered to be holding by permission of the defendant-landlords and not guilty of unlawful detainer. Kenfield v. Curry, 145 M 174, 399 P2d 999 (1965), overruled in Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996), to the extent that it conflicts with Rasmussen's holding that the subsection (2) provisions of this section relating to a tenant on agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days apply only to a subsection (2) default in rent on agricultural lands and do not apply to a case under subsection (1) or (3) or to a subsection (2) case of a default in rent on nonagricultural lands.

Renewal of Lease Under Option: A stay should have been granted in unlawful detainer action by landlord pending determination of tenant's action against landlord for specific performance of alleged option to re-lease premises. Stanisich v. St. Highway Comm'n, 141 M 144, 375 P2d 1019 (1962).

Notice to Quit:

An action in unlawful detainer cannot be maintained under this section if the tenant is lawfully in possession under a tenancy from year to year as provided by 70-26-201 without first giving notice 30 days prior to the anniversary date of the tenancy as prescribed in 70-26-205. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Subsection (2) of this section, which provides that in the case of agricultural lands there must be a "demand of possession or notice to quit" if the tenant "retained possession for more than sixty days after the expiration of his term", does not apply where there is a failure to establish the term of an oral farm lease. Enott v. Hinkle, 140 M 206, 369 P2d 413 (1962), overruled in Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996), to the extent that it conflicts with Rasmussen's holding that the subsection (2) provisions of this section relating to a tenant on agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days apply only to a subsection (2) default in rent on agricultural lands and do not apply to a case under subsection (1) or (3) or to a subsection (2) case of a default in rent on nonagricultural lands.

Whether notice that the deal for the sale of land was off and that if there was any further desire to buy or lease land they should see the party appointed to act as agent for the owner constituted a notice to quit was a question for the jury. Hamilton v. Rock, 121 M 245, 191 P2d 663 (1948), overruled in Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996), to the extent that it conflicts with Rasmussen's holding that the subsection (2) provisions of this section relating to a tenant on agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days apply only to a subsection (2) default in rent on agricultural lands and do not apply to a case under subsection (1) or (3) or to a subsection (2) case of a default in rent on nonagricultural lands.

An action in unlawful detainer to recover possession of real property from a tenant at will cannot be maintained, under this section and 70-27-104 through 70-27-106, without first giving 3 days' notice to surrender possession, and the complaint must show that this notice was given. When plaintiff alleged that the 30-day notice terminating the tenancy, as formerly required, was given but failed to aver that the 3-day notice was likewise given, the complaint did not state a cause of action and the Justice's Court before which the action was brought was without jurisdiction to try the cause. Boucher v. St. George, 88 M 162, 293 P 315 (1930).

Change in Use of Building: Change in the use of a building by sublessee from a retail food store to a motor sales and garage did not amount to waste or destruction of building. Turman v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 132 M 273, 317 P2d 302 (1957).

Wrongful Eviction: Where owner, after giving notice under this section, commenced a course of action and conduct which forced the tenant from the premises, instead of filing a complaint as provided by 70-27-113, he was liable for wrongful eviction. Brown v. Grenz, 127 M 49, 257 P2d 246 (1953).

Agricultural Lands: The term "agricultural lands" as used in this section is to distinguish it from mining or urban property, and it includes land used for grazing purposes. Hamilton v. Rock, 121 M 245, 191 P2d 663 (1948), overruled in Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996), to the extent that it conflicts with Rasmussen's holding that the subsection (2) provisions of this section relating to a tenant on agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days apply only to a subsection (2) default in rent on agricultural lands and do not apply to a case under subsection (1) or (3) or to a subsection (2) case of a default in rent on nonagricultural lands.

Lessee Unlawfully Detaining:

Where tenant from month to month refused to pay increased rental as required by statutory notice, landlords, by serving upon tenant 3 days' notice to pay the rent or deliver the premises, elected to treat him as a tenant from month to month, and by continuing in possession without paying the rent tenant became guilty of unlawful detainer. State ex rel. Needham v. Justice Court, 119 M 89, 171 P2d 351 (1946).

The complaint in an action for unlawful detainer, alleging a demand for possession unless the defendant pay the rent, his refusal to surrender, and his retention of the premises until he was compelled by legal process to give them up, impliedly set forth that the defendant's possession after such demand was without the plaintiff's permission and sufficiently characterized the action as for an unlawful detainer after default in the payment of rent. Bush v. Baker, 51 M 326, 152 P 750 (1915).

Quiet and Peaceable Possession: Quiet and peaceable possession by defendant for 1 year after default in payment of rent before suit for unlawful detainer did not defeat the action, though it was a good defense against forcible entry charges or forcible detainer action. Mahoney v. Lester, 118 M 551, 168 P2d 339 (1946).

Indian Lands: A lessee of Montana Indian lands continuing in possession after expiration of lease from the United States and after the land was leased to a new tenant lacked the permission necessary under this section where a new lease to him had not been approved as required by 25 U.S.C. 393, even though he met the highest bid, hence he was guilty of unlawful detainer and liable to tenant for three times rental value for such year. Stoltz v. U.S., 99 F2d 283 (9th Cir. 1938).

Corporate Directors' Liability: Under this section, directors of a corporation lessee, who united in refusing to surrender possession after the term and after default in payment of rent, may be joined as defendants and are individually liable, jointly and severally, for the damages awarded, and directors who did not join in such refusal need not be made parties. NW. Theatres Co. v. Hanson, 4 F2d 471 (9th Cir. 1925).

Rent Recovery: To support a recovery of rent in an action for unlawful detainer under subsection (2) of this section, plaintiff must establish and the jury must find that there had been an unlawful detainer. Bush v. Baker, 51 M 326, 152 P 750 (1915).

Holding Over After Term of Lease: In an action for unlawful detainer brought under this section, the complaint should allege specifically that the holding over is without the permission of the plaintiff or state facts sufficient to furnish a clear inference to that effect. Centennial Brewing Co. v. Rouleau, 49 M 490, 143 P 969 (1914).

Termination of Lease: The complaint in an action for unlawful detainer, brought under subsection (1) of this section, need not allege that plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the premises at the time of the commencement of the action or gave notice or demanded possession before bringing action. Centennial Brewing Co. v. Rouleau, 49 M 490, 143 P 969 (1914).

Assignment of Lease: The provision in this section against an assignment of the lease without the lessor's consent is for the benefit of the lessor. If, in case of such assignment, he fails to avail himself of the privilege of declaring the lease ended, he, by his inaction, waives the breach of the condition. Winslow v. Dundom, 46 M 71, 125 P 136 (1912).

Unlawful Detainer — Right of Lessor With Unrecorded Title to Sue: Plaintiff leased land to defendants and assigned her interest in the land to a trust. The assignment was recorded. The trust later reassigned the interest back to plaintiff through an unrecorded quitclaim deed. Plaintiff sued defendants when they refused to vacate at the end of the lease. Record title and legal title are not synonymous, and plaintiff had valid legal title even though it was not record title. Recording has the purposes of giving notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers and of establishing priority but has nothing to do with conveying title. Defendants' only interest in the property was a lease, and they were not within the scope of the recording statutes' protection. Plaintiff, contrary to defendants' claim, was the real party in interest, not the trust, and was entitled to bring the suit. The party with legal title is the real party in interest in real property disputes. Blakely v. Kelstrup, 218 M 304, 708 P2d 253, 42 St. Rep. 1601 (1985).

Case Notes

Property Boundary Properly Established Following Accretion and Avulsion of River: The District Court found that the meander channel of the Sun River between plaintiffs' and one defendant's property moved south by accretion from where it was depicted in a 1906 government survey into a channel depicted in a 1937 aerial photograph and that the channel moved north by avulsion to its present channel in 1916. The court further concluded that the Sun River between plaintiffs' and another defendant's property also moved north by avulsion in 1948. The record amply supported the 1906 accretion that created the lots in question, at which time the property boundary moved with the water line. However, when the river avulsed to its present location in 1916, the property boundary did not move. Likewise, when the river avulsed north in 1948, the property boundary also did not move, so the District Court properly determined the boundaries between the lots after considering the avulsion and accretion of the river, and judgment was affirmed. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Proof Required of Plaintiff:

Under this section, plaintiff in a forcible entry action is required only to show, in addition to a forcible entry of the premises, that he was peaceably in the actual possession thereof at the time of the forcible entry. Herzog v. The Texas Co., 88 M 580, 294 P 962 (1930).

If the object of the action is to obtain the remedy for a forcible entry, the proof required by this section is twofold, namely, proof of the forcible entry, as defined in 70-27-102, and proof that the plaintiff "was peaceably in the actual possession at the time of the forcible entry". If the purpose of the action is to obtain relief from a forcible detainer, proof must be made, under this section, of the forcible detainer, as defined in 70-27-103, and of the plaintiff's right to the possession at the time of the forcible detainer. Kennedy v. Dickie, 27 M 70, 69 P 672 (1902).

Quiet Possession by Defendant: A complaint in forcible detainer, showing that defendant has been in possession of the property for over a year, is not bad, as showing a defense within this section, unless it also shows such possession to have been quiet. Kennedy v. Dickie, 27 M 70, 69 P 672 (1902).

Nature of Proceeding: The action for forcible entry and detainer is quasi-criminal. Sheehy v. Flaherty, 8 M 365, 20 P 687 (1889).

Case Notes

Award of Restitution and Emotional Distress Damages for Forcible Detainer: The District Court awarded plaintiffs restitution and damages for emotional distress for defendant's forcible detainer. Defendant contended that under 27-1-318, plaintiffs were only entitled to the fair rental value of any land that was wrongfully occupied. The Supreme Court disagreed. Once forcible detainer is proved, damages are recoverable under this section, and 27-1-318 does not apply. In deciding whether emotional distress damages, damages for lost profits, and incidental damages are recoverable under this section, the court relied on San Francisco v. Suburban Home Bldg. Soc'y, 119 P 405 (Calif. 1911), and 36A C.J.S. Forcible Entry and Detainer 60 (2003), in holding that damages that are the natural and proximate consequence of a forcible detainer, including the damages in this case, were recoverable. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

No Equitable Exception to American Rule for Parties Forced to Bring Suit to Determine Legal Rights Against Party Presenting Frivolous Defense in Bad Faith: Plaintiffs in a forcible detainer action contended that they should be granted attorney fees as an exception to the American Rule that a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory grant of those fees because plaintiffs were forced to bring a lawsuit to determine their legal property rights against a defendant who presented a frivolous defense asserted in bad faith. The District Court declined to award attorney fees, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that a malicious or bad faith equitable exception to the American Rule has consistently been denied and that the exception in Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001), did not apply. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Unlawful Detainer Distinguished From Wrongful Occupation — Damages: Personal representative took possession of real property that had been sold under contract by the deceased owner and filed action to rescind the contract because of fraud, misrepresentation, undue influence, and unconscionability. The personal representative's claims were determined to be without merit in a prior appeal of this case. Buyers counterclaimed for recovery of lost rent, based on the personal representative's unlawful possession of the property. Both parties referred to the action as one for forcible or unlawful detainer. The court held that the action was properly described as one for wrongful occupation under 27-1-318. The court further held that, in contrast to damages provided in 70-27-205 for forcible or unlawful detainer, no treble damages are provided in an action for wrongful occupation. Westlake v. Osborne, 230 M 364, 750 P2d 444, 45 St. Rep. 277 (1988).

Tenant Default — Not "Expiration by Its Own Terms": Defendant entered a 5-year lease with plaintiff for office space. Defendant failed to make monthly rental payment, and plaintiff sent a notice of default followed by a notice to quit. When defendant refused to give up the premises, plaintiff filed an unlawful detainer action. The trial court held that, since plaintiff had followed the procedures set out in the lease upon tenant's default, the lease had terminated according to its terms and defendant was not entitled to relief from forfeiture or relief from hardship. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, distinguishing between a lease which has expired under its terms from one which terminated for default on rental payments. The court held that since this was a 5-year lease, the lease would not "expire" until 5 years from the date entered into. The lease contained provisions allowing it to be "terminated" according to its terms for default in rental payment. The court held that this section recognizes such a distinction. The tenant was therefore within the protection of the statutes offering relief from forfeiture and hardship because the lease had not by its terms expired. Grand Co. v. Jim Slack & Assoc., Inc., 212 M 149, 687 P2d 683, 41 St. Rep. 1654 (1984).

Judicial Proceedings Required: Unlawful detainer and statutory treble damages awarded pursuant to a finding of unlawful detainer are not viable remedies available to a plaintiff/lessor until either expiration of the lease term with a finding of the lessee's wrongful holding over or termination of the lease agreement and forfeiture are established by judicial proceedings. Mont. Williams Double Diamond Corp. v. Hill, 175 M 248, 573 P2d 649 (1978).

Treble Damages:

This section, authorizing judgment to be rendered against defendant guilty of unlawful detainer for three times the amount of damages assessed and of rent found due, is mandatory, imposing duty on trial court to treble amount of damages assessed and amount of rent found due. State ex rel. Needham v. Justice Court, 119 M 89, 171 P2d 351 (1946).

The words "of the damages thus assessed, and of the rent found due" obviously constitute two separate and coordinate prepositional phrases connected by the word "and", the antecedent of both phrases being the noun "amount". The amount which must be trebled in the judgment includes rent as well as damages, the court having no discretion in the matter. Steinbrenner v. Love, 113 M 466, 129 P2d 101 (1942).

In an action in unlawful detainer by the United States against a lessee of Montana Indian lands continuing in possession after expiration of lease and after the land was leased to a new tenant, judgment was authorized, under this section, "for three times the amount of the damages" which are by 27-1-318 "the value of the use of the property for the time of" the occupation by appellant. The latter statute has been construed to mean that "the value of the use of the property" may be measured by the rental value. Stoltz v. U.S., 99 F2d 283 (9th Cir. 1938).

When an unlawful detainer has been proven and damages have been awarded, the trial court has not any discretion under this section but must render judgment for treble the amount of the award. Centennial Brewing Co. v. Rouleau, 49 M 490, 143 P 969 (1914).

Res Judicata: Where, in an unlawful detainer action, a tenant was adjudged to have no right or interest in the property, his wife, whose right to possession was predicated upon that of her husband, had no more right than he had, and in her action against the landlord for assault and battery arising out of the matter of possession was bound by the effect of the judgment though she was not a party to the unlawful detainer action. Vaughn v. Mesch, 107 M 498, 87 P2d 177, 123 ALR 1106 (1939).

Instructions to Jury: Since the province of the jury in an action for forcible entry goes no further than the ascertainment of the amount of the actual damages sustained by plaintiff, and this section makes it the duty of the court to treble that amount in entering judgment, a matter with which the jury is not concerned, refusal to instruct the jury that any amount found by it in favor of the plaintiff would be multiplied by three or to permit counsel for defendant to call the statutory provision relating thereto to their attention in argument was not error. Herzog v. The Texas Co., 88 M 580, 294 P 962 (1930).

Municipal Defendant: A municipal corporation, such as a county, being no more than a political subdivision of the state for governmental purposes, cannot be subjected to a penal liability, and therefore an action for treble damages for unlawful detainer does not lie. Sullivan v. Big Horn County, 66 M 45, 212 P 1105 (1923).

Recovery Interdependent: In proceedings for unlawful detainer, three things are recoverable, namely, rents, restitution of the premises, and damages. While the recovery of all these is dependent on the fact of the unlawful detainer, they are dependent on each other. Bush v. Baker, 51 M 326, 152 P 750 (1915).

Findings to Support Judgment: A money judgment in forcible detainer is not sustained by a verdict which fails to find that defendant detained the property, since under this section, damages may be assessed only when occasioned by forcible detainer. McCleary v. Crowley, 22 M 245, 56 P 227 (1899).

Case Notes

Sufficient Evidence of Force and Possession to Constitute Forcible Detainer — Treble Damages Proper: Savoy contended that there was insufficient evidence of force and possession to satisfy the definition of forcible detainer, so the award of treble damages was erroneous. Applying Grenfell v. Anderson, 2002 MT 225, 311 M 385, 56 P3d 326 (2002), the Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's conclusion that Savoy's actions in destroying fences around disputed land, digging ditches across disputed roads, denying plaintiffs and the Sheriff access to the disputed land, and calling the Sheriff to complain of trespass whenever plaintiffs attempted to access the disputed property satisfied the definition of force and possession sufficient to constitute forcible detainer, so a treble damage award was warranted. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Termination of Agricultural Lease — Removal of Holdover Tenant — Application of Unlawful Detainer Laws: Defendant sold plaintiff her property. The instrument contained a lease back to defendant of the buildings and 6 acres. Plaintiff gave notice that the lease was to terminate. Defendant refused to vacate. Plaintiff brought an action under the unlawful detainer statutes, which provide for an award of treble damages. Defendant contended the dispute was governed by the Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977. Plaintiff contended the lease was within the "agricultural" exclusion contained in 70-24-104(8). The lease provisions gave no indication of the nature of the buildings or of the intended use of the 6 acres. The trial court allowed the introduction of photographs and oral testimony regarding the lease, which established that the use of the land was for maintenance of defendant's livestock. The trial court properly allowed parol evidence to resolve an ambiguity in the lease. The Supreme Court determined that the legislative intent of 70-24-104 was for a comprehensive coverage of all agricultural operations, whether they are large-scale operations for profit or small-scale operations secondary to the use of the residence. The unlawful detainer provisions were properly applied. Dussault v. Hjelm, 192 M 282, 627 P2d 1237, 38 St. Rep. 738 (1981).

Judicial Proceedings Required: Unlawful detainer and statutory treble damages awarded pursuant to a finding of unlawful detainer are not viable remedies available to a plaintiff/lessor until either expiration of the lease term with a finding of the lessee's wrongful holding over or termination of the lease agreement and forfeiture are established by judicial proceedings. Mont. Williams Double Diamond Corp. v. Hill, 175 M 248, 573 P2d 649 (1978).

Case Notes

Punitive Damages Not Allowed for Breach of Commercial Lease: The lower court determined that the tenant, Rogers, had remained in possession of the property for 6 days for which he owed rent in the amount of $95.85. The court awarded the landlord treble damages in the amount of $95.85 x 3 and $95.85 as rent for the 6-day period. The Supreme Court ruled that the landlord was entitled to only $95.85 x 3 and was not entitled to the additional $95.85. The Supreme Court also held that the additional $95.85 could not be characterized as exemplary damages because exemplary damages are punitive in nature and punitive damages cannot be given for a breach of contract. Sage v. Rogers, 257 M 229, 848 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 244 (1993).

Unlawful Detainer — Right of Lessor With Unrecorded Title to Sue: Plaintiff leased land to defendants and assigned her interest in the land to a trust. The assignment was recorded. The trust later reassigned the interest back to plaintiff through an unrecorded quitclaim deed. Plaintiff sued defendants when they refused to vacate at the end of the lease. Record title and legal title are not synonymous, and plaintiff had valid legal title even though it was not record title. Recording has the purposes of giving notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers and of establishing priority but has nothing to do with conveying title. Defendants' only interest in the property was a lease, and they were not within the scope of the recording statutes' protection. Plaintiff, contrary to defendants' claim, was the real party in interest, not the trust, and was entitled to bring the suit. The party with legal title is the real party in interest in real property disputes. Blakely v. Kelstrup, 218 M 304, 708 P2d 253, 42 St. Rep. 1601 (1985).

Purchaser at Void Foreclosure Sale Held Not Liable in Treble Damages in Absence of Notice: Where a mortgagee bank purchased the property at foreclosure sale, void because the mortgage was subsequently declared void, and during the time it had possession received some income therefrom, such income may be deducted from its claim against the estate for money it loaned it to pay costs of administration, for which debt the mortgage had been given to secure the loan, but could not be held for treble damages under this section for "holding over" in the absence of proof of the required notice. The court did not find it necessary to consider the feasibility of whether appellant's landlord-tenant theory applies to purchasers under void foreclosure sales. In re Anderson's Estate, 113 M 125, 122 P2d 832 (1942).

Punitive Damages Not Allowed for Breach of Commercial Lease: The lower court determined that the tenant, Rogers, had remained in possession of the property for 6 days for which he owed rent in the amount of $95.85. The court awarded the landlord treble damages in the amount of $95.85 x 3 and $95.85 as rent for the 6-day period. The Supreme Court ruled that the landlord was entitled to only $95.85 x 3 and was not entitled to the additional $95.85. The Supreme Court also held that the additional $95.85 could not be characterized as exemplary damages because exemplary damages are punitive in nature and punitive damages cannot be given for a breach of contract. Sage v. Rogers, 257 M 229, 848 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 244 (1993).

Case Notes

Tenant Default — Not "Expiration by Its Own Terms": Defendant entered a 5-year lease with plaintiff for office space. Defendant failed to make monthly rental payment, and plaintiff sent a notice of default followed by a notice to quit. When defendant refused to give up the premises, plaintiff filed an unlawful detainer action. The trial court held that, since plaintiff had followed the procedures set out in the lease upon tenant's default, the lease had terminated according to its terms and defendant was not entitled to relief from forfeiture or relief from hardship. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, distinguishing between a lease which has expired under its terms from one which terminated for default on rental payments. The court held that since this was a 5-year lease, the lease would not "expire" until 5 years from the date entered into. The lease contained provisions allowing it to be "terminated" according to its terms for default in rental payment. The court held that 70-27-205 itself recognizes such a distinction. The tenant was therefore within the protection of the statutes offering relief from forfeiture and hardship because the lease had not by its terms expired. Grand Co. v. Jim Slack & Assoc., Inc., 212 M 149, 687 P2d 683, 41 St. Rep. 1654 (1984).

QUIETING TITLE TO REAL PROPERTY

Chapter Case Notes

Public Trust Exception: Because it holds land in public trust and it failed to comply with statutory requirements for land sales, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) was without authority to make the sale of land. The deed derived from the sale without authority was held void. Therefore, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) cannot be estopped from denying the validity of the deed. Norman v. St., 182 M 439, 597 P2d 715 (1979).

Quieting Title Generally

Part Case Notes

Action to Quiet Title in Mining Company Shares — Credible Evidence of Outstanding Shares — District Court Upheld: Safronoff and others were defendants in an action to quiet title to outstanding shares of the defunct Sun Mining, Inc., which was involuntarily dissolved by the state. The District Court reviewed all of the evidence before it, including a list of outstanding shares prepared by Sun Mining's secretary-treasurer shortly before the company was dissolved, the number of shares held by each shareholder according to each shareholder's stock certificate, and oral testimony, and found that the secretary-treasurer's list was the only credible evidence. Safronoff appealed the decision of the District Court, contending that he should have been awarded additional shares. Relying upon Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), and St. v. Bower, 254 M 1, 833 P2d 1106 (1992), the Supreme Court applied the "clearly erroneous" standard to the District Court's findings of fact and held that although there were conflicts in the evidence before it, the District Court reasonably relied upon this evidence and that the District Court's findings of fact were not clearly erroneous. Duncan v. Allen, 1998 MT 316, 292 M 180, 970 P2d 1036, 55 St. Rep. 1296 (1998).

Transfer of Land to Corporation or Trust in Which Grantor Has Interest — Color of Title Not Created: Relying on St. v. King, 87 SE 167 (W. Va. 1915), and St. v. Altizer Coal Land Co., 128 SE 286 (W. Va. 1925), the Supreme Court held that a grantor cannot create color of title in land in which that grantor has no interest by transferring or deeding the land to a corporation or trust in which that grantor has an interest. Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Defense of Laches to Quiet Title Action Unavailable Without Valid Claim to Royalty: Defendants in an action to quiet title to a royalty interest raised the defense of laches. The Supreme Court held that laches is a question of the inequity that would result if a claim were to be permitted to be enforced. Because the defendants had always held their title subject to the plaintiffs' royalty interest, no inequity would result if the plaintiffs' claim was enforced. Because the defendants lacked a valid claim to the royalty, the court also held that the defendants lacked standing to assert the defense of laches. Stanford v. Rosebud County, 251 M 128, 822 P2d 1074, 48 St. Rep. 1124 (1991).

Failure to Set Forth Facts Showing Nonresidence — Defective Affidavit for Publication — Quiet Title Actions Void: Plaintiffs brought an action against Rosebud County, claiming that they were entitled to a royalty interest in certain property. The Supreme Court held two previous quiet title actions void because complete service was not achieved under the law (now repealed) that provided for service by publication since in each action, an affidavit was required to show that the defendant resided out of state. Citing Aronow v. Anderson, 110 M 484, 104 P2d 104 (1940), the Supreme Court held that the affidavit in this case was insufficient because it failed to recite the facts supporting the conclusion that the defendant resided out of state and failed to allege the facts describing the search for the defendant. The quiet title actions were thus void for lack of jurisdiction. Stanford v. Rosebud County, 251 M 128, 822 P2d 1074, 48 St. Rep. 1124 (1991).

Federal Statute of Limitations Barring Administrative Suit for Tax Refund: The Supreme Court cited applicable federal law in holding that the 2-year federal statute of limitations barred the bringing of an administrative suit for a refund of taxes 10 years after notice of a tax deficiency was sent. Absent any facts or legitimate contentions to the contrary, the District Court's order granting partial summary judgment quieting title was affirmed. Getter v. Beckman, 236 M 377, 769 P2d 714, 46 St. Rep. 440 (1989).

Jury Trial Not Mandatory in Quiet Title Action: Because quiet title actions are actions in equity, a District Court may impanel an advisory jury but is not required to do so. Getter v. Beckman, 236 M 377, 769 P2d 714, 46 St. Rep. 440 (1989).

Equitable Easement — No Basis for Finding: The plaintiff purchased lakefront property with knowledge that the defendants' summer cabin encroached on the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff sued to quiet title and have the defendants' cabin removed. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants and found that the defendants had an equitable easement to keep the building on the land. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that no formerly recognized common equitable theories for the creation of easements support the District Court's finding and that the development of a new doctrine of "relative hardship" is inappropriate on a motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for trial. Penland v. Derby, 220 M 257, 714 P2d 158, 43 St. Rep. 342 (1986).

Intent — Necessary to Abandon Easement: Defendant had a reservoir right-of-way under 43 U.S.C. §§946 through 949. The reservoir site was used as a reservoir from 1910 until 1938, when the dam creating the reservoir washed out. Defendant rebuilt the dam in 1976, and the resulting reservoir flooded portions of plaintiff's field in times of heavy runoff. Plaintiff brought a quiet title action. The District Court found that the reservoir right-of-way had been abandoned. The Supreme Court found that the reservoir right-of-way was properly characterized as an easement. The rule in Montana is that in order to constitute an abandonment, an intent to abandon is necessary. The court held that mere nonuse of an easement by grant, no matter how long, does not constitute an abandonment. The question of whether 38 years of nonuse constituted forfeiture of the right-of-way could only be raised by the grantor, the United States. The District Court was reversed. Eggebrecht, Inc. v. Waters, 217 M 291, 704 P2d 422, 42 St. Rep. 1205 (1985).

Adverse Possession — Color of Title — Good Faith: The burden of proving adverse possession under color of title is on the defendant in a quiet title action. Under Montana law, an instruction which purports to convey land or the right to its possession is sufficient color of title as a basis for adverse possession if the claim is made in good faith. When a party's "title" was based on a quitclaim deed from an individual who was known by all parties concerned to have no interest whatsoever in the property, the court concluded that there was not a trace of good faith and no color of title. Further, the party asserting adverse possession must succeed on the strength of his own title and cannot rely on the weakness of his adversary. Russell Realty Co. v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980), followed in Y A Bar Livestock Co. v. Harkness, 269 M 239, 887 P2d 1211, 51 St. Rep. 1517 (1994).

Quiet Title — Collateral Attack on Judgment — Reasonable Diligence — Invalid Service — Jurisdiction: While it is a general rule that a judgment cannot be attacked in a collateral action, such attack is permissible if the first judgment is void for lack of jurisdiction. If service of process is improperly made, the court acquires no jurisdiction over that party and that party may collaterally attack the judgment. "Reasonable diligence" was not used by appellants in the prior action to locate individuals to be served under former Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), because they had dealt with such individuals before and should have been able to contact them, and the Secretary of State had the names and addresses of the corporate agent and director on file. Therefore, service upon the Secretary of State did not confer jurisdiction and collateral attack was proper. Russell Realty Co. v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980).

Quiet Title Action — Punitive Damages and Attorney Fees Awards: Lack of good faith in an adverse possession case will not necessarily support a punitive damages award for slander of title. Testimony of failure to recognize the opposing party in a quiet title action from a previous business transaction and of reliance on the Secretary of State's information that the party corporation had no registered agent for service of process, although part of the determination of a lack of good faith, was sufficient to rebut an allegation of malice as required for the award of punitive damages. There being no statutory or contractual provision for attorney fees in this case, a common-law exception would be required for such an award. Without proof that the defendant acted fraudulently, maliciously, or with bad faith toward the plaintiff in a quiet title action, attorney fees will not be awarded. A decision denying attorney fees will not be disturbed absent abuse of discretion by the trial court. Russell Realty Co. v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980).

70-28-101. Quiet title action authorized.

Case Notes

Existence of Adverse Claim — Justification for Bringing, Not Precluding, Quiet Title Action: In a dispute over an easement by reservation, the defendants asserted that the plaintiff's complaint should be dismissed under principles of equity because the plaintiff had notice of the adverse claims against its right of access at the time of purchase. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the plaintiff sought a determination of its rights to the property described in the plat in dispute, rather than a decree concerning the plaintiff's use of roads in the neighboring subdivision. The court concluded that the plat adequately described an easement for the benefit of the plaintiff's property, and the defendants' belief that the easement was invalid did not constitute an equitable basis to preclude the plaintiff's action, even if the plaintiff knew of the defendants' position. Yorlum Properties, Ltd. v. Lincoln County, 2013 MT 298, 372 Mont. 159, 311 P.3d 748.

Assertion of Ownership Interest Sufficient to Confer Standing: In a federal action, an alleged adjacent landowner's assertion of title to the centerline of an abandoned railroad right-of-way constituted a sufficient stake to confer standing under Montana law for purposes of a declaratory judgment and quiet title claim. Avista Corp. Inc. v. Wolfe, 549 F3d 1239 (9th Cir. 2008).

State Court Jurisdiction Over Real Property Dispute Involving Federal Easement: A public lands access group sued Jones for blocking access to public lands that were previously accessible via a road across Jones's land. When the access group subsequently discovered that the federal Bureau of Reclamation had an express, nonexclusive easement over the road for irrigation and maintenance purposes since the road was constructed, the Bureau was joined as a party defendant. The Bureau and the access group then entered an agreement acknowledging the Bureau's easement, recognizing that the Bureau had never blocked public access to the road, and dismissing the Bureau from the suit. Jones then moved to dismiss the suit on grounds that the access group's claim for a prescriptive easement raised a dispute in title between the group and the United States and that because federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction over such title disputes under the federal Quiet Title Act (FQTA), 28 U.S.C. 2409, et seq., the state District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction and personal jurisdiction over the claim, so the claim could not proceed in state court. The District Court agreed and dismissed the claim with prejudice. The access group appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The United States, through the Bureau, had been named as a defendant, knowingly and expressly disavowed a dispute in title between the Bureau and the access group, and agreed to be voluntarily dismissed from the suit. Therefore, a disputed title between the access group and the federal agency, which is required for jurisdiction under the FQTA, did not exist, nor did Jones provide any authority for the proposition that a defendant in a property dispute can assert a property interest of the United States under the FQTA in order to remove the cause of action to federal District Court. Jones failed to establish that the FQTA applied in this case, so the District Court did have subject matter jurisdiction over the action against Jones, and the action was remanded to District Court for further proceedings. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Jones, 2008 MT 12, 341 M 111, 176 P3d 1005 (2008). See also Leisnoi, Inc. v. U.S., 170 F3d 1188 (9th Cir. 1999).

Jurisdiction of Justice's Court in Landlord-Tenant Action — Failure to Timely Assert Quiet Title Action Constituting Waiver of Jurisdictional Claim: Plaintiffs filed an action in Justice's Court to enforce a rental contract that defendant allegedly violated. Both parties initially argued that the case was governed by landlord-tenant law, but defendant subsequently argued in District Court that the case was actually an action to quiet title in a life estate granted to defendant by the contract and that because Justice's Courts may not hear actions concerning title to real property, the Justice's Court did not have subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case. The District Court concluded that the Justice's Court had jurisdiction, and on appeal, the Supreme Court concurred. Plaintiffs' pleadings established that the action was based on landlord-tenant law, and the Justice's Court therefore had subject matter jurisdiction at the onset. If defendant had raised the quiet title action in a proper and timely manner, the Justice's Court could have been divested of jurisdiction, but because defendant did not raise the title question in answer to the pleadings or in a timely amended answer, the Supreme Court held that the question was waived, and the District Court was affirmed. Stanley v. Lemire, 2006 MT 304, 334 M 489, 148 P3d 643 (2006).

Proper Relief in Quiet Title Action: After deciding that defendants were entitled to quiet and peaceful possession of a disputed piece of property, the District Court ordered that an old certificate of survey be removed from county records and that a new instrument be prepared that described accurate boundaries. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. After the correct boundary was determined, there was no justification for not quieting title in defendants' favor and no reason for retaining an erroneous plat in the county records. The relief was therefore appropriate. Olson v. Jude, 2003 MT 186, 316 M 438, 73 P3d 809 (2003).

No Obligation to Extinguish Lien Until Debt Fully Satisfied — Summary Dismissal of Action for Slander of Title Proper: Following a business default, defendant sought to enforce a lease agreement and received a judgment in Justice's Court for $7,156.56, including interest. In an effort to satisfy the judgment, plaintiff's wife paid $7,121.14. Plaintiff later attempted to refinance the disputed property and found that defendant's lien had not been extinguished, so plaintiff requested a partial satisfaction of judgment to his wife and release of the lien on the judgment. When defendant refused to release the lien, plaintiff sued for slander of title. Slander of title is an action in which one maliciously publishes false matter that brings into question or disparages the title to property, thereby causing special damages to the owner. Defendant was under no obligation to extinguish the lien until the judgment was fully satisfied. Because the wife's payment was $35.42 short of completely satisfying the judgment, defendant could not be said to have maliciously published false matter regarding the lien, so slander of title was not proved, and summary judgment for defendant was proper. Finding of Permissive Use of Cotenants' Fractional Interest Not Clearly Erroneous: Foley brought an action to quiet title to ranch property, claiming that title had been acquired from the cotenants by adverse possession of fractional interests acquired by two siblings in the distribution of their father's estate. Foley had operated the ranch since 1947, paid all taxes on the property, and built two homes, a garage, haysheds, barns, irrigation works, and fences. None of the surviving siblings ever claimed an interest in the profits from the ranch, and Foley never offered to share them. Foley never sought permission from the siblings to build any structure on the ranch or to use the property other than as he wished. The siblings professed that they always wanted Foley to operate the ranch as he saw fit, provided that the property not be mortgaged or sold. When Foley and his wife divorced in 1996, the District Court ordered the sale of the ranch to satisfy the settlement agreement. Title problems frustrated the sale, prompting the quiet title action. Following a bench trial, the District Court concluded that as a matter of law, Foley was a tenant in common with the two surviving siblings who had not quitclaimed their interests to Foley and that one cotenant could not gain title to another cotenant's interest by adverse possession. The court also found as a matter of fact that Foley's use of the cotenant's interests had been permissive. Foley contended on appeal that the findings and conclusions were erroneous. The testimony on the question of whether Foley's use was permissive was conflicting, with Foley testifying that he had always asserted his complete ownership of the ranch and that his longstanding arguments with his siblings established his claim as hostile, while the wife of Foley's deceased brother testified that until these proceedings, Foley had never asserted that she or her late husband had no interest in the ranch, but instead had asked her to sign over her interest on several occasions. Her testimony provided substantial credible evidence that, at least until he tried to sell the property, Foley's use of his siblings' fractional interests was in conformity with their wishes and was permissive. The District Court was in the best position to evaluate the credibility of the witnesses and to give each its proper weight. The finding that Foley was a permissive user of his cotenants' fractional interest was not clearly erroneous and was thus affirmed. Foley v. Arvidson, 2000 MT 388, 304 M 43, 16 P3d 389, 57 St. Rep. 1650 (2000).

Burden of Proof on Plaintiff to Establish Title and Boundary Line in Quiet Title Action: In an action to quiet title to real property, the burden is on plaintiff on all issues arising upon the essential allegations of the complaint. If the answer denies plaintiff's title, plaintiff must prove title in himself. Want of title in plaintiff renders an examination of defendant's title unnecessary. The burden of proof is also on plaintiff to establish the true location of a disputed boundary line. Here, the plain language of the deed conveying the property to plaintiff in 1951 established that an old county road rather than a newer state highway was the legal boundary of the property. Plaintiff failed to establish the location of the boundary as the state highway and thus did not meet the burden of proof. The trial court's conclusion that the state highway was the true legal boundary was reversible error. Tester v. Tester, 2000 MT 130, 300 M 5, 3 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 538 (2000). See also McAlpin v. Smith, 123 M 391, 213 P2d 602 (1950), and Brady v. St. Highway Comm'n, 163 M 416, 517 P2d 738 (1973).

Examination of Chain of Title and Circumstances of Making of Deed in Establishing Legal Boundary: Plaintiff sought to quiet title in a strip of land in Bridger Canyon, alleging that a state highway formed the western boundary of the property rather than an older county road. The District Court agreed. The Supreme Court examined plaintiff's chain of title back to 1903 and found that a deed conveying the property in 1951 unambiguously established the county road as the western boundary of the property. An unambiguous deed must be interpreted according to its written language, without resort to extrinsic evidence of the grantor's intent. Further, under 1-4-102, the Supreme Court may examine the circumstances under which a deed was made. Here, the section plats and state highway records, coupled with the plain language of the deed, established that the old county road was the legal western boundary, so the District Court was reversed. Tester v. Tester, 2000 MT 130, 300 M 5, 3 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 538 (2000), followed in Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Specification of Acreage Quantities by Approximation Indicative of Sale of Property in Gross: Language in a deed conveyed property described as "about 7 acres" and "approximately 7 acres". The actual legal description of the property was omitted from the chain of title beginning in 1950 and was not included in any subsequent deed, although the property was resold two more times. In a quiet title action, the District Court ruled that the size of the parcel was unimportant because the property had been conveyed in gross, with each party taking the risk of the actual quantity varying, so the exact quantity was immaterial. The Supreme Court agreed. Although words of estimation alone do not necessarily create a sale in gross, the plain meaning of the words "about" and "approximately" indicated that the parties did not intend to convey a precise number of acres, and the specification of acreage quantities, when qualified by words of approximation, rendered the acreage quantities merely descriptive rather than material to the agreement, thus indicating a sale in gross. Because the conveyance was a sale in gross, the variation in acreage was not grounds for rescission, nor did the acreage discrepancies in the relevant conveyances raise a genuine issue of material fact precluding summary judgment because the grantor's acreage-consistent description of the property boundaries controlled over the inconsistent acreage estimates in the conveyances. Cedar Lane Ranch, Inc. v. Lundberg, 1999 MT 299, 297 M 145, 991 P2d 440, 56 St. Rep. 1207 (1999), following Hardin v. Hill, 149 M 68, 423 P2d 309 (1967), and Turner v. Ferrin, 232 M 146, 757 P2d 335, 45 St. Rep. 946 (1988).

Standing to Challenge Tax Deed Proceeding: A person claiming title to real estate against another person who claims an adverse interest meets the criteria in this section and has standing to bring a quiet title action. In addition, to establish standing to challenge a tax deed proceeding, the following criteria set out in Stewart v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 175 M 197, 573 P2d 184 (1977), must be satisfied: (1) the complaining party must clearly allege past, present, or threatened injury to a property or civil right; and (2) the alleged injury must be distinguishable from the injury to the public generally, but the injury need not be exclusive to the complaining party. Further, no Montana statute or case law requires a complaining party to have an interest in the subject property at the time of issuance of the tax deed in order to institute a quiet title action. Sanders v. Yellowstone County, 276 M 116, 915 P2d 196, 53 St. Rep. 305 (1996), distinguishing Bowen v. McDonald, 276 M 193, 915 P2d 201, 53 St. Rep. 343 (1996).

Contract Provision Unambiguous: A contract among tenants in common stated unambiguously that all decisions regarding the property were to be determined by a majority vote, unless otherwise specified. By signing the agreement, defendant expressly agreed to be bound by a majority vote to sell the property, even though he was not available when the other owners voted to sell and abstained from signing the sale documents. Felska v. Goulding, 238 M 224, 776 P2d 530, 46 St. Rep. 1222 (1989).

Easement by Way of Necessity — Incompatible With Prescriptive Easement: A way of necessity is incompatible with a prescriptive right for the same easement. A prescriptive right never accrues in a way of necessity as long as the necessity continues. There are two basic elements of easements by way of necessity: (1) unity of ownership; and (2) strict necessity. The necessity must exist at the time the unified tracts are severed. The way granted must be over the grantor's land and never over the land of a third party or stranger to the title, and finally there must be strict unity of ownership. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988), followed in Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Hidden Village, Inc., 276 M 268, 915 P2d 845, 53 St. Rep. 379 (1996).

No Implied Easement: Courts are reluctant to find easements by implication because such an action results in depriving a person of the use of his property by imposing a servitude by mere implication. To create an easement by implication from a preexisting use imposed on one part of the property for the benefit of another party, unity of title at the time of the severance thereof is required. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988).

Prescriptive Easement Established — Summary Judgment — Burden of Proof: In a quiet title action, once defendant filed affidavits reciting facts that would fulfill the requirements for a prescriptive easement, it became the duty of the plaintiff not to rest upon mere allegations or denials but to respond by affidavit or otherwise, setting forth specific facts showing there was a genuine issue of material fact for trial. It was the plaintiff's burden to show that defendant's use was permissive. Summary judgment for the defendant was proper due to the plaintiff's failure to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Defendant was under no duty to communicate by word of mouth to the plaintiff or his predecessors in interest that she was using the roadway over plaintiff's property under a claim of right and adversely to them. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988).

Return of Personal Property Upon Default: The District Court properly found that plaintiffs in a quiet title action for termination of deed were entitled to have personal property returned to them, despite defendant's contentions that the parties were bound by an oral agreement in a bankruptcy proceeding that was dismissed, that the bill of sale never went into escrow, and that monthly payments were made, but taxes were not paid. LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740, 45 St. Rep. 1531 (1988).

Claim of Prescriptive Easement as Not Constituting Quiet Title Action: Entry of default judgment in favor of claimant of a prescriptive easement is not prohibited under 70-28-108 since the judgment did not adjudicate ownership of property or easement but addressed only the use of the property and as such was not a quiet title action to which 70-28-108 applies. Griffin v. Scott, 218 M 410, 710 P2d 1337, 42 St. Rep. 1695 (1985).

Quiet Title Action — Record Taken as a Whole: A landowner filed an action to quiet title to a county road established 80 years earlier, claiming that defects in the 1902 proceedings prevented establishment of a statutorily created 60-foot-wide public highway and that the existing public road was acquired by prescriptive use and was limited to the greatest width actually used. The record contained the actual petition to establish a road, signed by more than 20 residents of the area, including the appellant's predecessor in interest. The District Court decreed the road to be a 60-foot-wide declared county right-of-way, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The county is not required to prove on the face of the record that public officials had jurisdiction to create a public road if the record, taken as a whole, shows that a public road was created. Sheldon v. Flathead County, 218 M 270, 707 P2d 540, 42 St. Rep. 1573 (1985).

Ambiguous Assignment — Construction of Document as a Whole: Peterson sold property to the Blairs under a contract for deed that reserved one-half the mineral rights in Peterson. Peterson then assigned her rights under the contract to Hopkins. The Blairs paid Hopkins and recorded. Peterson sued Hopkins to quiet title when the lessee of Peterson's one-half mineral rights claimed Peterson had assigned them to Hopkins by mistake. Hopkins was granted summary judgment because the assignment conveyed all of Peterson's right, title, and interest in the property, together with the contract for deed. The judgment was reversed, and judgment was granted Peterson. The assignment stated that it was subject to the contract for deed, thus creating an ambiguity. Taken as a whole, it appeared that the assignment was of the contract for deed and was not itself a deed of the entire surface and mineral interests to Hopkins. This was supported by the conduct of the parties, for Peterson leased her reserved interest for the 22 years following the assignment until lessee raised the alleged mistake, and at no time up to his death in the 17th year of the 22 years did Hopkins claim all the mineral rights or demand Peterson's one-half interest. Peterson v. Hopkins, 210 M 429, 684 P2d 1061, 41 St. Rep. 1140 (1984).

Quiet Title Action — Limitation of Actions: Some causes of action do not clearly fall within the provisions of the specific Statutes of Limitation found in this Code. Normally, the residual Statute of Limitations in 27-2-215 (renumbered 27-2-231) would then be applicable. This is not the case, however, when the cause concerns real estate. Under 70-19-402, it appears that seizure or possession within the 5 years prior to the commencement of the action is the only limitation imposed by statute on plaintiff in this case, who sued to quiet title. Since she was seized of a mineral interest during that period, she was entitled to wait until her title was questioned before filing suit. The running of time (here, more than 25 years) tends to strengthen rather than destroy title determined by decree. Peterson v. Hopkins, 210 M 429, 684 P2d 1061, 41 St. Rep. 1140 (1984).

Sufficiency of Interest to Maintain Action: Since the filing of a quiet title action freezes the rights of the parties at the time of the commencement of the action, when the plaintiff purchased a purported title interest 2 weeks after the commencement of the quiet title action, he could not improve his position by events occurring after the action was filed and the court properly granted summary judgment against him. Alden v. Johnson, 167 M 60, 535 P2d 168 (1975).

Boundary Dispute: In an action to quiet title and establish the boundary between two tracts of land, where the owners of the tracts received their deeds according to governmental surveys and a fence was in existence but the fence was never described as a boundary, the parties are bound by the true line as ascertained by the survey. Reel v. Walter, 131 M 382, 309 P2d 1027 (1957), distinguished in Thibault v. Flynn, 133 M 461, 325 P2d 914 (1958).

Scope of Inquiry:

As this section permits inquiry into the whole title of property in question, it was proper for plaintiff in his reply to an answer alleging an oil and gas interest to seek the cancellation of the oil and gas leases. Schumacher v. Cole, 131 M 166, 309 P2d 311 (1957), distinguished in Johnson v. Heirs of Frisbie, 140 M 128, 368 P2d 577 (1962).

In action to quiet title to realty, plaintiff under short form of complaint alleging in general terms plaintiff's title and unfounded claim of title by purchasers from county to which County Treasurer issued a tax deed may introduce evidence of irregularities, defects, and omissions in tax title proceedings affecting validity of deed as well as in deed itself, and court should consider all irregularities, etc., in determining validity of deed. Miller v. Murphy, 119 M 393, 175 P2d 182 (1946).

An action to quiet title is not aimed at particular instruments but at the pretensions of individuals claiming adversely, while a suit to remove a cloud on title is directed at instruments rather than at adverse claims and preserves in statutory form one of the remedies afforded by courts of equity upon the principle of quia timet. Slette v. Review Publishing Co., 71 M 518, 230 P 580 (1924), explained in Ryan v. Bloom, 120 M 443, 186 P2d 879 (1947).

Stockholder's Action: A single stockholder cannot bring suit to quiet title to land to which he claims the corporation is the sole and exclusive owner. Noble v. Farmers Union Trading Co., 123 M 518, 216 P2d 925 (1950), distinguished in Malcom v. Stondall Land & Inv. Co., 129 M 142, 284 P2d 258 (1955).

Lienholder as Plaintiff: City claiming to be holder of lien for unpaid sewer assessments was not "claiming title to real estate" within this section and hence did not have sufficient interest in the land to maintain an action to quiet title. Cut Bank v. Clapper Motor Co., 120 M 274, 182 P2d 474 (1947).

Indian Land: In an action to quiet title brought by purchaser of Indian land acquired by the county under tax deed, a trust patent which had been issued to a half-blood Indian allottee and 3 years thereafter changed to a fee simple patent at his request, the fee simple patent removed the land from immunity of taxation, and collateral attack upon such patent was improper. Chatterton v. Lukin, 116 M 419, 154 P2d 798 (1944).

Tax Sale Repurchase Rights: In an action to quiet title against former owner of tract of farm land, title to which had been acquired by county by tax deed, the former continuing in possession and farming it under a lease from the county authorized by section 2208.1, R.C.M. 1935 (since repealed), and containing provision that in case the county after two futile attempts to sell the property should place it on sale, lessee should receive notice so as to enable him to buy it, but when another purchased it at private sale without making inquiry of the occupant or inspection of the county records, he was not an innocent purchaser as against any rights of lessee. Berger v. Johnson, 116 M 270, 151 P2d 586 (1944).

Receivership: In an action to quiet title to mining property owned by a common-law trust of five trustees, the interest of one of whom had allegedly been transferred to cross complainant who had never received his stock, resulting in a hopeless deadlock of the remaining four in business matters by a vote of two to two, the remedies provided by the trust agreement should have been exhausted before appointing a receiver, and under 72-23-507 (now repealed) the court could appoint a successor to fill the vacancy if the agreement does not provide a method. Demos v. Doepker, 116 M 264, 149 P2d 544 (1944).

Extent of Interest Adjudged: In a suit by a judgment creditor against the judgment debtor and others who claimed an interest in the property involved, where the plaintiff alleged that such interest was unknown to him and therefore prayed not that the title be quieted but that the extent of his interest and the amount of his judgment lien be adjudged, complaint was sufficient against general demurrer. While he could have had recourse to 25-14-103 relating to supplementary proceedings or to this chapter relative to quieting title, neither proceeding is necessarily exclusive. Christie v. Morris, 116 M 210, 149 P2d 250 (1944), distinguished in Cut Bank v. Clapper Motor Co., 120 M 274, 182 P2d 474 (1947).

Forfeiture of Drilling Rights: In an action to quiet title to a 40-acre tract excepting two 5-acre parcels which under a clause in a drilling agreement comprised the acreage surrounding each well not subject to forfeiture, judgment quieting title and terminating defendants' rights in the remaining 30-acre tract was correct. Ellingson v. Shaw, 114 M 550, 138 P2d 947 (1943).

Payment as Condition of Decree: As a condition precedent to the right of plaintiffs to a decree in their favor in an action to quiet title to land allegedly unlawfully sold under execution, they were required to offer repayment to defendant purchaser of any money expended by him in payment of delinquent taxes on the land, as well as a sum of money paid to the widow of the owner for release of her dower right therein. Andrews v. Smithson, 114 M 360, 136 P2d 531 (1943).

Alternative Remedies: Title may be cleared under this section for the purpose of quieting title or 27-1-433(1), providing for cancellation of instruments, the latter being aimed at a particular instrument under a complaint pointing out the specific grounds relied upon to establish invalidity, while under this section inquiry into the whole title to the property is permissible, the court being given broad powers, including that of removing clouds and canceling instruments to quiet title; the rule against collateral attack upon judgments does not apply to tax deeds issued under 15-18-202 (repealed, 1987) in such proceeding. Sanborn v. Lewis & Clark County, 113 M 1, 120 P2d 567 (1941).

Pleadings:

The rule announced in Glacier County v. Schlinski, 90 M 136, 300 P 270 (1931), that in attacking a tax deed, the particular defects on which the pleader relies to defeat the deed must be clearly and specifically pointed out, applies only to an action brought under 27-1-433, authorizing cancellation of written instruments. Sanborn v. Lewis & Clark County, 113 M 1, 120 P2d 567 (1941).

In an action to quiet title under this section, as distinguished from one brought under 27-1-433(1), to remove a cloud on title, a complaint alleging that the defendant claims an adverse estate or interest is sufficient without further defining it, whereas under the latter section the pleader must state facts disclosing the apparent validity of the instrument attacked and its actual invalidity. Slette v. Review Publishing Co., 71 M 518, 230 P 580 (1924), explained in Ryan v. Bloom, 120 M 443, 186 P2d 879 (1947).

Contract of Sale:

A mere contract to convey land will not divest the vendor of his right to maintain an action to quiet title or remove a cloud therefrom when the legal title remains in him. Kern v. Robertson, 92 M 283, 12 P2d 565 (1932).

An executor, as holder of the naked legal title to real property sold by his testate on deferred payments, charged with the duty to make conveyance on compliance by the purchaser with the terms of his contract, was a proper party to prosecute an action to quiet title to remove a cloud thereon in the shape of a Sheriff's certificate on execution sale of the property levied upon as real property after its conversion into personalty. Kern v. Robertson, 92 M 283, 12 P2d 565 (1932).

Burden of Proof:

In suit to quiet title to certain mineral claims, burden was upon defendants to disprove plaintiff's title, where record fair upon its face showed chain of title running to plaintiff. Maury v. Jones, 25 F2d 412 (9th Cir. 1928).

In suit to quiet title to mining claims, in which defendants claimed as purchasers under sale of property of estate, evidence of attempted transfer by plaintiff of mining property to father's estate was insufficient to sustain defendants' burden to disprove plaintiff's record title. Maury v. Jones, 25 F2d 412 (9th Cir. 1928).

Federal Court Jurisdiction: Suit to quiet title to mining claims brought under this section is within equitable cognizance of federal courts. Maury v. Jones, 25 F2d 412 (9th Cir. 1928).

Probate Jurisdiction: State court sitting in probate was without jurisdiction to determine questions of title between estate and persons claiming adversely, and order and judgment for sale of estate's property in probate court was therefore not res judicata of question of title in subsequent suit to quiet title under this section. Maury v. Jones, 25 F2d 412 (9th Cir. 1928).

Easement:

The complaint in an action to quiet title to land claimed as a private road or way of necessity is sufficient if it alleges ownership in plaintiff, obstruction of it by defendant, assertion and claim of right or interest therein by him adverse to plaintiff, that defendant's claim is without authority of law and invalid, and that the same constitutes a cloud upon plaintiff's title. Violet v. Martin, 62 M 335, 205 P 221 (1922).

An action lies to quiet title to an easement to a right-of-way for a ditch as against a county claiming exclusive use of the land for highway purposes. (Mr. Chief Justice Brantly dissenting.) Mannix v. Powell County, 60 M 510, 199 P 914 (1921).

Required Service in Quiet Title Action — Decree Without Service on Affected Party Not Binding: Defendants instituted an action to quiet title to property that bordered plaintiff's land along a river, but plaintiff was not served in the action. Title was adjudicated in favor of defendants, but plaintiff was not aware of the adjudication until after commencing the present action to determine ownership of the same property. Plaintiff claimed that the prior adjudication was not binding, and the District Court agreed. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendants did not inspect the property or notify plaintiff of the action, even though plaintiff's deed was a matter of public record. Because defendants failed to conduct a diligent search and inquiry regarding parties that would be affected by the quiet title action and failed to notify plaintiff as an affected party, plaintiff was not bound by the quiet title adjudication in the case at bar. Andersen v. Monforton, 2005 MT 310, 329 M 460, 125 P3d 614 (2005).

Misnomer of Defendant: In an action to quiet title to a house and lot, which included unknown claimants as defendants, where the scrivener of the deed erred in misnaming the corporate grantee, it was error to strike demurrer of corporate defendant alleging that the complaint failed to state a cause of action against the defendant and defendant was not required to intervene. Creation of County Road — Applicability of Curative Statute of 1895: Garrison brought an action against Lincoln County, alleging that the county had no right or interest in a road that crossed Garrison's property. The District Court held that the road was a county road or, alternatively, that even if the road was not a county road, the public had obtained a prescriptive easement covering the road. Garrison appealed, arguing that County Commissioners in 1912 and 1913 failed to strictly comply with the statutory requirements for creating a county road, rendering the road private property, despite the fact that the road was declared public in 1913 and had been used extensively by the public and maintained by the county for over 50 years. The District Court properly relied on Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210 (1981), to conclude that the record taken as a whole presented clear evidence that despite discrepancies in its description or location, a county road was created and that any defects in the procedure used to create the road were remedied by the curative statute 2600 of the Political Code of 1895 that provided that all roads laid out, traveled, or used by the public were considered public highways. Garrison v. Lincoln County, 2003 MT 227, 317 M 190, 77 P3d 163 (2003), distinguishing Pederson v. Dawson County, 2000 MT 339, 303 M 158, 17 P3d 393 (2000).

County Right-of-Way Considered Easement — Injunction Proper Remedy to Ensure Access to Right-of-Way: Jefferson County filed a complaint for a temporary injunction, an order allowing entry upon land to survey McCarty Creek Road, which passed through McCauley's land to public land beyond, and an order setting a show cause hearing. The District Court issued the injunction allowing the survey and set a date for hearing. At the hearing, the court found extensive documentary evidence, dating back to 1883, confirming the existence of McCarty Creek Road and, in its final order, determined that the road, as it crossed McCauley's property, was a dedicated and established county road. The court further enjoined McCauley from interfering with access or obstructing ingress and egress on the road. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's determination and finding no abuse of discretion in enjoining McCauley from interfering with the public use of McCarty Creek Road. Jefferson County v. McCauley Ranches, 1999 MT 333, 297 M 392, 994 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1329 (1999), following Bolinger v. Bozeman, 158 M 507, 493 P2d 1062 (1972), Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 631 (1981), and Bailey v. Ravalli County, 201 M 138, 653 P2d 139, 39 St. Rep. 2010 (1982), and distinguishing Porter v. K & S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836 (1981), Knudson v. McDunn, 271 M 61, 894 P2d 295 (1995), and Lurie v. Sheriff, 284 M 207, 944 P2d 205, 54 St. Rep. 847 (1997).

Quiet Title to Public Road — Jurisdictional Defects Cured: In an action by a landowner to quiet title in a road crossing his property, the Supreme Court held that despite jurisdictional defects, such as failure to require production of a copy of a petition to the County Commissioners showing a description of the road or proof that the petition was signed by ten qualified petitioners, the record taken as a whole shows that a public road was created. Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 631 (1981), followed in Jefferson County v. McCauley Ranches, 1999 MT 333, 297 M 392, 994 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1329 (1999), Lee v. Musselshell County, 2004 MT 64, 320 M 294, 87 P3d 423 (2004), and Sayers v. Chouteau County, 2013 MT 45, 369 Mont. 98, 297 P.3d 312.

Quiet Title — Collateral Attack on Judgment — Reasonable Diligence — Invalid Service — Jurisdiction: While it is a general rule that a judgment cannot be attacked in a collateral action, such attack is permissible if the first judgment is void for lack of jurisdiction. If service of process is improperly made, the court acquires no jurisdiction over that party and that party may collaterally attack the judgment. "Reasonable diligence" was not used by appellants in the prior action to locate individuals to be served under former Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), because they had dealt with such individuals before and should have been able to contact them, and the Secretary of State had the names and addresses of the corporate agent and director on file. Therefore, service upon the Secretary of State did not confer jurisdiction and collateral attack was proper. Russell Realty Co. v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980), followed in Baertsch v. Lewis & Clark County, 256 M 114, 845 P2d 106, 49 St. Rep. 1162 (1992).

Equitable Interest as Basis for Action: In a quiet title action plaintiff is not required to deraign his title in the complaint, but may, under his general allegation of ownership, prove that if defendant held any title to it he held it in trust for plaintiff. The holder of an equitable title may maintain an action against the holder of the legal title. Polson Sheep Co. v. Owen, 110 M 601, 106 P2d 181 (1940).

Scope of Adjudication: Under this section the District Court has jurisdiction to make a complete adjudication of the title to lands involved in an action to quiet title, irrespective of whether the claim asserted by defendant under an instrument in writing constitutes a cloud on plaintiff's title. If the claim is adverse to plaintiff's interest the action may be maintained. Hochsprung v. Stevenson, 82 M 222, 266 P 406 (1928).

Claim of Prescriptive Easement as Not Constituting Quiet Title Action: Entry of default judgment in favor of claimant of a prescriptive easement is not prohibited under 70-28-108 since the judgment did not adjudicate ownership of property or easement but addressed only the use of the property and as such was not a quiet title action to which 70-28-108 applies. Griffin v. Scott, 218 M 410, 710 P2d 1337, 42 St. Rep. 1695 (1985).

Default by Defendant: In action to quiet title in which defendants default, plaintiff must, under this section, to sustain his action, produce sufficient evidence to prima facie entitle him to relief, and where the evidence is insufficient the court may properly decree that plaintiff take nothing and order dismissal of the action. Le Vasseur v. Roullman, 93 M 552, 20 P2d 250 (1933).

Service by Publication Held Sufficient: The plaintiffs argued that a previous quiet title action filed by a former owner in 1948 extinguished the defendants' alleged easement at that time. The defendants claimed that their easement was not negated by the 1948 action because they had not been personally served at that time. The Supreme Court held that there was no evidence that the former owner knew of the defendants' use and therefore they were "persons unknown" and properly served by publication. Brown v. Tintinger, 245 M 373, 801 P2d 607, 47 St. Rep. 2179 (1990).

Quiet Title Action Not Res Judicata Where Deed Executed After Action: A quiet title action as to mineral interests reserved by the county was not res judicata because the quiet title action occurred before the deed in question was executed, delivered, and accepted. Holdover Tenants Not Entitled to Restitution: Holdover tenants on agricultural land sought restitution for planting and harvesting costs under a theory of unjust enrichment when their lessors foreclosed on the property. The tenants were not holding over in good faith under color of title and had no right to remain on the property during the time for which they sought restitution. Because they did not come to court with clean hands, the tenants clearly were not entitled to restitution. Ruegsegger v. Welborn, 237 M 317, 773 P2d 305, 46 St. Rep. 833 (1989).

Offset of Improvements — Unjust Enrichment Principles: Michunovich purchased a tract of land under contract for deed from the Brangers. Michunovich entered a contract for deed to sell a portion of that tract to Owen. Owen fulfilled his part of the contract. Michunovich defaulted on the Branger contract. Brangers filed a breach of contract suit against Michunovich. Michunovich served Owen a notice of termination since he was unable to secure a deed release from Brangers. Michunovich did not refund Owen's downpayment as required by the contract. Owen refused to vacate the property. Michunovich assigned all his interest in the Branger contract to Stevenson with the Brangers' consent. Since Stevenson was able to bring the Branger contract current, the Brangers stipulated to the dismissal of their suit against Michunovich. Owen filed a purchaser's lien on the property under his contract from Michunovich. Stevenson then filed a quiet title action. The trial court found for Stevenson and allowed him to offset the reasonable rental value of the property against the downpayment owed Owen by Michunovich. The trial court also held that Owen was not entitled to offset the value of his improvements against the rental. The Supreme Court held that under the conditions of this section, Owen obviously held under color of title. The trial court was instructed to determine if the improvements were placed on the property in good faith. The court stated that the allowance of a recovery from the owner for the value of improvements mistakenly put on the owner's premises is an application of the equitable rule which prevents unjust enrichment. Stevenson v. Owen, 212 M 287, 687 P2d 1010, 41 St. Rep. 1743 (1984).

Color of Title: A tax deed and quitclaim deed which did not describe the land did not constitute "color of title" which would enable defendant to set off the value of improvements against the damages. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 121 M 1, 190 P2d 55 (1948).

Common-Law Setoff: This statute does not prescribe the exclusive method by which an occupying claimant may recoup the value of improvements, but a setoff may be obtained under the rules of the common law. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 121 M 1, 190 P2d 55 (1948).

Proper Relief in Quiet Title Action: After deciding that defendants were entitled to quiet and peaceful possession of a disputed piece of property, the District Court ordered that an old certificate of survey be removed from county records and that a new instrument be prepared that described accurate boundaries. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. After the correct boundary was determined, there was no justification for not quieting title in defendants' favor and no reason for retaining an erroneous plat in the county records. The relief was therefore appropriate. Olson v. Jude, 2003 MT 186, 316 M 438, 73 P3d 809 (2003).

Case Notes

Constitutionality: This section contravenes neither the "due process" clause of the federal Constitution nor the provision of the state Constitution prohibiting the taking or damaging of private property without just compensation. State ex rel. Parrott Silver & Copper Co. v. District Court, 28 M 528, 73 P 230 (1903).

Expenses of Inspection: It was error to allow an inspection of defendant's working, requiring defendant to use its appliances to lower and raise plaintiff's agents in making such inspection, without providing for the payment by the plaintiff of the expenses incident thereto, upon the presentation of a claim therefor by the defendant. State ex rel. Parrott Silver & Copper Co. v. District Court, 28 M 528, 73 P 230 (1903).

Mining — Access Through Either Party's Shafts: Where, in an action to determine the extralateral rights of the owner of lode mining property, it appeared that most of the workings in one of defendant's claims could be readily reached through plaintiff's shaft, it was error for the court, in granting an order of inspection and survey, to allow the plaintiff access to defendant's workings exclusively through defendant's shafts and by means of the latter's appliances. State ex rel. Parrott Silver & Copper Co. v. District Court, 28 M 528, 73 P 230 (1903).

Motion for Order: Where it is made to appear from the allegations of the petition, either alone or by reference to the complaint, that there is good cause to believe that an examination of the property will aid the parties in the presentation of their case, and such allegations are supported by substantial evidence, it is sufficient to warrant the making of a proper order of inspection and survey under this section. The filing of a petition is not required. A motion sufficient to move the discretion of the court is all that is required. State ex rel. Parrott Silver & Copper Co. v. District Court, 28 M 528, 73 P 230 (1903).

Order Should Be Made: Where the evidence indicates conditions to justify a well-grounded belief that the adverse party is trespassing upon applicant's rights, the order of inspection and survey should be made. State ex rel. Parrott Silver & Copper Co. v. District Court, 28 M 528, 73 P 230 (1903); State ex rel. Geyman v. District Court, 26 M 483, 68 P 861 (1902).

Purpose of Section:

If a stranger, under claim of title, encroaches upon the exterior portions of a lode by means of openings of which he has the exclusive control, this section grants the owner of such exterior portions entry through and a proper inspection and survey of such underground workings of his adversary as are necessary to the ascertainment of the facts necessary to enable the owner to protect his rights. State ex rel. Parrott Silver & Copper Co. v. District Court, 28 M 528, 73 P 230 (1903).

The purpose of this section is to enable the parties to present the facts of the case to the court so that it may intelligently adjudicate the rights involved. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 26 M 416, 68 P 794 (1902); State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Court, 25 M 504, 65 P 1020 (1901).

Survey Erroneous Where Issues Do Not Require Examination: Where the issues do not render necessary an examination of all of defendant's workings, an order authorizing the plaintiffs to survey all the underground workings in the entire group of defendant's claims is erroneous. State ex rel. Parrott Silver & Copper Co. v. District Court, 28 M 528, 73 P 230 (1903).

Inspection and Survey — Showing Necessary to Support a Search Warrant: The evidence upon which an order of inspection and survey is made need go no further than would be necessary to support a search warrant in a given case. State ex rel. Geyman v. District Court, 26 M 483, 68 P 861 (1902).

Discretion of Trial Court: The propriety of granting an order of inspection and survey under this section lies very largely in the discretion of the trial court. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 26 M 416, 68 P 794 (1902).

Injunction: The granting of a temporary injunction does not preclude the issuance of an inspection order. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 26 M 416, 68 P 794 (1902).

Mining Works: Where the respective parties assert title to certain ore bodies, each basing his claim on an asserted ownership of the apex of a vein, to determine which will necessitate a following of the vein from the surface, a court may properly grant an order requiring the owner of the surface openings to allow the other party to enter such openings for the purpose of surveying beneath the surface, though the latter party had complete maps up to the commencement of the suit, after which the party was excluded, and work of removing the ores rapidly pushed. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 26 M 416, 68 P 794 (1902).

Necessity for Inspection: Inspection orders should always be limited by the necessities of the case. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 26 M 416, 68 P 794 (1902).

Time of Granting Order: Under this section an inspection order may be granted before the issues are framed. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 26 M 416, 68 P 794 (1902).

Equitable Power of Court: This section is but declaratory of the inherent power of courts of equity and rests upon the principle that the parties should be enabled to put the court in possession of all the facts touching the controversy, to the end that their rights may be properly adjudicated. The power of the court under this section is limited only by the necessities of the pending action. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Court, 26 M 396, 68 P 570, 69 P 103 (1902).

Evidence Required for Order: Where the evidence showed the prima facie right to a mining claim to be in relators, it was error for the District Court to make an order granting defendant and his employees the right to enter and inspect all of relators' surrounding mines for the period of 40 days to obtain evidence. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Court, 25 M 504, 65 P 1020 (1901). See also Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. Pilot Butte Min. Co., 52 M 165, 156 P 409 (1915).

CHAPTER 29
PARTITION OF REAL PROPERTY

Part 1
Preliminary Procedure

70-29-101. Action for partition authorized — who may bring.

Case Notes

Division of Property of Tenants in Common — Presumptions and Intent: Assets held by tenants in common are presumed to be divided equally because the assets are presumed to be owned equally, but that presumption shifts when there is evidence of unequal contribution. When the preponderance of evidence establishes that the cotenants contributed unequally to the value of the property, it is presumed that the property will be divided in proportion to each cotenant's contribution. When there is an indication that one party intended to gift property to the other, the party who seeks to establish a disproportionate distribution based on gifted property has the burden of demonstrating that intent, and all relevant evidence of the parties' intent is admissible to sustain or rebut the presumptions. Intent of the parties may be demonstrated by conduct over the course of time, sharing of other expenses, labor, or other admissible means. In this case, the District Court's finding that the parties intended to split their assets equally was supported by substantial evidence and affirmed. However, the court erroneously adjusted a previous settlement of the parties regarding the distribution of the proceeds of a money market account when that asset was not in dispute and erred in awarding rent payments to one cotenant in contravention of the general rule that a tenant in common is not liable for the use and occupation of the premises until a tenant out of possession brings an action demanding the equivalent of joint possession. Thus, the case was remanded for entry of proper judgment on those issues. Flood v. Kalinyaprak, 2004 MT 15, 319 M 280, 84 P3d 27 (2004), following In re Estate of Dern, 279 M 138, 928 P2d 123 (1996), and followed in Anderson v. Woodward, 2009 MT 144, 350 M 343, 207 P3d 329 (2009), and LeFeber v. Johnson, 2009 MT 188, 351 M 75, 209 P3d 254 (2009). See also Lawrence v. Harvey, 186 M 314, 607 P2d 551 (1980).

Collateral Estoppel Applied to Preclude Reopening Settlement Agreement Regarding Disposition of Jointly Owned Marital Property — Property Interest Not Altered by Filing of Partition Action: When the husband and wife separated, they entered a property settlement agreement dividing all their real and personal property, agreeing that they would continue to jointly own their residence, with the right of survivorship. In the decree of dissolution, the District Court affirmed that the property settlement agreement was fair and equitable. Several years after the divorce, seeking to wrap up financial affairs with her former husband, the wife moved to partition the residence and obtain an equal division of the value of the property. At trial, the husband argued that the property settlement agreement was unfair and that the wife should be denied any recovery for her interest in the residence because it was purchased prior to the marriage and because she did not contribute to the marriage financially. The wife moved in limine to preclude the husband from reopening matters that should have been raised in the divorce proceedings. The court denied her motion, reasoning that the property was not divided in the divorce and that because the partition action was an action at equity, surrounding circumstances could be considered. The court found that the filing of the partition action severed the joint tenancy, and the husband was then allowed to introduce evidence regarding the marital equities. The court ultimately concluded that the wife's interest in the residence was not compensable because she had not contributed significantly to the acquisition or improvement of the property or contributed to the parties' assets during the marriage. The wife appealed. The Supreme Court found that res judicata and equitable estoppel barred relitigation of the fairness of the joint ownership issue, which was considered and approved in the decree of dissolution. Further, the mere filing of the partition action does not sever one's interest in property. Rather, the parties' respective interests remain intact until the judgment severing the tenancy is entered. The rebuttable presumption that underlies a joint tenancy in property is equal shares, and there was nothing in the evidence to rebut that presumption and no evidence of postdecree events that would justify a different result. The husband failed to carry the burden of rebutting the presumption of equal shares, and the Supreme Court remanded for a 50-50 partition of the value of the residence. Rausch v. Hogan, 2001 MT 123, 305 M 382, 28 P3d 460 (2001).

Partition Proceeding — Injunction May Be Granted: A court of equity may, in a partition proceeding, grant an injunction to preserve the property pending the proceeding. Granting a preliminary injunction is within the discretion of the trial court and will not be interfered with unless a manifest abuse of discretion is shown. Frame v. Frame, 227 M 439, 740 P2d 655, 44 St. Rep. 1216 (1987), followed in Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

Leased Land — No Implied Waiver or Resulting Trust Barring Partition — Lease Not Given Partial Effect: Parents gifted their ranch one-third to each child as tenants in common, and children leased it back to parents by 1-year lease automatically renewed unless terminated in writing by a party at least 30 days before expiration of an annual term. In affirming decision that wife who inherited her husband's one-third interest when he died was entitled to partition, the Supreme Court held that: (1) in the absence of evidence, an agreement waiving children's right to partition would not be implied; (2) no resulting trust in favor of the parents was created that would bar partition; and (3) the property should not be sold subject to a lease on two-thirds of it from the other two children. Jarrett v. Jarrett, 202 M 471, 659 P2d 839, 40 St. Rep. 222 (1983).

Devising Life Estate to Cotenant Not to Defeat Right to Partition: Plaintiff and her husband acquired the property in question as tenants in common, each acquiring an undivided one-half interest. The husband died, devising a life estate in the property to plaintiff, with the remainder to their children, the defendants. Plaintiff sought partition of the property so that she could hold in fee-simple her undivided one-half interest. Defendants contended that plaintiff was no longer a tenant in common and therefore lacked standing to bring the action. The Supreme Court adopted the rule that a tenant in common may not deprive his cotenant of the right to a partition by conveying or devising a life estate to his cotenant. The court held that a testator's desire that property held by a surviving spouse be devised to their children is not grounds for defeating a right to partition. Equitable principles support the finding that a decedent not be allowed to defeat a property right of his survivor by a mere desire that a subsequent disposition occur. Lawrence v. Donovan, 190 M 150, 619 P2d 1183, 37 St. Rep. 1756 (1980).

When Partition Is Proper — Open Divorce Decree: An open divorce decree failed to make a final disposition of the family residence which the husband and wife owned as joint tenants. The wife quitclaimed her interest to her children. The wife later died. The children and their father became tenants in common. The father sought the sale and partition of the property. A cotenant is entitled to partition as a matter of right, although it may be denied where it would be against public policy or legal or equitable principles. Here, where all the cotenants were of legal age, it was an abuse of discretion to deny partition. Lawrence v. Harvey, 186 M 314, 607 P2d 551 (1980).

Partition Statute Not Statute of Limitations — Real Property Statute Applicable: Two brothers were partners in a ranching operation. One brother died and the surviving brother purchased the deceased brother's interest from his estate in 1940. In 1973 the deceased partner's sons found a note from their mother stating they had a one-third interest in the property. In April, 1978, they instituted action for partition of the property, claiming they were cotenants. Plaintiffs contended that 70-29-101, which states no time limit, was the applicable Statute of Limitations. Section 70-29-101 is not a Statute of Limitations but merely sets forth the right of a cotenant in possession to file a partition action. Section 70-19-401 is the applicable Statute of Limitations, a 5-year period for the recovery of an interest in real property. The action was barred by 70-19-401. Glennie v. Glennie Ranches, 184 M 77, 601 P2d 699 (1979).

Sufficiency of Evidence — Parol Partition: Evidence was sufficient to support judgment of parol partition. Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 94, 560 P2d 1331 (1977).

Separate Owners of Land and Building: Where land and building on land had separate owners, owner of building had no right to an order that the land and building be sold together and the proceeds apportioned between the owners, because the owners were not cotenants of the whole property but sole owners of parts of the property. Allman v. Stuart, 158 M 402, 492 P2d 909 (1972).

Statutory Basis for Action: An action for partition is a special statutory proceeding. The statute must be looked to for the authority to bring the action and for the procedure to be followed both in bringing the action and after it is instituted. Hurley v. O'Neill, 31 M 595, 79 P 242 (1905).

Case Notes

Devising Life Estate to Cotenant Not to Defeat Right to Partition: Plaintiff and her husband acquired the property in question as tenants in common, each acquiring an undivided one-half interest. The husband died, devising a life estate in the property to plaintiff, with the remainder to their children, the defendants. Plaintiff sought partition of the property so that she could hold in fee-simple her undivided one-half interest. Defendants contended that plaintiff was no longer a tenant in common and therefore lacked standing to bring the action. The Supreme Court adopted the rule that a tenant in common may not deprive his cotenant of the right to a partition by conveying or devising a life estate to his cotenant. Wife of Tenant in Common: The wife of a defendant tenant in common, having an inchoate right of dower in an undivided share of the property, is an indispensable party to a suit for partition. Hurley v. O'Neill, 31 M 595, 79 P 242 (1905).

Case Notes

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Request for Stay of Execution Not Required: Following entry and satisfaction of judgment in District Court, the parties were aware of a contemplated appeal, but no stay of execution was requested or supersedeas bond posted. After plaintiff acquired title to the disputed property pursuant to the judgment, defendant filed a notice of appeal and lis pendens, effectively preserving the status quo pending appeal. Plaintiff moved to dismiss, contending that by voluntarily satisfying the judgment, defendants waived their right to appeal. Applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), the Supreme Court held that the parties' course of conduct illustrated the involuntary, rather than voluntary nature of the satisfaction of judgment. Because satisfaction was involuntary, the right to appeal was not waived. Further, under former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a party may request a stay of execution, but the request is not mandatory, even though a party choosing not to seek a stay runs the risk of having the appeal become moot. Plaintiff's motion to dismiss was denied. Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Slander of Title by Filing Lis Pendens — Action Properly Dismissed After Extension of Closing Date: As a result of the failure of Cash and Konopacki to sign or initial an amendment to the original offer to sell certain real estate, a contract to sell and buy was not actually formed between Cash and Konopacki as sellers and the Austins as buyers. Nevertheless, the Austins reduced the price of other real estate that they owned in California, and when Cash and Konopacki indicated their belief that no contract existed, the Austins filed a lis pendens against the Cash/Konopacki property, preventing Cash and Konopacki from accepting an offer from another buyer. However, Cash and Konopacki did agree with the other buyer to extend the date for closing of the sale. When the Austins brought an action to compel performance, Cash and Konopacki counterclaimed for slander of title caused by the lis pendens. The Supreme Court held that because an extension of the closing date had been agreed to by Cash and Konopacki and their buyer, Cash and Konopacki were not harmed by the filing of the lis pendens and the District Court had therefore properly dismissed the counterclaim for slander of title. Austin v. Cash, 274 M 54, 906 P2d 669, 52 St. Rep. 1119 (1995).

Statute of Frauds — Partition: When Statute of Frauds was not raised as defense at court level in partition action, it will not be considered for the first time on appeal. Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 94, 560 P2d 1331 (1977).

Relief Sought by Defendant: In actions for the partition of real property, the defendant is not required to plead facts sufficient to constitute a counterclaim in order to obtain affirmative relief. In such actions the plaintiffs must set out specifically and particularly, so far as may be known to them, the interests of all persons in the property. The defendants must set forth in their answers fully and particularly the origin, nature, and extent of their respective interests. The rights of all parties may be put in issue, tried, and determined. An answer stating the matters required to be pleaded by the statute will, when established, entitle the defendants to full relief. State ex rel. Cornue v. Lindsay, 24 M 352, 61 P 883 (1900).

Part 2
Trial and Judgment

Part Case Notes

Collateral Estoppel Applied to Preclude Reopening Settlement Agreement Regarding Disposition of Jointly Owned Marital Property — Property Interest Not Altered by Filing of Partition Action: When the husband and wife separated, they entered a property settlement agreement dividing all their real and personal property, agreeing that they would continue to jointly own their residence, with the right of survivorship. In the decree of dissolution, the District Court affirmed that the property settlement agreement was fair and equitable. Several years after the divorce, seeking to wrap up financial affairs with her former husband, the wife moved to partition the residence and obtain an equal division of the value of the property. At trial, the husband argued that the property settlement agreement was unfair and that the wife should be denied any recovery for her interest in the residence because it was purchased prior to the marriage and because she did not contribute to the marriage financially. The wife moved in limine to preclude the husband from reopening matters that should have been raised in the divorce proceedings. The court denied her motion, reasoning that the property was not divided in the divorce and that because the partition action was an action at equity, surrounding circumstances could be considered. The court found that the filing of the partition action severed the joint tenancy, and the husband was then allowed to introduce evidence regarding the marital equities. The court ultimately concluded that the wife's interest in the residence was not compensable because she had not contributed significantly to the acquisition or improvement of the property or contributed to the parties' assets during the marriage. The wife appealed. The Supreme Court found that res judicata and equitable estoppel barred relitigation of the fairness of the joint ownership issue, which was considered and approved in the decree of dissolution. Further, the mere filing of the partition action does not sever one's interest in property. Rather, the parties' respective interests remain intact until the judgment severing the tenancy is entered. The rebuttable presumption that underlies a joint tenancy in property is equal shares, and there was nothing in the evidence to rebut that presumption and no evidence of postdecree events that would justify a different result. The husband failed to carry the burden of rebutting the presumption of equal shares, and the Supreme Court remanded for a 50-50 partition of the value of the residence. Rausch v. Hogan, 2001 MT 123, 305 M 382, 28 P3d 460 (2001).

Presumption That Referee's Valuation Was Arrived at Fairly and Honestly: A partition action was filed by one cotenant of a piece of real property, the wife, after the death of the other, the husband. The decedent had willed a life estate in his one-half interest to his wife and the remainder interest to their children. The children appealed the District Court's partition decree, claiming, among other things, that the referee had undervalued a certain parcel of the property. The referee had set a value of $7,500 for the parcel. The children contended that because they had received an offer of $24,500 for the parcel, on the condition that a fee simple interest be conveyed, the referee's valuation was erroneous. The Supreme Court upheld the partition decree. The court ruled that the children had not presented evidence sufficient to overcome the presumption that the referee's valuation was arrived at fairly and honestly, because the $24,500 offer was dependent on the transfer of a fee simple title and this was not possible because of the wife's life estate in the property. Lawrence v. Donovan, 207 M 130, 673 P2d 130, 40 St. Rep. 1944 (1983).

Case Notes

Partition Order Extinguishes Life Estate: Parents deeded a portion of their ranch to their son and retained a life estate in the entire ranch property. Subsequently, the parties entered into a partition agreement awarding part of the property to the son. The parents claimed that their life estate continued in force with respect to the son's portion of the property. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's ruling that the life estate was dissolved by the partition agreement. Hughes v. Hughes, 2013 MT 176, 370 Mont. 499, 305 P.3d 772. See also Britton v. Brown, 2013 MT 30, 368 Mont. 379, 300 P.3d 667.

Division of Property of Tenants in Common — Presumptions and Intent: Assets held by tenants in common are presumed to be divided equally because the assets are presumed to be owned equally, but that presumption shifts when there is evidence of unequal contribution. When the preponderance of evidence establishes that the cotenants contributed unequally to the value of the property, it is presumed that the property will be divided in proportion to each cotenant's contribution. When there is an indication that one party intended to gift property to the other, the party who seeks to establish a disproportionate distribution based on gifted property has the burden of demonstrating that intent, and all relevant evidence of the parties' intent is admissible to sustain or rebut the presumptions. Intent of the parties may be demonstrated by conduct over the course of time, sharing of other expenses, labor, or other admissible means. In this case, the District Court's finding that the parties intended to split their assets equally was supported by substantial evidence and affirmed. However, the court erroneously adjusted a previous settlement of the parties regarding the distribution of the proceeds of a money market account when that asset was not in dispute and erred in awarding rent payments to one cotenant in contravention of the general rule that a tenant in common is not liable for the use and occupation of the premises until a tenant out of possession brings an action demanding the equivalent of joint possession. Thus, the case was remanded for entry of proper judgment on those issues. Flood v. Kalinyaprak, 2004 MT 15, 319 M 280, 84 P3d 27 (2004), following In re Estate of Dern, 279 M 138, 928 P2d 123 (1996), and followed in Anderson v. Woodward, 2009 MT 144, 350 M 343, 207 P3d 329 (2009), and LeFeber v. Johnson, 2009 MT 188, 351 M 75, 209 P3d 254 (2009). See also Lawrence v. Harvey, 186 M 314, 607 P2d 551 (1980).

Not Error to Refuse to Combine Partnership Accounting With Partition Action: DeHaan argued that the lower court erred in not combining the accounting of partnership assets with a real property partition action. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not erred in refusing to combine the two actions because nothing in the partition statutes required that the actions be combined. Frank DeHaan, Inc. v. Gallatin-Madison Ranch Co., 250 M 304, 820 P2d 423, 48 St. Rep. 963 (1991).

Appreciated Value of Property to Be Partitioned: Payments for support under a divorce decree were not shown to have been intended as returnable to the father in the form of an equity in the house after the children of the marriage were emancipated. The father was a cotenant in the property, however, and as such was entitled to a pro rata share of the property's appreciation in value. The children who received their mother's interest in the form of a quitclaim deed should be credited with payments in excess of their share expended by them after the divorce for principal and interest and taxes on the property. The father is not entitled to an offset against this credit for the reasonable rental value of the property during the period of time before the partition action was begun. It was an abuse of the District Court's discretion to deny the father a pro rata share in the increased value of the property. Lawrence v. Harvey, 186 M 314, 607 P2d 551 (1980).

70-29-202. Court to order sale or partition — appointment of referees.

Case Notes

Authority of District Court to Impose Servitude Forbidding Building as Part of Property Partition — Owelty Applied: Plaintiff requested that the District Court partition some adjoining property, the division of which the parties, as tenants in common, could not agree upon. The court appointed referees to survey the property and recommend how best to divide it. The referees settled on a plan of division, including a recommendation to impose no-build zones on sections of each party's parcel in order to reduce the need for new permanent service roads and to alleviate future discord between the parties. The court adopted the referees' report, including the imposition of the no-build zones. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that under 70-29-205, neither the referees nor the court possessed the power to impose a no-build zone. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that under 70-29-209, the District Court has broad powers when a partition cannot be made equally, including application of the practice of owelty, wherein a court may adjudge compensation to be made by one party to another on account of the inequality. Although the compensation is often in the form of a monetary award, the court's equitable powers also include the power to impose servitudes. In this case, the facts were sufficient to support the referees' no-build zone recommendation, and the imposition of the servitude fell within the equitable power of the District Court. The Supreme Court affirmed the partition, including the no-build zones. Kellogg v. Dearborn Information Serv., LLC, 2005 MT 188, 328 M 83, 119 P3d 20 (2005).

Appointment of Three Referees Necessary Absent Consent to Appoint Fewer: The District Court found that defendants did not object until posttrial motions to a motion to appoint one referee instead of three and that the failure to object constituted a waiver of the right to have three referees appointed by the court. However, it is not a matter of objecting but rather a matter of consent, which defendants did not give. Under the clear language of this section, if consent for a lesser number is not given, the court must appoint three referees. Ciotti v. Hoover, 237 M 462, 774 P2d 406, 46 St. Rep. 969 (1989).

Partition by Sale Found to Be Appropriate: Evidence set forth at trial indicated that partition of a ranch would result in restrictions on access and unavailability of water. Further, the record indicated that the plan for proposed division did not include a provision for valuation for different uses of the properties. The District Court directed a partition by sale pursuant to this section, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Palmer v. Palmer, 202 M 182, 657 P2d 92, 40 St. Rep. 21 (1983).

When Partition Is Proper — Open Divorce Decree: An open divorce decree failed to make a final disposition of the family residence which the husband and wife owned as joint tenants. The wife quitclaimed her interest to her children. The wife later died. The children and their father became tenants in common. The father sought the sale and partition of the property. A cotenant is entitled to partition as a matter of right, although it may be denied where it would be against public policy or legal or equitable principles. Here, where all the cotenants were of legal age, it was an abuse of discretion to deny partition. Lawrence v. Harvey, 186 M 314, 607 P2d 551 (1980).

Order for Sale: Where property is so situated that partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners, the court may order a sale thereof. Hurley v. O'Neill, 31 M 595, 79 P 242 (1905).

70-29-204. Partial partition.

Case Notes

Not Error to Apply Statute to Parties That Never Had Actual Joint Ownership: In a partition action, the lower court awarded certain property to DeHaan's corporation and to his wife. DeHaan argued that the lower court erred in applying this section because his corporation and his wife had never been actual joint owners of the property. The Supreme Court held that while DeHaan's argument had technical merit, it would have been highly impracticable for the lower court to have partitioned the property as prescribed by DeHaan's reading of this section. Frank DeHaan, Inc. v. Gallatin-Madison Ranch Co., 250 M 304, 820 P2d 423, 48 St. Rep. 963 (1991).

70-29-205. Partition according to rights of parties — roads.

Case Notes

Authority of District Court to Impose Servitude Forbidding Building as Part of Property Partition — Owelty Applied: Plaintiff requested that the District Court partition some adjoining property, the division of which the parties, as tenants in common, could not agree upon. The court appointed referees to survey the property and recommend how best to divide it. The referees settled on a plan of division, including a recommendation to impose no-build zones on sections of each party's parcel in order to reduce the need for new permanent service roads and to alleviate future discord between the parties. The court adopted the referees' report, including the imposition of the no-build zones. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that under this section, neither the referees nor the court possessed the power to impose a no-build zone. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that under 70-29-209, the District Court has broad powers when a partition cannot be made equally, including application of the practice of owelty, wherein a court may adjudge compensation to be made by one party to another on account of the inequality. Although the compensation is often in the form of a monetary award, the court's equitable powers also include the power to impose servitudes. In this case, the facts were sufficient to support the referees' no-build zone recommendation, and the imposition of the servitude fell within the equitable power of the District Court. The Supreme Court affirmed the partition, including the no-build zones. Kellogg v. Dearborn Information Serv., LLC, 2005 MT 188, 328 M 83, 119 P3d 20 (2005).

Sufficient Evidence of Referees' Use of Quality and Quantity Standard: The plaintiff, DeHaan, in a property partition suit, alleged that the lower court erred in adopting the referees' report on the basis that the referees had applied a "needs and wishes" standard. The Supreme Court held that although there was evidence that the referees may have considered the needs and wishes of the parties, there was sufficient evidence indicating that the referees had applied the "quality and quantity" standard required by this section. Frank DeHaan, Inc. v. Gallatin-Madison Ranch Co., 250 M 304, 820 P2d 423, 48 St. Rep. 963 (1991), overruled, with respect to the holding that a referee's report must be rejected by the court only for reasons that would justify the reversal of a jury's verdict, in Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

Sufficiency of Evidence — Parol Partition: Evidence was sufficient to support judgment of parol partition. Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 94, 560 P2d 1331 (1977).

70-29-207. Allotment of shares of land — improvements.

Case Notes

Statute Applicable When Property Partitioned — Valuation Correctly Included Improvements: Plaintiff appealed from a District Court order allocating a cotenant $24,450 for land and improvements from a public sale of recreational property, claiming that under this section, the land must be valued without regard to improvements. In affirming the District Court decision that included improvements, the Supreme Court ruled that because the statute applies to partitioned property, the District Court, in deciding not to partition, is not bound by the statute's directive to evaluate the land separately from improvements. Troglia v. Bartoletti, 266 M 240, 879 P2d 1169, 51 St. Rep. 783 (1994).

Partition When Cotenant Has Life Estate in Improvements: A partition action was filed by one cotenant of a piece of real property, the wife, after the death of the other, the husband. The decedent had willed a life estate in his one-half interest to his wife and the remainder interest to their children. In allocating the property between the wife and the children, the referee allotted to the wife the land on which the family residence was located. The children appealed the District Court's adoption of the referee's recommendation, claiming that the referee erred by failing to take into account value of the improvements when dividing the land and that it was improper to award the wife that portion of the property containing all of the improvements. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that under 70-29-207, it was proper for the referee to exclude the improvements in appraising the property but to include the improvements in allocating the two parcels between the two parties. Further, the court held that although the children may have a remainder interest in the improvements that were in existence at the time of their father's death, because the improvements were all near the residence, it was not error to award that site to the wife. Lawrence v. Donovan, 207 M 130, 673 P2d 130, 40 St. Rep. 1944 (1983).

Equitable Division of Property and Water Rights — No Compensation or Attorney Fee: The court held that under the clearly established standard of review of a nonjury civil action, the trial court did not err in finding in a partition action that the defendants were entitled to the one-half share in the West Gallatin Canal Company, that the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation for the water right awarded, and that plaintiff was not entitled to attorney fees for bringing the partition action. The court examined the equity of the proceeding in its entirety and concluded that the fact that one party may have received less water than it started with does not make the partition inequitable. The partition of the property and appurtenant water rights was based on substantial credible evidence and resulted in an equitable division among the cotenants. Kravik v. Lewis, 213 M 448, 691 P2d 1373, 41 St. Rep. 2228 (1984).

Case Notes

Partition Hearing Required if Substantiated Claims of Factual or Legal Error Submitted By Party — Parties May Call Referee as Witness: In a partition action concerning real property on Flathead Lake owned by two sisters, the District Court entered a final partition judgment adopting recommendations by the partition referees and one of the parties. The District Court entered the judgment although the other party objected to the referees' final report, requested a hearing on the partition action, filed affidavits attacking conclusions in the referees' report, and asked that she be allowed to depose the referees. The Supreme Court found that because there was no evidentiary hearing and therefore no documents were entered into evidence, it could not discern whether the District Court's judgment was supported by substantial credible evidence. The Supreme Court found that if a party makes a substantiated claim of factual or legal error in the referees' report, due process and equitable concerns require that a court hold a hearing before confirming, changing, or modifying the report pursuant to 70-29-212. The court also held that any party to a partition may call a referee as a witness during the evidentiary hearing. Britton v. Brown, 2013 MT 30, 368 Mont. 379, 300 P.3d 667.

District Court Discretion in Review and Adoption of Referee's Report: Pursuant to this section, a District Court has discretion in reviewing or adopting the report of a referee. The Supreme Court overruled prior holdings that a referee's report is to be rejected by the court only for reasons that would justify the reversal of a jury's verdict, as set out in Ivins v. Hardy, 123 M 513, 217 P2d 204 (1950), Ivins v. Hardy, 134 M 445, 333 P2d 471 (1958), DeHaan v. Gallatin-Madison Ranch, 250 M 304, 820 P2d 423 (1991), and Kellogg v. Dearborn Information Serv., LLC, 2005 MT 188, 328 M 83, 119 P3d 20 (2005). Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

Discrepancy Between Acreage Figures in Referee's Report and Acreage Figures in District Court Decree: When there was a discrepancy between the amount of acreage partitioned by the referee in his report and the amount of acreage awarded by the District Court in its decree confirming partition, the Supreme Court remanded the case for correction of the land descriptions. Lawrence v. Donovan, 207 M 130, 673 P2d 130, 40 St. Rep. 1944 (1983).

Presumption That Referee's Valuation Was Arrived at Fairly and Honestly: A partition action was filed by one cotenant of a piece of real property, the wife, after the death of the other, the husband. The decedent had willed a life estate in his one-half interest to his wife and the remainder interest to their children. The children appealed the District Court's partition decree, claiming, among other things, that the referee had undervalued a certain parcel of the property. The referee had set a value of $7,500 for the parcel. The children contended that because they had received an offer of $24,500 for the parcel, on the condition that a fee simple interest be conveyed, the referee's valuation was erroneous. The Supreme Court upheld the partition decree. The court ruled that the children had not presented evidence sufficient to overcome the presumption that the referee's valuation was arrived at fairly and honestly, because the $24,500 offer was dependent on the transfer of a fee simple title and this was not possible because of the wife's life estate in the property. Lawrence v. Donovan, 207 M 130, 673 P2d 130, 40 St. Rep. 1944 (1983).

Sufficiency of Evidence — Parol Partition: Evidence was sufficient to support judgment of parol partition. Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 94, 560 P2d 1331 (1977).

Appellate Review: In proceedings to partition large ranching property, confirming order of the District Court must stand in the absence of any substantial showing of gross inequality or the use of wrong principles in the referees' report. On appeal, the report of the referees may not be rereferred for lesser reasons. Ivins v. Hardy, 134 M 445, 333 P2d 471 (1958), overruled, both in this case and in Ivins v. Hardy, 134 M 445, 333 P2d 471 (1958), with respect to the holding that a referee's report must be rejected by the court only for reasons that would justify the reversal of a jury's verdict, in Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

Meaning of "Common Benefit": A partition action was filed by one cotenant of a piece of real property, the wife, after the death of the other, the husband. The decedent had willed a life estate in his one-half interest to his wife and the remainder interest to their children. The Supreme Court rejected the children's claim, on appeal, that all costs of partition should be borne by the wife because she alone would benefit from the partition. The court ruled that there was benefit to the children in the establishment of the exact boundaries of the portion of the property which is subject to the remainder interest. Lawrence v. Donovan, 207 M 130, 673 P2d 130, 40 St. Rep. 1944 (1983).

Attorney Fees: The services of plaintiff's attorney in preparing the complaint and conducting the trial should be included in the costs of the action, as they are for the common benefit. Murray v. Conlon, 19 M 389, 48 P 743 (1897).

Chapter Case Notes

Denial of Subdivision — No Taking: Plaintiff claimed that the county's denial of his subdivision constituted a regulatory taking. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment to the county, concluding that the plaintiff could not allege economic loss when he purchased his property fully aware that he could subdivide the land only with county approval. Richards v. Missoula County, 2012 MT 236, 366 Mont. 416, 288 P.3d 175.

Implied Easement by Necessity — Negated by Eminent Domain Power: In the context of federal checkerboard land grants to railroads, the claimant of an implied easement by necessity traced common ownership of the dominant and servient parcels to the federal government, and the necessity for the easement arose when the parcels were severed from the federal government's common ownership, thus satisfying the unity of ownership requirement. However, the easement failed because the United States' power of eminent domain negated the "strict necessity" requirement, and the claimant failed to produce evidence regarding the government's intent to reserve an easement and its inability to condemn an easement. Yellowstone River, LLC v. Meriwether Land Fund I, LLC, 2011 MT 263, 362 Mont. 273, 264 P.3d 1065.

Independent Eminent Domain Proceeding by Joint Airport Board Member — No Due Process Violation: It was not a violation of due process for a member municipality of a joint airport board to pursue independent eminent domain proceedings as long as the procedures in this chapter were complied with. Lake v. Lake County, 233 M 126, 759 P2d 161, 45 St. Rep. 1354 (1988).

Condemnation of Land for Conduct of Water Subject to Eminent Domain Proceedings: An action to condemn land pursuant to 85-2-414 must follow the eminent domain proceedings set out in Title 70, ch. 30. A water appropriator could not contend that his right of eminent domain was taken away when he had not even initiated the proper procedures to pursue the action. Careless Creek Ranch Co. v. Murnion, 230 M 216, 748 P2d 475, 45 St. Rep. 154 (1988).

Statutory Requirements to Be Followed: Madison County attempted to establish a county road across defendants' land. The county invoked eminent domain. Section 70-30-108 requires compliance with the statutory provisions relating to the establishment of county roads. Title 7, ch. 14, generally requires a chain of events involving: (1) the filing of a proper petition with the county; (2) the option of the county surveying a specific route; (3) the county determination of the affected landowners and assessment of their damages; (4) the county offer of an award of damages; and (5) if the award is rejected, the beginning of condemnation proceedings. In this case the county did not receive a proper petition. The county offered damages for one proposed route but began condemnation on a different route for which no offer was made. The proceedings did not comply with the statutes and were not cured by 7-14-2609. The county may not ignore the mandates of the statutes, or they would be of no consequence. Madison County v. Elford, 203 M 293, 661 P2d 1266, 40 St. Rep. 457 (1983).

The reference was intended only to designate that provision of Montana law which largely governs condemnation matters and was not designed to foreclose applicability of the exemption to agreements providing for divisions of land which could have been effected through federal condemnation proceedings. 42 A.G. General and Substantive Provisions

Part Case Notes

No Showing of Irreparable Injury — Mandatory Injunction Inappropriate: The Department of Highways reconstructed the highway across Curran's property, including removing a bridge across Flat Creek and replacing it with twin culverts. During a flood the following spring, the culverts were blocked by ice and debris and the creek overflowed, covering 17 acres of Curran's grazing land, causing erosion, and leaving debris and gravel on the land that rendered the property unusable for its ordinary purposes. Curran's amended complaint waived damages, seeking only a mandatory injunction requiring the Department to replace the stream crossing in a manner that would abate the nuisance. The District Court denied the injunction and dismissed Curran's complaint, finding no act that would produce irreparable injury to justify a mandatory injunction. Relying on Riddock v. Helena, 212 M 390, 687 P2d 1386 (1984), the Supreme Court stated the theory that to allow a landowner injunctive relief would defeat a public entity's power of eminent domain. As a matter of public policy, the better alternative is to ensure compensation to a damaged landowner by requiring the state to purchase any property it takes for a public purpose. Citing Wilhite v. Billings, 39 M 1, 101 P 168 (1909), the court found no basis for an order compelling the Department to reconstruct the stream crossing. If Curran could show that the crossing caused the inundation of his land, he might be entitled to compensation in an inverse condemnation action. However, if his loss could be compensated, it is not an irreparable injury, nor did the voluntary waiver of damages create an irreparable injury. Absent a showing of irreparable injury, Curran was not entitled to a mandatory injunction, the proper remedy being an action for condemnation or damages. Curran v. Dept. of Highways, 258 M 105, 852 P2d 544, 50 St. Rep. 450 (1993). See also Gabriel v. Wood, 261 M 171, 862 P2d 42, 50 St. Rep. 1246 (1993).

Private Deed Restriction Not Bar to Inverse Condemnation: Where property became unsuitable for use as residential property because of city's action in developing a major arterial street, the fact that use was limited by private deed restriction to residential use does not bar an inverse condemnation action. Supreme Court held it was not the restriction that rendered plaintiff's property unusable and unmarketable as residential property but rather the action of the city in developing the street. Knight v. Billings, 197 M 165, 642 P2d 141, 39 St. Rep. 385 (1982).

Restriction of Access by Street Closure Not Compensable: Under 7-14-4114, the abutting lot owners do not suffer compensable damage when a street closure restricts their access to their property as long as some "adequate and reasonable" means of access is preserved. Wynia v. Great Falls, 183 M 458, 600 P2d 802, 36 St. Rep. 1589 (1979).

Moving or Raising Utility Wires — Police Power, Not Eminent Domain: Under 69-4-603, a utility was required to move or raise utility wires so that oversized objects could be moved through public streets. The statute was determined to be an exercise of police power rather than sounding in eminent domain. Therefore, due process requirements of the 14th amendment may be met without compensation. Four factors were cited in the determination that the statute exercised police power: (1) public safety is concerned; (2) a public benefit is conferred; (3) a reasonable and necessary public use is allowed; and (4) the public's right to use the highways is recognized under the statute. Yellowstone Valley Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Ostermiller, 187 M 8, 608 P2d 491 (1980).

Case Notes

Statutory Purpose of Television District Is to Serve Public Interest and Convenience — Public Use With Respect to Condemnation Laws: Adams argued that the District Court had erred in granting the condemnation order requested by the county with respect to his property, which he had purchased with an existing lease on the land covering the transmitters already located on the land. When Adams and the county were unable to negotiate a new lease or sale of the property, even though the county offered to purchase the land for more than the appraised value, the county obtained the condemnation order. The Supreme Court held that the statutes governing television districts established that the districts were to be created to serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity in the construction, maintenance, and operation of television translator stations and therefore the statutory mandate to serve the public interest did constitute public use with respect to eminent domain laws. Park County v. Adams, 2004 MT 295, 323 M 370, 100 P3d 640, (2004).

Eminent Domain — Highway Interchange and Visitor Center Public Use — Chamber of Commerce Building Not: The state attempted to condemn an 8.72-acre parcel to build a highway interchange and visitor center. Forty percent of the proposed building was to be used by the local Chamber of Commerce, a private, nonprofit organization. The District Court held that the highway interchange and visitor center are public purposes and that the state had lawfully exercised its power of eminent domain as to the entire 8.72-acre parcel but that the Chamber of Commerce could not be a part of the planned highway interchange building complex. Property owners appealed on the grounds that by including the Chamber in the plans, the entire taking is unlawful. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in severing the Chamber's participation in the building plan and granting the condemnation order because the Chamber's presence was not a part of the request for condemnation. Bozeman v. Vaniman, 271 M 514, 898 P2d 1208, 52 St. Rep. 543 (1995).

No Recovery if No Actual Taking: When a public improvement is made on property adjoining that of one who claims to be damaged by general factors like change of neighborhood, noise, dust, change of view, increased traffic, pollution, and inconvenience of ingress and egress, there can be no recovery if there has been no actual taking or severance of the claimant's property. Adams v. Dept. of Highways, 230 M 393, 753 P2d 846, 45 St. Rep. 298 (1988). However, see Knight v. Missoula, 252 M 232, 827 P2d 1270, 49 St. Rep. 230 (1992), wherein the District Court erred in its broad reading and application of Adams by summarily dismissing a case involving a dirt road in a residential area. The Supreme Court found that limited circumstances could arise in which problems associated with increased traffic may be compensable, and the court remanded for a finding of whether the increased traffic and resulting problems caused a depreciation in the value of adjoining residential property sufficient to give rise to compensation under the doctrine of inverse condemnation.

Inverse Condemnation, Trespass, and Injunctive Relief — City Water Pipeline: City openly and visibly constructed a water supply line across land owned by plaintiff's predecessor in interest outside the easement granted to the city. The Supreme Court affirmed District Court's decision that plaintiff may not maintain an action for inverse condemnation, trespass, or injunctive relief against the city. The only remedy available to a landowner for such taking is an action for inverse condemnation, and only the landowner at the time of taking is entitled to recover damages for the taking. To allow a landowner injunctive relief would allow the landowner to defeat the city's power of eminent domain. Riddock v. Helena, 212 M 390, 687 P2d 1386, 41 St. Rep. 1817 (1984).

Inverse Condemnation Prior to Sale: When inverse condemnation of land occurs prior to its sale, purchaser is not entitled to claim damages for the condemnation. Howard v. St., 198 M 470, 647 P2d 828, 39 St. Rep. 1111 (1982).

"Taking" — Interference With Right to Use Property: In 1978, developers purchased 183 acres of land for the purpose of subdividing and selling it. They were unaware that for 20 years the National Guard, by permit of the state and the Bureau of Land Management, had conducted training sessions involving dangerous weapons on land surrounding the parcel to be developed. Because they could not sell the land, developers sued the state for inverse condemnation. After a jury found in favor of the state, the trial judge granted developers' motion for a new trial. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that a "taking" occurs not only when there is an interference with the actual use of the property but also when there is an interference with the right to use the property. Thus the taking occurred when the National Guard first began to use the land rather than when the land was developed. Therefore, inverse condemnation had already occurred when the developers bought the land and they were not entitled to damages. Howard v. St., 198 M 470, 647 P2d 828, 39 St. Rep. 1111 (1982).

Inverse Condemnation by City: Where the city of Billings widened and developed a major arterial street adjacent to plaintiff's residentially zoned property, where property on opposite side of street was condemned by city in process of developing the street, and where plaintiff's property was significantly reduced in value because of the city's refusal to rezone plaintiff's property, the city, although exercising its police power properly, nonetheless interfered with plaintiff's private property interests so as to constitute taking by inverse condemnation. Knight v. Billings, 197 M 165, 642 P2d 141, 39 St. Rep. 385 (1982), distinguished in Adams v. Dept. of Highways, 230 M 393, 753 P2d 846, 45 St. Rep. 298 (1988), and in McElwain v. Flathead County, 248 M 231, 811 P2d 1267, 48 St. Rep. 410 (1991). See also Wohl v. Missoula, 2013 MT 46, 369 Mont. 108, 300 P.3d 1119.

Requisite Necessity to Condemn Road: Plaintiff could not prevail in his condemnation action for a private road across defendant's tract to plaintiff's property because the evidence did not show that the land is presently being used as a farm or residence, and without such a showing the requisite necessity to condemn a road across another's land is absent. Groundwater v. Wright, 180 M 27, 588 P2d 1003 (1979), followed in Myers v. Dee, 2011 MT 244, 362 Mont. 178, 261 P.3d 1054.

Strict Compliance Required:

The jurisdiction of courts over eminent domain proceedings is wholly statutory, the Due Process of Law Clause, in addition to its requirement of public use and just compensation, protecting the landowner from the adoption of any form of procedure which deprives him of a reasonable opportunity to be heard. The provisions of the law granting the right of eminent domain must be complied with. Housing Authority v. Bjork, 109 M 552, 98 P2d 324 (1940).

The right to take private property from its owner against his will can be invoked only pursuant to law. Authority for the exercise of such right must be clearly expressed in the law before it will be allowed, and when the right is sought to be exercised, the provisions of the law must be rigorously complied with. St. v. Aitchison, 96 M 335, 30 P2d 805 (1934); State ex rel. McMaster v. District Court, 80 M 228, 260 P 134 (1927).

Special Proceedings: Condemnation proceedings are special proceedings provided for by the statute. State ex rel. Davis v. District Court, 29 M 153, 74 P 200 (1903).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 286 in (16) near beginning after "purposes" substituted "pursuant to 7-11-1021" for "as provided in 7-35-2201". Amendment effective July 1, 2009.

Saving Clause: Section 42, Ch. 286, L. 2009, was a saving clause.

Transition: Section 43, Ch. 286, L. 2009, provided: "(1) Subject to subsection (2), a special district in existence on [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 2009] must comply with the provisions of [sections 1 through 20] [Title 7, ch. 11, part 10] upon alteration of its boundaries or a change in its amount or method of assessment. If dissolution is proposed for a special district in existence on [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 2009], the proposal is subject to the provisions of [section 20] [7-11-1029].

(2) A special district in existence on [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 2009] is required to comply with the provisions of [section 10] [7-11-1014] only upon alteration of its boundaries."

2007 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 193 in (37) at end inserted exception clause. Amendment effective April 11, 2007.

Chapter 512 in (7) after "facilities" substituted "and other publicly owned buildings and facilities" for "and all other public uses"; in (12) after "parts 42 and 43" inserted exception clause restricting urban renewal projects; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

2005 Amendment: Chapter 300 in (11) near beginning after "airport" deleted "and landing field" and near end substituted reference to 67-7-210 for reference to 67-5-202 and 67-6-301. Amendment effective April 19, 2005.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 451 in (16) inserted "state veterans' cemetery purposes as provided in 10-2-604"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 21, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 125 inserted (6) relating to local water supply systems; in (7) inserted "controlled-access facilities"; inserted (8) through (29) enumerating specific public uses; at end of (31) deleted "public transportation"; in (33) after "tunnels" deleted "ditches, flumes, pipes"; in (37) substituted "electrical energy" for "electric light"; deleted former (11) that read:

"(11) electric power lines"; in (44) near beginning substituted "condemnor" for "plaintiff"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Interim Study Bill — Eminent Domain: Chapter 125, L. 2001, was enacted as a result of an interim study. See Eminent Domain in Montana, published by the Legislative Environmental Policy Office, May 2001.

Case Notes

Compressor Station — Public Use: A compressor station used to transport natural gas qualifies as a public use under this section. McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253.

Definition of "Residence" in Eminent Domain Proceeding — Existence of Residence a Question for Jury: Pursuant to 70-30-102(36), the plaintiff sought to exercise the right of eminent domain to create a private road leading to his property, which contains a historic, uninhabited cabin. The plaintiff argued the uninhabited cabin constituted a "residence" under 70-30-102(36). The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants, concluding 70-30-102(36) requires that the residence be presently in use. Applying Groundwater v. Wright, 180 Mont. 27, 588 P.2d 1003 (1979), and Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 Mont. 379, 962 P.2d 583, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the term "residence" requires ongoing use or physical activity and refers to a habitable structure or dwelling place — a place where people are living. Although the existence of a residence and the necessity of a road to access a residence are generally questions for a jury under 70-30-107, summary judgment was proper because the parties did not dispute that the historic cabin was uninhabitable and, therefore, did not constitute a residence under 70-30-102(36). Myers v. Dee, 2011 MT 244, 362 Mont. 178, 261 P.3d 1054.

Public Utility — Authority for Condemnation: In a condemnation proceeding, the District Court dismissed a public utility's complaint for condemnation on the basis that the utility did not possess the power of eminent domain and had no authority to take private property. The Supreme Court reversed on the basis that the District Court's order conflicted with HB 198 (Ch. 321, L. 2011), which clarified a public utility's eminent domain power, codified that authority into the Major Facility Siting Act, and applied retroactively to the issues in the case. MATL, LLP v. Salois, 2011 MT 126, 360 Mont. 510, 255 P.3d 158.

Oil Well Not Considered Mine to Which Right-of-Way May Be Obtained Through Eminent Domain — No Condemnation Power of Private Individuals and Corporation Except Through Legislative Grant — Condemnation Statutes Strictly Construed: Plaintiff filed a federal action seeking to condemn an access easement and right-of-way across defendant's ranch land for access to drill and operate oil wells. The federal District Court certified two questions to the Montana Supreme Court regarding whether: (1) exploration and development of a federal oil and gas lease are considered a mine that constitutes a public use under this section; and (2) 82-2-201 grants the owner of a federal oil and gas lease the power, as the owner of a "mining claim", to condemn a right-of-way across land of another for access to explore and develop the lease. The Supreme Court answered both questions in the negative. Private individuals and corporations, like state agencies, have no inherent power of eminent domain, so their authority to condemn derives only from a legislative grant. Public uses for which the power of eminent domain are granted must be interpreted pursuant to the plain language set forth by the Legislature and may not be implied. Because eminent domain interferes with the fundamental constitutional right to the private ownership of real property, any statute that allows condemnation of private property must be strictly construed, giving the statute its plain interpretation but favoring the person's fundamental rights. Under the plain meaning of this section, oil wells are not considered mines to which rights-of-way for roads may be obtained through eminent domain proceedings. Further, exploration and development of a federal oil and gas lease are not a mine that constitutes a public use, so the owner of an oil and gas lease has no power under 82-2-201 to condemn a right-of-way. McCabe Petroleum Corp. v. N Bar Ranch, LLC, 2004 MT 73, 320 M 384, 87 P3d 995 (2004), following St. v. Aitchison, 96 M 335, 30 P2d 805 (1934), and Bozeman v. Vaniman, 264 M 76, 869 P2d 790 (1994), and distinguishing Mid-Northern Oil Co. v. Walker, 65 M 414, 211 P 353 (1922), Rice Oil Co. v. Toole County, 86 M 427, 284 P 145 (1930), and Mont. Talc Co. v. Cyprus Mines Corp., 229 M 491, 748 P2d 444 (1987).

Definition of Farm for Purposes of Eminent Domain — Use of Otherwise Inapplicable Definition — Use of Ordinary Meaning of Undefined Term: The Richters brought an action in District Court to condemn an easement across the land of a neighbor that surrounded their property on three sides. The District Court held that the definition of farm in 72-16-331(7) (now repealed) applied to the use of that term in subsection (6) of this section, reasoning that because the term "farm" was undefined in this chapter, the definition in 72-16-331(7) (now repealed) should be applied because 1-2-107 provides that a definition contained in one section of law should be used for the purposes of other sections of law unless "a contrary intention plainly appears". The District Court then entered a preliminary condemnation order in favor of the Richters. The Supreme Court held that a contrary intention did in fact appear because the Legislature had, by use of the phrase "as used in 72-16-331 through 72-16-349" (all now repealed), limited the application of the terms defined in 72-16-331 (now repealed) to only 72-16-331 through 72-16-349 (all now repealed). Because farm was then left undefined for the purposes of this chapter, the Supreme Court applied the definition found in the American Heritage Dictionary and held that the Richters' property did not qualify as a farm, as defined in that dictionary, because the Richters had not prepared, fertilized, or tilled the soil on their property nor had they cited any authority for the Supreme Court to hold that naturally occurring timber on the property was a crop. The Supreme Court therefore reversed the condemnation order of the District Court. Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 M 379, 962 P2d 583, 55 St. Rep. 663 (1998), followed in Myers v. Dee, 2011 MT 244, 362 Mont. 178, 261 P.3d 1054.

Easement Necessary for Electric Power Lines — Condemnation Proper: Burlington Northern (BN) offered Montana Power Company (MPC) a wire line permit across BN property that would have allowed location, construction, operation, maintenance, replacement, and removal of a $2.2 million power transmission line. MPC rejected the offer because of the lack of permanence and allowance for rent escalation and because the permit was revocable without cause 100 days after notice and contained onerous indemnification and relocation provisions. Instead, MPC sought an easement without restrictions and condemnation, producing uncontroverted testimony about the area's need for the transmission facility as well as the practicality of locating the lines on BN's right-of-way. BN produced no evidence to contradict the choice of location or the public's need for the proposed line. The District Court properly held that an easement was necessary for the intended use, as compared to a wire line permit, and that the property was subject to condemnation. Mont. Power Co. v. Burlington N. RR Co., 272 M 224, 900 P2d 888, 52 St. Rep. 625 (1995).

Open-Pit Excavation Necessary for Backslope as Authorized Public Use — Landowner Notification Act Ineffectual to Prevent Condemnation: An open-pit excavation necessary to backslope the mining of an ore body is an authorized public use for which condemnation may be had. The Landowner Notification Act appears to preclude this kind of condemnation because under 82-2-303, an open-pit mine operator must obtain from the surface owner of private lands specific written approval of proposed work before commencing operations. However, the Supreme Court noted that the Act was aimed at the protection of private persons, while eminent domain law, constitutionally grounded and deriving from the power of sovereignty, was enacted to protect the public good. The court found it inconceivable that the Legislature intended provisions enacted for the benefit of private persons to overcome and supersede provisions preserving the public good. Therefore, the Landowner Notification Act was found not to adversely affect the right to use eminent domain against a nonconsenting landowner. Mont. Talc Co. v. Cyprus Mines Corp., 229 M 491, 748 P2d 444, 44 St. Rep. 2161 (1987), followed in Bozeman v. Vaniman, 264 M 76, 869 P2d 790, 51 St. Rep. 154 (1994). See also McCabe Petroleum Corp. v. N Bar Ranch, LLC, 2004 MT 73, 320 M 384, 87 P3d 995 (2004), wherein the Supreme Court held that eminent domain condemnation provisions applicable to open-pit mines in Mont. Talc Co. did not apply to oil and gas leases and wells.

Constitutionality — Equal Protection — Copper Mining Versus Strip Mining of Coal: Plaintiff contended that 70-30-102 was an unconstitutional violation of the Equal Protection Clause in that it allows the mining of copper to be a public use and disallows the strip mining of coal as a public use. It is well established that the Equal Protection Clause is very limited in cases involving eminent domain statutes. This is especially so when the statute merely declares the legislative determination as to what is considered to be a public use. All that is required is that there be a reasonable basis for the distinction. The basis for the Legislature's distinction is set forth in 70-30-106, which the court found to be an adequate reasonable basis. Schara v. The Anaconda Co., 187 M 377, 610 P2d 132 (1980).

Mining Permit Not Required Prior to Condemnation: Plaintiff contends that since 70-30-111 requires the use for condemned property to be "authorized by law" before condemnation is allowed, the obtaining of a valid mining permit is a condition precedent to condemnation. Section 70-30-102 declares mining to be a public use. It is unquestioned that the Anaconda Company is engaged in mining operations. To find that a mining permit must be obtained prior to condemnation would be inconsistent with statutory authority and contrary to the public policy of providing expediency in eminent domain proceedings. Schara v. The Anaconda Co., 187 M 377, 610 P2d 132 (1980).

Condemnation: Plaintiff could not prevail in his condemnation action for a private road across defendant's tract to plaintiff's property because the evidence did not show that the land is presently being used as a farm or residence, and without such a showing the requisite necessity to condemn a road across another's land is absent. Groundwater v. Wright, 180 M 27, 588 P2d 1003 (1979), followed in Myers v. Dee, 2011 MT 244, 362 Mont. 178, 261 P.3d 1054.

Electric Power: Legislature has specifically declared that an electric power line is public use for which private property may be taken by eminent domain proceedings under this section, and public use is not confined to actual use by public but is measured in terms of right of public to use proposed facilities for which condemnation is sought. Mont. Power Co. v. Bokma, 153 M 390, 457 P2d 769 (1969).

Mining Use:

The aid of eminent domain granted by this section to operators of mining property is extended to the industry of mining, not to the individual, and necessity must be shown to obtain exclusive control, and that contemplated use is more important public use than that for which the owner could lawfully use it. State ex rel. Butte-Los Angeles Min. Co. v. District Court, 103 M 30, 60 P2d 380 (1936).

Subsection (5) of this section was designed to favor the mining industry of the state. Kipp v. Davis-Daly Copper Co., 41 M 509, 110 P 237 (1910).

Legislation for Private Use: The taking of private property for the private use of another violates the 14th amendment to the federal Constitution, and the Legislature has not the power to declare that that which is in truth a private use shall be a public one, the question whether a particular use is a private or public one being determinable by the courts. Komposh v. Powers, 75 M 493, 244 P 298 (1926).

Express Business: A domestic corporation engaged in the express business is not authorized to invoke the power of eminent domain to any greater extent than a private individual, and the power is not open to the one for any purpose for which it is not open to the other. Wells Fargo & Co. v. Harrington, 54 M 235, 169 P 463 (1917).

Electric Power:

A power plant is one of the public uses for which land may be condemned; and the complaint, in a proceeding for that purpose, need not allege a promise of accomplishment in respect to the use or that there was a present or prospective demand for its products but only that the plaintiff is one of the agencies chosen by the state to exercise the power of eminent domain and that the use for which the property is to be taken is one of the public uses enumerated in the statute. Interstate Power Co. v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 52 M 509, 159 P 408 (1916).

The taking of land for the purpose of flooding it, rendered necessary by the construction of a dam for generating electric power to be sold to industrial enterprises and to the public generally, the power also to be utilized for pumping water upon arid lands, is for such public use as will support the right to acquire the land by condemnation. Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, 35 M 108, 88 P 773 (1907).

Necessity of Use Required: Complainant must allege the necessity of the use for which the condemnation is sought. Helena v. Harvey, 6 M 114, 9 P 903 (1886).

Case Notes

Court Determination of Terms of Compatible Use to Be Included in Final Order of Condemnation: Although eminent domain statutes do not require protective conditions in an easement, courts do have the power under 70-30-206 to set forth protective provisions in an order for condemnation. In this case, the court found the use of property to be compatible for use both for a railroad and for electric power lines. Thus, failure by the court to include any requested protective provisions in its order of possession did not constitute reversible error, but the Supreme Court nevertheless remanded to the trial court for a hearing to determine what protective provisions requested by either party, if any, should be included in its final order of condemnation. Mont. Power Co. v. Burlington N. RR Co., 272 M 224, 900 P2d 888, 52 St. Rep. 625 (1995), following St. Highway Comm'n v. Lavoie, 155 M 39, 466 P2d 594 (1970).

Easement Necessary for Electric Power Lines — Condemnation Proper: Burlington Northern (BN) offered Montana Power Company (MPC) a wire line permit across BN property that would have allowed location, construction, operation, maintenance, replacement, and removal of a $2.2 million power transmission line. MPC rejected the offer because of the lack of permanence and allowance for rent escalation and because the permit was revocable without cause 100 days after notice and contained onerous indemnification and relocation provisions. Instead, MPC sought an easement without restrictions and condemnation, producing uncontroverted testimony about the area's need for the transmission facility as well as the practicality of locating the lines on BN's right-of-way. BN produced no evidence to contradict the choice of location or the public's need for the proposed line. The District Court properly held that an easement was necessary for the intended use, as compared to a wire line permit, and that the property was subject to condemnation. Mont. Power Co. v. Burlington N. RR Co., 272 M 224, 900 P2d 888, 52 St. Rep. 625 (1995).

Public Recreational Use of Dearborn River — No Inverse Condemnation: Landowner along Dearborn River was sued by parties seeking a determination of the public's right to use the river for recreational uses. Landowner counterclaimed for inverse condemnation, basing the counterclaim on his claim to ownership of the riverbed. The Supreme Court held that the question of title to the bed was irrelevant to determining navigability for use by the public; that landowner had no claim to the waters; that since there was no claim to the waters, nothing was taken and thus there was no ground for an inverse condemnation claim; and that, consequently, the District Court did not err in dismissing the counterclaim. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Owner of Undivided Part Interest Entitled to Full Amount of Homestead Exemption: Where the plaintiff owned an undivided one-half interest in property upon which the defendant bank sought to levy for the satisfaction of a deficiency judgment, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to apply the full amount of the $40,000 homestead exemption on her equity in her undivided half interest in her homestead property. The court agreed with the rationale of Strangman v. Duke, 140 Cal. App. 2d 185, 295 P2d 12 (1956), that as there was no provision in state law for apportionment of the exemption, a joint tenant with an undivided interest is to receive the benefit of the entire exemption. The court also relied upon its previous decision that homesteads could be claimed on undivided interests in land, that tenants in common are entitled to the full homestead exemption, and that the homestead exemption is to be liberally construed. Neel v. First Fed. S&L Ass'n, 207 M 376, 675 P2d 96, 41 St. Rep. 18 (1984).

Effect of Restrictive Covenant on Condemnation Proceedings: The restrictive covenant on the land in question is at most a part of the fee or something less than a fee. Therefore, it is the proper subject of a condemnation proceeding. Once it is determined that the property sought is a proper subject of condemnation, the trial court must find that the taking is necessary to the public interest and consistent with the greatest public good and the least private injury. A restrictive covenant action is therefore moot when a preliminary condemnation action involving the same property is pending. If the condemnor is not entitled to a preliminary condemnation award, the covenantee may proceed with a suit on the restrictive covenant. Schara v. The Anaconda Co., 187 M 377, 610 P2d 132 (1980).

Removal of Personalty: When the State condemns realty it is required to pay for removal of any personalty from the condemned realty and also to pay for any damages to the personalty. Dept. of Highways v. Schumacher, 180 M 329, 590 P2d 1110 (1979).

More Necessary Public Use:

Public property held by city and taken by state for more necessary public use should be taken and compensated as if it had been taken from a private owner. Three Forks v. St. Highway Comm'n, 156 M 392, 480 P2d 826 (1971).

Requirement under 70-30-101 that taking of private property by condemnation proceedings must be compatible with greatest public good and least private injury applies specifically to easements and rights-of-way under this section. Mont. Power Co. v. Bokma, 153 M 390, 457 P2d 769 (1969).

The provision prohibiting the taking of property except for a more necessary public use does not apply in an action to condemn a right-of-way through an irrigation ditch for the purpose of conveying water to irrigate plaintiff's adjoining land, where the joint use will not interfere with use by the owner after enlargement by plaintiff; the Legislature in requiring "a more necessary public use" evidently meant a use that would destroy the prior one, dispossess the owner, and deprive him of its use altogether. Mere inconvenience or compensable damage is not sufficient to deny the relief. Cocanougher v. Zeigler, 112 M 76, 112 P2d 1058 (1941). See also Mont. Talc Co. v. Cyprus Mines Corp., 229 M 491, 748 P2d 444, 44 St. Rep. 2161 (1987).

Under subsection (1)(c) it is necessary to show that plaintiff's use for which it asks that defendant's portion of a tunnel be condemned is a more necessary public use than that for which it is employed by the defendant. State ex rel. Butte-Los Angeles Min. Co. v. District Court, 103 M 30, 60 P2d 380 (1936).

Judicial Review: In condemnation proceeding involving access to portion of farm divided by interstate highway, District Court had power to require state to incorporate in its construction plans such structures as would allow two-lane access across county road where access road benefited general public as well as private property owner; but District Court did not have power to require state to submit such plans to court for its approval since such matters were within purview of activities of Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission). State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Lavoie, 155 M 39, 466 P2d 594 (1970), explained in St. v. Parini, 159 M 248, 496 P2d 1140 (1972).

Discretionary Actions: Action brought to compel Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) to construct two interchanges on new interstate highway near town, instead of one interchange as planned, was improperly brought under this section since this section pertains to eminent domain proceedings and issues presented by action were matters of administrative law under 60-2-201. Erie v. St., 154 M 150, 461 P2d 207 (1969), distinguished in State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Lavoie, 155 M 39, 466 P2d 594 (1970).

Underpass: Where 40.89 acres of ranchland were taken by the Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) as a right-of-way for an interstate highway, consisting of four lanes in width and fully controlled access, which split the remaining land into two divisions, leaving 432.69 acres, on which farm headquarters was located, on the north side of the highway and 393.42 acres on the south side of the highway, trial court in its preliminary order of condemnation properly ordered the Commission to construct and maintain at its own expense an underpass leading from one side of the highway to the other. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Wheeler, 148 M 246, 419 P2d 492 (1966).

Relocation of Highway: Under section 32-1615, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), the Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) is the only tribunal authorized to condemn land for relocating highways, and even assuming that the taking of an existing highway is justified as a more necessary public use where the purpose is to build a dam and a reservoir, yet the public utility building the dam cannot acquire land for relocating the highway since that function is exclusively within the power of the Commission. State ex rel. Bartholomew v. District Court, 126 M 183, 248 P2d 215 (1952).

Cemetery Land:

Land owned by a cemetery association organized for profit is private property, which under this section may be taken by eminent domain for public cemetery purposes. Forestvale Cemetery Ass'n v. Helena Cemetery Ass'n, 62 M 52, 203 P 359 (1921).

Under the rule that a public corporation may by condemnation take property of an individual or a private corporation used for the same public purpose as that for which it is sought to be condemned, unsold lots of a cemetery association whose corporate existence had expired and 99% of whose stock was held by one individual could properly be acquired by eminent domain by a corporation for public cemetery purposes. Forestvale Cemetery Ass'n v. Helena Cemetery Ass'n, 62 M 52, 203 P 359 (1921).

State Lands:

Lands belonging to the state, except as otherwise indicated in subsection (1)(b) of this section, may be taken by the exercise of the power of eminent domain, and the State may properly be made a party to the action; in other words, the State has expressly consented to be sued under such circumstances. State ex rel. Galen v. District Court, 42 M 105, 112 P 706 (1910).

Lands granted to the state for common school purposes cannot be taken under condemnation proceedings. Congress commanded that sections 16 and 36 in each township should be sold at public sale, and the framers of the state Constitution expressly agreed, for the state, not to dispose of them, except in the manner prescribed, without the consent of the United States. State ex rel. Galen v. District Court, 42 M 105, 112 P 706 (1910).

Water Rights: A beneficial use of the water flowing in the streams of the state is a public use; but it may be appropriated to a more necessary public use, and it is not necessary that the new public use should, in all cases, be a different public use. It does not follow, however, that a city can acquire the exclusive right to the use of the water in a particular stream; it must first be shown that the use for which it is sought is a more necessary use, and the city must then be able financially to make compensation to the person or persons entitled to the present use. Carlson v. Helena, 39 M 82, 102 P 39 (1909).

Case Notes

Oil Well Not Considered Mine to Which Right-of-Way May Be Obtained Through Eminent Domain — No Condemnation Power of Private Individuals and Corporation Except Through Legislative Grant — Condemnation Statutes Strictly Construed: Plaintiff filed a federal action seeking to condemn an access easement and right-of-way across defendant's ranch land for access to drill and operate oil wells. The federal District Court certified two questions to the Montana Supreme Court regarding whether: (1) exploration and development of a federal oil and gas lease are considered a mine that constitutes a public use under 70-30-102; and (2) 82-2-201 grants the owner of a federal oil and gas lease the power, as the owner of a "mining claim", to condemn a right-of-way across land of another for access to explore and develop the lease. The Supreme Court answered both questions in the negative. Private individuals and corporations, like state agencies, have no inherent power of eminent domain, so their authority to condemn derives only from a legislative grant. Public uses for which the power of eminent domain are granted must be interpreted pursuant to the plain language set forth by the Legislature and may not be implied. Because eminent domain interferes with the fundamental constitutional right to the private ownership of real property, any statute that allows condemnation of private property must be strictly construed, giving the statute its plain interpretation but favoring the person's fundamental rights. Under the plain meaning of 70-30-102, oil wells are not considered mines to which rights-of-way for roads may be obtained through eminent domain proceedings. Further, exploration and development of a federal oil and gas lease are not a mine that constitutes a public use, so the owner of an oil and gas lease has no power under 82-2-201 to condemn a right-of-way. McCabe Petroleum Corp. v. N Bar Ranch, LLC, 2004 MT 73, 320 M 384, 87 P3d 995 (2004), following St. v. Aitchison, 96 M 335, 30 P2d 805 (1934), and Bozeman v. Cyprus Mines Corp., 229 M 491, 748 P2d 444 (1987).

Easement Necessary for Electric Power Lines — Condemnation Proper: Burlington Northern (BN) offered Montana Power Company (MPC) a wire line permit across BN property that would have allowed location, construction, operation, maintenance, replacement, and removal of a $2.2 million power transmission line. MPC rejected the offer because of the lack of permanence and allowance for rent escalation and because the permit was revocable without cause 100 days after notice and contained onerous indemnification and relocation provisions. Instead, MPC sought an easement without restrictions and condemnation, producing uncontroverted testimony about the area's need for the transmission facility as well as the practicality of locating the lines on BN's right-of-way. BN produced no evidence to contradict the choice of location or the public's need for the proposed line. The District Court properly held that an easement was necessary for the intended use, as compared to a wire line permit, and that the property was subject to condemnation. Mont. Power Co. v. Burlington N. RR Co., 272 M 224, 900 P2d 888, 52 St. Rep. 625 (1995).

Open-Pit Excavation Necessary for Backslope as Authorized Public Use — Landowner Notification Act Ineffectual to Prevent Condemnation: An open-pit excavation necessary to backslope the mining of an ore body is an authorized public use for which condemnation may be had. The Landowner Notification Act appears to preclude this kind of condemnation because under 82-2-303, an open-pit mine operator must obtain from the surface owner of private lands specific written approval of proposed work before commencing operations. However, the Supreme Court noted that the Act was aimed at the protection of private persons, while eminent domain law, constitutionally grounded and deriving from the power of sovereignty, was enacted to protect the public good. The court found it inconceivable that the Legislature intended provisions enacted for the benefit of private persons to overcome and supersede provisions preserving the public good. Therefore, the Landowner Notification Act was found not to adversely affect the right to use eminent domain against a nonconsenting landowner. Mont. Talc Co. v. Cyprus Mines Corp., 229 M 491, 748 P2d 444, 44 St. Rep. 2161 (1987). See also McCabe Petroleum Corp. v. N Bar Ranch, LLC, 2004 MT 73, 320 M 384, 87 P3d 995 (2004), wherein the Supreme Court held that eminent domain condemnation provisions applicable to open-pit mines in Mont. Talc Co. did not apply to oil and gas leases and wells.

Public Recreational Use of Dearborn River — No Inverse Condemnation: Landowner along Dearborn River was sued by parties seeking a determination of the public's right to use the river for recreational uses. Landowner counterclaimed for inverse condemnation, basing the counterclaim on his claim to ownership of the riverbed. The Supreme Court held that the question of title to the bed was irrelevant to determining navigability for use by the public; that landowner had no claim to the waters; that since there was no claim to the waters, nothing was taken and thus there was no ground for an inverse condemnation claim; and that, consequently, the District Court did not err in dismissing the counterclaim. "Taking" — Interference With Right to Use Property: In 1978, developers purchased 183 acres of land for the purpose of subdividing and selling it. They were unaware that for 20 years the National Guard, by permit of the state and the Bureau of Land Management, had conducted training sessions involving dangerous weapons on land surrounding the parcel to be developed. Because they could not sell the land, developers sued the state for inverse condemnation. After a jury found in favor of the state, the trial judge granted developers' motion for a new trial. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that a "taking" occurs not only when there is an interference with the actual use of the property but also when there is an interference with the right to use the property. Thus, the taking occurred when the National Guard first began to use the land rather than when the land was developed. Therefore, inverse condemnation had already occurred when the developers bought the land and they were not entitled to damages. Howard v. St., 197 M 470, 647 P2d 828, 39 St. Rep. 1111 (1982).

Effect of Restrictive Covenant on Condemnation Proceedings: The restrictive covenant on the land in question is at most a part of the fee or something less than a fee. Compensation for Leasehold Interest: The owner of a leasehold interest in land being acquired by the state for public purposes is entitled to just compensation for the property condemned. Dept. of Highways v. Schumacher, 180 M 329, 590 P2d 1110 (1979).

Figuring Market Value of Leasehold: The market value of a lease determines the compensation due a lessee. In figuring market value, the factors to be considered include length of the lease, rent to be paid, type of business operated on the property and expenses associated with it, advantages or disadvantages of the operation of the business in that location, and revenue produced from the property. Dept. of Highways v. Schumacher, 180 M 329, 590 P2d 1110 (1979).

Constitutionality — Equal Protection — Copper Mining Versus Strip Mining of Coal: Plaintiff contended that 70-30-102 was an unconstitutional violation of the Equal Protection Clause in that it allows the mining of copper to be a public use and disallows the strip mining of coal as a public use. It is well established that the Equal Protection Clause is very limited in cases involving eminent domain statutes. This is especially so when the statute merely declares the legislative determination as to what is considered to be a public use. All that is required is that there be a reasonable basis for the distinction. The basis for the Legislature's distinction is set forth in 70-30-106, which the court found to be an adequate reasonable basis. Schara v. The Anaconda Co., 187 M 377, 610 P2d 132 (1980).

Case Notes

Definition of "Residence" in Eminent Domain Proceeding — Existence of Residence a Question for Jury: Pursuant to 70-30-102(36), the plaintiff sought to exercise the right of eminent domain to create a private road leading to his property, which contains a historic, uninhabited cabin. The plaintiff argued the uninhabited cabin constituted a "residence" under 70-30-102(36). The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants, concluding 70-30-102(36) requires that the residence be presently in use. Applying Groundwater v. Wright, 180 Mont. 27, 588 P.2d 1003 (1979), and Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 Mont. 379, 962 P.2d 583, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the term "residence" requires ongoing use or physical activity and refers to a habitable structure or dwelling place — a place where people are living. Although the existence of a residence and the necessity of a road to access a residence are generally questions for a jury under 70-30-107, summary judgment was proper because the parties did not dispute that the historic cabin was uninhabitable and, therefore, did not constitute a residence under 70-30-102(36). Myers v. Dee, 2011 MT 244, 362 Mont. 178, 261 P.3d 1054.

Elements of Implied Easement by Necessity Established — Easement Properly Granted — Interference Claim Properly Dismissed: Plaintiffs sought an easement by necessity across defendants' property. The District Court held that an easement by necessity existed and defined the scope of the easement, and both parties appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. There was sufficient clear and convincing evidence of both unity of ownership and strict necessity to establish an easement by necessity. Additionally, nothing in the history or condition of the property at the time of severance supported a finding that the extent of the implied easement by necessity across the servient estate should be unlimited, so plaintiffs were entitled to cross defendants' land to reach a public road. However, plaintiffs' claim that defendants interfered with the easement failed. The essential acts that gave rise to the easement by necessity arose in the 1930s, but plaintiffs' right to the easement was not established until 2007, so defendants could not have wrongfully interfered with the easement. Ashby v. Maechling, 2010 MT 80, 356 Mont. 68, 229 P.3d 1210. See also Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 Mont. 56, 968 P.2d 1135, Watson v. Dundas, 2006 MT 104, 332 Mont. 164, 136 P.3d 973, and Wolf v. Owens, 2007 MT 302, 340 Mont. 74, 172 P.3d 124.

Informal Apparent Easement — Reasonable Necessity: For a use to give rise to an implied easement from existing use, it must be apparent and continuous at the time that the tract is divided. An easement is apparent when it may be discovered upon reasonable inspection. An apparent easement need not be so formal as to be an improved, paved, or even graveled two-way road but may be as simple as a path, roadway of sorts, trail, or primitive road. In addition to the requirement that the use be apparent and continuous at the time that the tract is divided, an implied easement from existing use must also have a use that is reasonably necessary for the enjoyment of the dominant parcel. An implied easement from existing use passes to all future owners of the property pursuant to 70-20-308. In the present case, the District Court properly held that an easement from existing use, not an implied easement by necessity, existed in favor of the Hoyem Trust over and across Galts' property. The easement by necessity requirement of "strict necessity" did not exist at the time that the property was severed in 1944 because a road existed that provided practical access to a public road for ingress and egress. The presence of an implied easement from existing use necessarily defeats the strict necessity requirement of an easement by necessity. Albert G. Hoyem Trust v. Galt, 1998 MT 300, 292 M 56, 968 P2d 1135, 55 St. Rep. 1230 (1998), following Michaelson v. Wardell, 186 M 278, 607 P2d 100 (1980), and followed in Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St. Rep. 125 (2000), and Wolf v. Owens, 2007 MT 302, 340 M 74, 172 P3d 124 (2007). See also Waters v. Blagg, 2008 MT 451, 348 M 48, 202 P3d 110 (2008), wherein the Supreme Court clarified that a connection to a public road is not required when a landowner seeks declaration of an implied easement by preexisting use, overruled in part in Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154,

Attorney and Witness Fees: "Expenses of the proceeding" include attorney fees and witness fees. Callant v. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane, 181 M 400, 593 P2d 1036 (1979).

Condemnation: Plaintiff could not prevail in his condemnation action for a private road across defendant's tract to plaintiff's property because the evidence did not show that the land is presently being used as a farm or residence, and without such a showing the requisite necessity to condemn a road across another's land is absent. Groundwater v. Wright, 180 M 27, 588 P2d 1003 (1979), followed in Myers v. Dee, 2011 MT 244, 362 Mont. 178, 261 P.3d 1054.

Implied Reserved Easement of Necessity: Where all witnesses agreed that there was no visible sign of a roadway or path over defendant's property at the time when plaintiff bought the adjoining property, there could have been no implied reserved easement for the roadway. Godfrey v. Pilon, 165 M 439, 529 P2d 1372 (1974).

Necessity of Easement: The necessity of an easement to landlocked parcel of real property must appear at the time of the conveyance of the property, and where grantor conveyed a tract of land to plaintiff but retained other land over which plaintiff could have made entry, there was no necessity for easement over land of a third party. Godfrey v. Pilon, 165 M 439, 529 P2d 1372 (1974).

Implied Right-of-Way: There are no implied grants or reservations of rights-of-way of necessity in Montana. Property for roads must be condemned. Simonson v. McDonald, 131 M 494, 311 P2d 982 (1957), overruling Herrin v. Sieben, 46 M 226, 127 P 323 (1912); Violet v. Martin, 62 M 335, 205 P 221 (1922).

Expenses of Proceedings:

Attorney's fees are not allowed as an expense of a proceeding in condemnation for a private road of necessity under this section or section 32-1401, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). Section 70-30-201 adopts 25-10-201 and 25-10-301 to the proceedings. Under 25-10-301 attorney's fees in condemnation proceedings are not enumerated, nor are they allowed under 25-10-201 as a cost or disbursement unless specifically authorized by law or according to the course and custom of the court. In Montana it is not customary to include attorney's fees as a cost; and in this section the term "expenses" is synonymous with the term "costs". Tomten v. Thomas, 125 M 159, 232 P2d 723, 26 ALR 2d 1285 (1951).

The provisions in this section for an award of expenses of the proceedings to defendant apply only where the plaintiff is successful. Kendrick v. Powell, 119 M 622, 178 P2d 859 (1947).

Constitutionality: Whether a way is a public or private one is determined by the extent of the right to use it, not by the extent to which that right is actually exercised; and if a private road sought to be established under this section, leading from a public highway through lands of a private owner to those owned by plaintiff, may be used by the public generally, although others than plaintiff may have only slight occasion to use it, the statute authorizing its establishment, as this section does under such circumstances, is not open to constitutional objection. Komposh v. Powers, 75 M 493, 244 P 298 (1926).

Case Notes

Statutory Requirements to Be Followed: Madison County attempted to establish a county road across defendants' land. The county invoked eminent domain. Section 70-30-108 requires compliance with the statutory provisions relating to the establishment of county roads. Title 7, ch. 14, generally requires a chain of events involving: (1) the filing of a proper petition with the county; (2) the option of the county surveying a specific route; (3) the county determination of the affected landowners and assessment of their damages; (4) the county offer of an award of damages; and (5) if the award is rejected, the beginning of condemnation proceedings. In this case the county did not receive a proper petition. The county offered damages for one proposed route but began condemnation on a different route for which no offer was made. The proceedings did not comply with the statutes and were not cured by 7-14-2609. The county may not ignore the mandates of the statutes, or they would be of no consequence. Madison County v. Elford, 203 M 293, 661 P2d 1266, 40 St. Rep. 457 (1983).

2013 Amendment: Chapter 371 in (2) substituted "70-30-111(1)(d)" for "70-30-111(4)". Amendment effective April 30, 2013.

Saving Clause: Section 6, Ch. 371, L. 2013, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 7, Ch. 371, L. 2013, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 9, Ch. 371, L. 2013, provided: "[This act] applies to complaints for condemnation filed on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 30, 2013.

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 20 in (1) near end of second sentence inserted "the location is" and at end of fourth sentence substituted "negligence or intentional acts" for "negligence, wantonness, or malice"; inserted (2) relating to condemnee's claim of appropriate measures to minimize damages; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Chapter 125 at end of fourth sentence substituted "from negligence or intentional acts" for "from negligence, wantonness, or malice"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Interim Study Bill — Eminent Domain: Chapter 125, L. 2001, was enacted as a result of an interim study. See Eminent Domain in Montana, published by the Legislative Environmental Policy Office, May 2001.

1985 Amendment: In second sentence inserted "after giving 30 days' written notice to the owners and persons in possession of the land", and inserted last two sentences explaining notice requirements of landowner and Department.

Case Notes

Condemnation Including Private Offices — Evidence to Be Considered — Due Process of Law: The state condemned part of the Vanimans' land for a highway interchange, rest area, and visitor center. The city of Bozeman, which funded part of the project, agreed with the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce that the Chamber would locate its corporate offices in the visitor center. The Vanimans objected to the condemnation as not being for a public purpose. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred when it failed to consider evidence showing that the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce intended to locate its corporate offices in the proposed visitor center and that this failure constituted a denial of due process of law. Bozeman v. Vaniman, 264 M 76, 869 P2d 790, 51 St. Rep. 154 (1994).

Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) Failure to Consider Alternate Routes — Condemnation Order Reversed: After being asked in 1975 by the county to improve a road, the State Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) had surveyed and located a proposed route by 1978. Prior to its choice of a proposed route, the Department had met informally with the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) because a portion of the route bordered on school trust lands. The Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) was planning the installation of pivot sprinkler irrigation systems on the land. Although no record of the meeting exists, apparently both Departments were satisfied that the proposed highway would not interfere with the proposed irrigation development. In 1981 the Standley brothers entered into a lease of the school trust land, and the Department began negotiations with them to acquire a portion of their leasehold interest. Upon learning that proposed route would interfere with the irrigation system, the Standley brothers asked for the route to be moved. The Department assessed the cost of a change in route, decided not to change it, and brought a successful condemnation action in District Court. The Supreme Court reversed because the Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) had violated 60-4-104 and 70-30-110 by failing to consider the possibility of alternate routes reasonably equal in terms of public good that would reduce private injury. The court directed the Highway Department (now Department of Transportation), in its reconsideration, to take into account only actual construction costs of the alternate route, not those costs created by the failure to consider an alternate route in the first place. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways v. Standley Bros., 215 M 475, 699 P2d 60, 42 St. Rep. 563 (1985).

Condemnor's Choice of Location Given Great Weight: The taking of private property by condemnation proceedings must be compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury. Since the condemnor has the expertise and detailed knowledge of considerations involved in determining location of the improvement, its choice of location is given great weight. The record discloses that Anaconda studied all other alternatives and rejected them as being economically infeasible. There is substantial credible evidence to support the District Court findings. Schara v. The Anaconda Co., 187 M 377, 610 P2d 132 (1980), following Mont. Power Co. v. Bokma, 153 M 390, 457 P2d 769 (1969). See also Cenex Pipeline LLC v. Fly Creek Angus, Inc., 1998 MT 334, 292 M 300, 971 P2d 781, 55 St. Rep. 1358 (1998).

Balancing Test: All other factors being equal, routing a highway over public lands would be compatible with the greatest public good and would involve the least private injury, but private injury is but one consideration, and the consideration of cost as an element of the public good can outweigh the private injury factor. Dept. of Highways v. Higgins, 166 M 90, 530 P2d 776 (1975).

Compatible With Public Good: Where power company had studied alternate routes for power lines, surveyed surrounding area, and determined that best possible route for such line was across defendant's property, utility had complied with this section in that taking of private property was compatible with greatest public good and least private injury. Mont. Power Co. v.

Bokma, 153 M 390, 457 P2d 769 (1969), followed in Cenex Pipeline LLC v. Fly Creek Angus, Inc., 1998 MT 334, 292 M 300, 971 P2d 781, 55 St. Rep. 1358 (1998).

Trespass by Public Agency: In taking, by a proper proceeding, the land of a private individual for a public use, the greatest possible good to the public and the least possible harm to the individual are alone to be considered; but where the taking is by a naked trespass, the individual can say to the trespasser: "You have no right whatever on my property." 2013 Amendment: Chapter 371 in (1)(d) substituted "final written offer prior to initiating condemnation proceedings and the final written offer" for "written offer and the offer"; inserted (2) regarding offers after the final written offer; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 30, 2013.

Saving Clause: Section 6, Ch. 371, L. 2013, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 7, Ch. 371, L. 2013, was a severability clause.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 512 in (1) substituted "a public use pursuant to 70-30-102" for "a use authorized by law"; and in (2) before "use" inserted "public". Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 125 in introductory clause substituted "condemnor" for "plaintiff"; in (3) substituted "being used for a public use" for "appropriated to some public use"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Interim Study Bill — Eminent Domain: Chapter 125, L. 2001, was enacted as a result of an interim study. See Eminent Domain in Montana, published by the Legislative Environmental Policy Office, May 2001.

1983 Amendment: In lead-in after "taken" substituted "the plaintiff ... findings" for "it must appear"; and inserted (4) requiring a showing that a written offer to obtain interest was made and rejected.

Motion for Preliminary Condemnation Properly Granted Following Unaccepted Offer to Purchase Right-of-Way: Seeking to improve and expand a roadway, the city offered Taylens $25,500 for the right-of-way across their property. The offer included an appraisal, an engineer's drawing of the land that the city wanted to purchase, a legal description of the property, and a proposed purchase agreement and set a date by which the offer had to be accepted. When the date passed without a response from the Taylens, the city began condemnation proceedings, while continuing to negotiate with the Taylens for a purchase price. Ultimately, no agreement was reached, the property was condemned, and the city took possession and completed the road improvements. The Taylens appealed on grounds that the city did not properly follow the condemnation process, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court correctly concluded that the city's offer met the requirements of subsection (4) of this section and did not err in granting the city's motion for preliminary condemnation. In addition, the Taylens failed to avail themselves of appropriate legal remedies to preserve the status quo, such as a stay pending appeal or a request that the city give a bond or sufficient sureties during the appeal, and the city completed the improvements, so the Taylens lost the right to raise the issue of whether the court should have granted the city immediate possession following the order for preliminary condemnation. Bozeman v. Taylen, 2007 MT 256, 339 M 274, 170 P3d 939 (2007).

Consideration of Alternative Sites Not Required in All Cases Prior to Finding That Taking of Property Is Necessary Under Eminent Domain Laws: Adams argued that the District Court had erred in granting the condemnation order requested by the county with respect to his property, which he had purchased with an existing lease on the land covering the transmitters already located on the land. When Adams and the county were unable to negotiate a new lease or sale of the property, even though the county offered to purchase the land for more than the appraised value, the county obtained the condemnation order. Adams argued that the county had failed to show that it had looked at alternative sites prior to obtaining a condemnation order for taking his land. The Supreme Court ruled that in the case before it, it was not necessary to look at alternative sites because the structures were already on the property and the cost of moving or replacing the structures on new land would result in a substantial cost to the public and therefore the county had demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that the taking was necessary. Park County v. Adams, 2004 MT 295, 323 M 370, 100 P3d 640, (2004).

Oil Well Not Considered Mine to Which Right-of-Way May Be Obtained Through Eminent Domain — No Condemnation Power of Private Individuals and Corporation Except Through Legislative Grant — Condemnation Statutes Strictly Construed: Plaintiff filed a federal action seeking to condemn an access easement and right-of-way across defendant's ranch land for access to drill and operate oil wells. The federal District Court certified two questions to the Montana Supreme Court regarding whether: (1) exploration and development of a federal oil and gas lease are considered a mine that constitutes a public use under 70-30-102; and (2) 82-2-201 grants the owner of a federal oil and gas lease the power, as the owner of a "mining claim", to condemn a right-of-way across land of another for access to explore and develop the lease. The Supreme Court answered both questions in the negative. Private individuals and corporations, like state agencies, have no inherent power of eminent domain, so their authority to condemn derives only from a legislative grant. Public uses for which the power of eminent domain are granted must be interpreted pursuant to the plain language set forth by the Legislature and may not be implied. Because eminent domain interferes with the fundamental constitutional right to the private ownership of real property, any statute that allows condemnation of private property must be strictly construed, giving the statute its plain interpretation but favoring the person's fundamental rights. Under the plain meaning of 70-30-102, oil wells are not considered mines to which rights-of-way for roads may be obtained through eminent domain proceedings. Further, exploration and development of a federal oil and gas lease are not a mine that constitutes a public use, so the owner of an oil and gas lease has no power under 82-2-201 to condemn a right-of-way. McCabe Petroleum Corp. v. N Bar Ranch, LLC, 2004 MT 73, 320 M 384, 87 P3d 995 (2004), following St. v. Aitchison, 96 M 335, 30 P2d 805 (1934), and Bozeman v. Vaniman, 264 M 76, 869 P2d 790 (1994), and distinguishing Mid-Northern Oil Co. v. Walker, 65 M 414, 211 P 353 (1922), Rice Oil Co. v. Toole County, 86 M 427, 284 P 145 (1930), and Mont. Talc Co. v. Cyprus Mines Corp., 229 M 491, 748 P2d 444 (1987).

Easement Necessary for Electric Power Lines — Condemnation Proper: Burlington Northern (BN) offered Montana Power Company (MPC) a wire line permit across BN property that would have allowed location, construction, operation, maintenance, replacement, and removal of a $2.2 million power transmission line. MPC rejected the offer because of the lack of permanence and allowance for rent escalation and because the permit was revocable without cause 100 days after notice and contained onerous indemnification and relocation provisions. Instead, MPC sought an easement without restrictions and condemnation, producing uncontroverted testimony about the area's need for the transmission facility as well as the practicality of locating the lines on BN's right-of-way. BN produced no evidence to contradict the choice of location or the public's need for the proposed line. The District Court properly held that an easement was necessary for the intended use, as compared to a wire line permit, and that the property was subject to condemnation. Mont. Power Co. v. Burlington N. RR Co., 272 M 224, 900 P2d 888, 52 St. Rep. 625 (1995).

Electric Power Line as Compatible but More Necessary Public Use Than Railroad: Under this section, if property is already appropriated to a public use, the use to which it is to be applied must be determined by a preponderance of the evidence to be a more necessary public use. The determination of which use is more necessary affects condemnation proceedings only when there are two public uses that are incompatible. In this case, the District Court properly found that the two uses were compatible but that the power line was more necessary. Even though the court was not required to make that determination because use of the property for a power line would not destroy the prior use of the property for a railroad or materially injure that prior use, the "more necessary" determination was not reversible error because the court also found the uses compatible. Mont. Power Co. v. Burlington N. RR Co., 272 M 224, 900 P2d 888, 52 St. Rep. 625 (1995), following Cocanougher v. Zeigler, 112 M 76, 112 P2d 1058 (1941).

Condemnation Including Private Offices — Evidence to Be Considered — Due Process of Law: The state condemned part of the Vanimans' land for a highway interchange, rest area, and visitor center. The city of Bozeman, which funded part of the project, agreed with the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce that the Chamber would locate its corporate offices in the visitor center. The Vanimans objected to the condemnation as not being for a public purpose. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred when it failed to consider evidence showing that the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce intended to locate its corporate offices in the proposed visitor center and that this failure constituted a denial of due process of law. Bozeman v. Vaniman, 264 M 76, 869 P2d 790, 51 St. Rep. 154 (1994).

Time for Determining "Necessity": The city appealed the lower court's ruling against the condemnation of a private water company. Upon remand, the city attempted to introduce economic factors that had occurred subsequent to the original trial. The Supreme Court stated that since the value of the property if condemned would have been set at the time of the service of the summons and the water company would not have been able to show subsequent increases in value then, in fairness, factors affecting the issue of necessity should also be limited to those existing as of the same date. Missoula v. Mtn. Water Co., 236 M 442, 771 P2d 103, 46 St. Rep. 494 (1989).

Open-Pit Excavation Necessary for Backslope as Authorized Public Use — Landowner Notification Act Ineffectual to Prevent Condemnation: An open-pit excavation necessary to backslope the mining of an ore body is an authorized public use for which condemnation may be had. The Landowner Notification Act appears to preclude this kind of condemnation because under 82-2-303, an open-pit mine operator must obtain from the surface owner of private lands specific written approval of proposed work before commencing operations. However, the Supreme Court noted that the Act was aimed at the protection of private persons, while eminent domain law, constitutionally grounded and deriving from the power of sovereignty, was enacted to protect the public good. The court found it inconceivable that the Legislature intended provisions enacted for the benefit of private persons to overcome and supersede provisions preserving the public good. Therefore, the Landowner Notification Act was found not to adversely affect the right to use eminent domain against a nonconsenting landowner. Mont. Talc Co. v. Cyprus Mines Corp., 229 M 491, 748 P2d 444, 44 St. Rep. 2161 (1987), followed in Bozeman v. Vaniman, 264 M 76, 869 P2d 790, 51 St. Rep. 154 (1994). See also McCabe Petroleum Corp. v. N Bar Ranch, LLC, 2004 MT 73, 320 M 384, 87 P3d 995 (2004), wherein the Supreme Court held that eminent domain condemnation provisions applicable to open-pit mines in Mont. Talc Co. did not apply to oil and gas leases and wells.

City Ordinance Not Conclusive Presumption of Necessity — Standard of Proof: A city ordinance adopted pursuant to 7-5-4106 did not establish a conclusive presumption that the taking of private property for a water system was necessary. The controlling statutes are in Title 7, chapter 13, part 44, and absent an agreement to purchase, 7-13-4404 requires that the standard of proof outlined in 70-30-111 be met before private property may be taken for a public use. Since the District Court has the power to determine whether a condemnation is necessary, the votes of the people and the city council cannot be considered as dispositive of the issue of necessity; however, the public interest as expressed in these votes must be considered and weighed with the other factors in determining whether acquisition is necessary. Missoula v. Mtn. Water Co., 228 M 404, 743 P2d 590, 44 St. Rep. 1633 (1987), affirmed in Missoula v. Mtn. Water Co., 236 M 442, 771 P2d 103, 46 St. Rep. 494 (1989).

Issuance of Certificate of Environmental Compatibility and Public Need — No District Court Jurisdiction to Determine Public Necessity: Once a certificate of environmental compatibility and public need was issued by the Board of Natural Resources and Conservation (now Board of Environmental Review), the District Court had no jurisdiction to determine the existence of public necessity with respect to a proposed electric transmission line under the Montana Utility Siting Act of 1973 (now the Montana Major Facility Siting Act) since that determination had already been made by the Board pursuant to the Act. Mont. Power Co. v. Fondren, 226 M 500, 737 P2d 1138, 44 St. Rep. 850 (1987).

Limitation of Court Jurisdiction in Centerline Determination and Eminent Domain — Noncontested Case Procedure: The Legislature did not intend the final electric transmission line centerline determination by the Board of Natural Resources and Conservation (now Board of Environmental Review) to be subject to judicial review, and once the Board sets the specific route, no court has jurisdiction to hear challenges to the location. Through enactment of 75-20-205(2) (now repealed) and 75-20-407, court jurisdiction in eminent domain cases was limited to hearing challenges to the necessity of taking private property. The preponderance of the evidence on 70-30-111 findings that must be proven to the court before a preliminary condemnation order is issued is satisfied by appending to the complaint the Board's certificate of environmental compatibility and public need and the Board's findings of fact, opinion, decision, order, and recommendations. In cases where landowners feel conditions of the certificate were breached, proper remedy lies in a mandamus action under 75-20-404. Mont. Power Co. v. Fondren, 226 M 500, 737 P2d 1138, 44 St. Rep. 850 (1987).

Interpretation of "Necessary": When the evidence presented at trial indicated that the proposed location of an improved road was the shortest, most direct, and least expensive route consistent with the design objectives, the District Court properly found that the interest sought by the Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) was necessary for the improvement. The word "necessary" in this statute does not mean an absolute or indispensable necessity but rather a reasonable, requisite, and proper means to accomplish the improvement. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways v. Standley Bros., 215 M 475, 699 P2d 60, 42 St. Rep. 563 (1985).

Burden of Proof — No Necessity for Utility Easements: The condemnor must initially produce sufficient evidence to establish facts indicating the taking is necessary. The burden then falls upon the one seeking to show that the taking has been excessive or arbitrary. The trial court found that the sewer district had not shown necessity for the taking of defendants' properties because it failed to demonstrate a reasonable present need or even a need in the reasonably foreseeable future to connect defendants to the sewer system. The condemnor had not carried its burden, and the order of the trial court was affirmed. Lincoln/Lewis & Clark County Sewer District v. Bossing, 215 M 235, 696 P2d 989, 42 St. Rep. 318 (1985).

Scope of Authority of Trial Court's Review in Condemnation Action: Prior cases, along with 70-30-111 and 70-30-206, clearly reflect that the trial judge has the power to determine necessity and make findings on whether the public interest requires the taking in an eminent domain proceeding. Thus, to the extent the trial judge's findings go to a determination of the necessity of a taking of defendants' property, those findings are within the trial court's scope of authority and can be affirmed. The trial court made two findings that are outside its scope of authority. Two prior District Court actions had already made determinations on the validity of the district and that the project was in the public interest. In addition, the issues before this trial court involved only the necessity of taking the particular property of the defendants for septic tanks and connection lines. Since these findings exceeded the trial court's authority, they are set aside. Lincoln/Lewis & Clark County Sewer District v. Bossing, 215 M 235, 686 P2d 989, 42 St. Rep. 318 (1985), followed in Bozeman v. Vaniman, 264 M 76, 869 P2d 790, 51 St. Rep. 154 (1994).

Condemnor's Choice of Location Given Great Weight: The taking of private property by condemnation proceedings must be compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury. Since the condemnor has the expertise and detailed knowledge of considerations involved in determining location of the improvement, its choice of location is given great weight. The record discloses that Anaconda studied all other alternatives and rejected them as being economically infeasible. There is substantial credible evidence to support the District Court findings. Schara v. The Anaconda Co., 187 M 377, 610 P2d 132 (1980), following Mont. Power Co. v. Bokma, 153 M 390, 457 P2d 769 (1969). See also Cenex Pipeline LLC v. Fly Creek Angus, Inc., 1998 MT 334, 292 M 300, 971 P2d 781, 55 St. Rep. 1358 (1998).

Mining Permit Not Required Prior to Condemnation: Plaintiff contends that since 70-30-111 requires the use for condemned property to be "authorized by law" before condemnation is allowed, the obtaining of a valid mining permit is a condition precedent to condemnation. Section 70-30-102 declares mining to be a public use. It is unquestioned that the Anaconda Company is engaged in mining operations. To find that a mining permit must be obtained prior to condemnation would be inconsistent with statutory authority and contrary to the public policy of providing expediency in eminent domain proceedings. Schara v. The Anaconda Co., 187 M 377, 610 P2d 132 (1980).

Easement Sufficient — Condemnation of Fee Error: Where an easement to remove obstructions and prevent future obstructions would have been sufficient to assure safe flight to and from an airport runway, preliminary order of condemnation of fee simple was error. Silver Bow County v. Hafer, 166 M 330, 532 P2d 691 (1975).

Necessity of Eminent Domain — Balancing Test: When an easement to insure safe flight would adequately serve public need, it was not necessary for the county to acquire a fee simple title. Silver Bow County v. Hafer, 166 M 330, 532 P2d 691 (1975).

Burden of Proof:

Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) resolution of public interest and necessity established a disputable presumption that requirements for condemnation had been satisfied, which presumption was not overcome by evidence that a possible alternative route might have been selected. Dept. of Highways v. Higgins, 166 M 90, 530 P2d 776 (1975).

Where Commission condemned defendant's land to build bypass through it rather than reconstruct highway through town, it became incumbent upon the defendant to show fraud, abuse of discretion, or arbitrary action in order to defeat the Commission's action, while the Commission had only to establish that the taking of the property was reasonably necessary for rebuilding the highway and that its decision appeared to be compatible with the greatest public good and least private injury on the basis of conflicting evidence. St. Highway Comm'n v. Crossen-Nissen Co., 145 M 251, 400 P2d 283 (1965), distinguished in State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Lavoie, 155 M 39, 466 P2d 594 (1970).

More Necessary Public Use — Protection of Children: Condemnation of city-owned property between sidewalk and boundary of schoolyard for the purpose of erecting a fence was a more necessary public use than the existing use, in view of the protection for the children. State ex rel. Smart v. Big Timber, 165 M 328, 528 P2d 688 (1974).

Necessity of Use:

Before District Court may order condemnation, this section requires that it must find that proposed taking is necessary to public use under circumstances of individual case. Mont. Power Co. v. Bokma, 153 M 390, 457 P2d 769 (1969).

The word "necessary" as used in this section does not mean that the property must be indispensable to the proposed project but that it must be reasonably requisite and proper for the accomplishment of the purpose for which it is sought under the peculiar circumstances of each case. St. Highway Comm'n v. Crossen-Nissen Co., 145 M 251, 400 P2d 283 (1965).

The necessity of the taking or using the roadbed or right-of-way, built or secured by another railroad company through a canyon or defile, is a question for decision by the District Court of the county in which the canyon is located. Mont. Cent. Ry. v. Helena & R. M. R.R., 6 M 416, 12 P 916 (1887).

Condemnor's Discretion: Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) did not abuse its discretion in taking farmland by eminent domain even though it was shown that town through which old highway had passed would be financially harmed and bypass would cost more to build, since the resulting savings in travel costs to highway users, in addition to the compensation paid the petitioners, offset disadvantages claimed by them. St. Highway Comm'n v. Crossen-Nissen Co., 145 M 251, 400 P2d 283 (1965), distinguished in St. Highway Comm'n v. Danielsen, 146 M 539, 409 P2d 443 (1965); State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Lavoie, 155 M 39, 466 P2d 594 (1970).

Trial Court to Determine Public Necessity: In an action by the state to condemn land for interstate highway or controlled access facility the trial judge has the power to determine the public necessity of the proposed highway or facility. Necessity was properly denied where trial court found that proposed highway would not benefit the people living in its vicinity or the public in general and that the construction of the road was not in the public interest. St. v. Yost Farm Co., 142 M 239, 384 P2d 277 (1963).

Necessity Not Found: In condemnation proceedings instituted by a mutual irrigation company, insolvency of plaintiff (which had acquired canal of defendant mutual irrigation company by contract containing covenants, as consideration for conveyance, under which it obligated itself to furnish defendant company and its users with the same amount of water they had been receiving) was not a "good cause" or "necessity" for condemnation of such covenants by plaintiff. Cove Irrigation Co. v. Yellowstone Ditch Co., 139 M 281, 362 P2d 543 (1961).

Federal Condemnation: In proceeding by federal government in federal court to condemn land located in Montana, Montana statute requiring finding that taking was necessary did not relate to "forms and methods of procedure" required to be followed by federal court but was a rule of "substantive law" which was not controlling, and federal statute which made question depend solely on opinion of federal officer was controlling. U.S. v. Mont., 134 F2d 194 (9th Cir. 1943).

Rule of Necessity — Must Be Determinative: The provisions of Title 69, ch. 14, part 5, are exceedingly liberal in bestowing upon railroad corporations the power to appropriate the property of the citizen to carry forward the public service; but they must, nevertheless, be interpreted in the light of this section, and the rule of necessity must be determinative in each instance. N. Pac. Ry. v. McAdow, 44 M 547, 121 P 473 (1912).

Water Right — More Necessary Public Use: Water appropriated for irrigation purposes may be condemned to procure a water supply where the use for which it is to be taken is more necessary than the existing use, and a complaint in proceedings to condemn for a city water supply water already appropriated to a public use must allege this latter fact, the relative degrees of necessity being a question for judicial determination. Helena v. Rogan, 26 M 452, 68 P 798 (1902).

More Necessary Public Use — Railroad Right-of-Way: Where a railroad that traverses the side of a mountain in a mining section has within its right-of-way tracts not necessary to the operation of its system and which have not been used by it in connection with any such operations and in all reasonable probability are not necessary for any future use and another road is obliged to take parts of such unused right-of-way to avoid a considerably more circuitous route at a different grade, at very much greater cost and of serious damage to many mining properties, and would, in any event, be obliged to parallel the adversary road a part of the way, under such conditions the taking of the unused parts of the one railroad by the other is a more necessary public use. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry. v. Mont. Union Ry., 16 M 504, 41 P 232 (1895).

"Necessity" Explained: The word "necessary", as used in a statute of this character, does not mean an absolute necessity for the particular location sought but a reasonable necessity to be determined from the considerations of practicability, economy, and facilities, under the particular circumstances of the case, having regard to senior rights and the benefits to the public. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry. v. Mont. Union Ry., 16 M 504, 41 P 232 (1895).

Opening and Closing Case: The party upon whom the burden of proof rests is entitled to open and close, and this is the defendant where the only issue is the amount of compensation. St. v. Peterson, 134 M 52, 328 P2d 617 (1958).

Attorney Fees: Under this section, the provisions of 25-10-201 and 25-10-301 are made applicable to condemnation proceedings for a private road of necessity and therefore attorney's fees are not includable as an expense under 70-30-107. 1983 Amendment: Inserted last two sentences requiring notice by summons to defendant and allowing trial commencement within 6 months of service of summons.

Case Notes

Service of Complaint With Summons: Requirement, contained in former law (repealed in 1983), that a copy of the complaint must be served with the summons is effectively met, so long as both are served at least 20 days prior to the time designated for hearing, and there is no requirement that they be served on the same day. St. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 160 M 35, 499 P2d 1228 (1972), explained in Walker v. Tschache, 162 M 213, 510 P2d 9 (1973).

Venue of Trial: The provision of this section, that condemnation proceedings must be brought in the county where the land is situated, implies that they must also be tried there, unless transferred by the court or judge in some manner authorized by law. State ex rel. Davis v. District Court, 29 M 153, 74 P 200 (1903).

Water Rights: Proceedings to condemn water appropriated for irrigation purposes may be brought and tried in the county in which the land is situated, though the water is to be taken in another county. Helena v. Rogan, 26 M 452, 68 P 798 (1902).

1985 Amendment: In (6) at end of first sentence, inserted "and a statement that the interest sought is the minimum necessary interest".

1983 Amendments: Chapter 526, in (2), after "owners" inserted "purchasers under contracts for deed".

Chapter 622, in lead-in, after "must" changed "contain" to "allege"; inserted (4) requiring statements of facts necessary to be found under 70-30-111; in (6) near beginning after "each" substituted "interest in real property" for "piece of land", and deleted last sentence, which read: "When application for the condemnation of a right-of-way for the purposes of sewerage is made on behalf of a settlement or a town or a county, the county commissioners of the county may be named as plaintiff."

Case Notes

Description of Secondary Access Right-of-Way Within Statutory Requirements: In its complaint for condemnation for a pipeline and fiber optic right-of-way access across plaintiff's property, Cenex incorporated by reference the "minimum necessary interest" requirement and included a map of the pipeline route and a description of the primary easement sought. When the District Court granted condemnation of the 50-foot easement, plaintiff appealed, alleging that the District Court erred because Cenex had failed in its description to set forth a fixed way of access. In affirming the condemnation grant, the Supreme Court held that because Cenex was entitled only to the "minimum necessary interest", the description of the secondary right of access complied with the requirement of this section through incorporation by reference of the requirement. Cenex Pipeline LLC v. Fly Creek Angus, Inc., 1998 MT 334, 292 M 300, 971 P2d 781, 55 St. Rep. 1358 (1998).

Description of Land:

Complaint describing three parcels of land by metes and bounds and alleging that only a portion thereof was desired was sufficient, as against the contention that it did not appear that plaintiff commission intended to use a considerable portion of a given piece of land. St. v. Whitcomb, 94 M 415, 22 P2d 823 (1933). (See 1985 amendment.)

Description of lands sought to be condemned for a private road is sufficient if it is definite enough to identify the lands. Komposh v. Powers, 75 M 493, 244 P 298 (1926).

The area of the land sought to be acquired by condemnation proceedings is not required to be stated in the petition. The requirement of the statute is met when the description is definite enough to identify the land sought to be taken, even though it be conceded that the statement of the area would materially aid in its identification. Interstate Power Co. v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 52 M 509, 159 P 408 (1916).

Where the complaint, in a proceeding to condemn land, sets forth definitely the bounds on three sides of a tract sought to be taken and designates a well-known navigable stream as the boundary on the fourth side, this designation is sufficient without express reference to high or low watermark; in any event, it meets the requirements of the rule that "that is certain which can be made certain by means of the description or references contained in the petition". Interstate Power Co. v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 52 M 509, 159 P 408 (1916).

Default by Defendant: Where plaintiff railroad company failed to take default against defendants, who had not answered or demurred but permitted the case to proceed as if pleadings had been filed and issues properly made, and found no fault with any of the proceedings until hearing in the District Court, it will be presumed that issues were made and properly determined. Yellowstone Park R.R. v. Bridger Coal Co., 34 M 545, 87 P 963 (1906).

Access to Property Condemned: A complaint by a city for the condemnation of water rights in a stream for a water supply is not defective for failing to allege that it has a right-of-way to the stream or will be able to acquire such right. Helena v. Rogan, 26 M 452, 68 P 798 (1902).

Necessity of Use: To condemn private land for an alleyway, the complainant must allege the necessity of the use for which the condemnation is sought; otherwise, evidence of such necessity is inadmissible. Helena v. Harvey, 6 M 114, 9 P 903 (1886).

Chapter 125 throughout section substituted "condemnor" for "plaintiff"; in (3)(b) substituted "In addition to or in lieu of the amount paid under subsection (3)(a), the court may direct the commissioners to determine the annual rental" for "and/or as the annual rental"; and made minor changes in style. Case Notes

Court Determination of Terms of Compatible Use to Be Included in Final Order of Condemnation: Although eminent domain statutes do not require protective conditions in an easement, courts do have the power under this section to set forth protective provisions in an order for condemnation. In this case, the court found the use of property to be compatible for use both for a railroad and for electric power lines. Thus, failure by the court to include any requested protective provisions in its order of possession did not constitute reversible error, but the Supreme Court nevertheless remanded to the trial court for a hearing to determine what protective provisions requested by either party, if any, should be included in its final order of condemnation. Mont. Power Co. v. Burlington N. RR Co., 272 M 224, 900 P2d 888, 52 St. Rep. 625 (1995), following St. Highway Comm'n v. Lavoie, 155 M 39, 466 P2d 594 (1970).

Easement Necessary for Electric Power Lines — Condemnation Proper: Burlington Northern (BN) offered Montana Power Company (MPC) a wire line permit across BN property that would have allowed location, construction, operation, maintenance, replacement, and removal of a $2.2 million power transmission line. MPC rejected the offer because of the lack of permanence and allowance for rent escalation and because the permit was revocable without cause 100 days after notice and contained onerous indemnification and relocation provisions. Instead, MPC sought an easement without restrictions and condemnation, producing uncontroverted testimony about the area's need for the transmission facility as well as the practicality of locating the lines on BN's right-of-way. BN produced no evidence to contradict the choice of location or the public's need for the proposed line. The District Court properly held that an easement was necessary for the intended use, as compared to a wire line permit, and that the property was subject to condemnation. Mont. Power Co. v. Burlington N. RR Co., 272 M 224, 900 P2d 888, 52 St. Rep. 625 (1995).

Burden of Proof — No Necessity for Utility Easements: The condemnor must initially produce sufficient evidence to establish facts indicating the taking is necessary. The burden then falls upon the one seeking to show that the taking has been excessive or arbitrary. The trial court found that the sewer district had not shown necessity for the taking of defendants' properties because it failed to demonstrate a reasonable present need or even a need in the reasonably foreseeable future to connect defendants to the sewer system. The condemnor had not carried its burden, and the order of the trial court was affirmed. Lincoln/Lewis & Clark County Sewer District v. Bossing, 215 M 235, 696 P2d 989, 42 St. Rep. 318 (1985).

Scope of Authority of Trial Court's Review in Condemnation Action: Prior cases, along with 70-30-111 and 70-30-206, clearly reflect that the trial judge has the power to determine necessity and make findings on whether the public interest requires the taking in an eminent domain proceeding. Thus, to the extent the trial judge's findings go to a determination of the necessity of a taking of defendants' property, those findings are within the trial court's scope of authority and can be affirmed. The trial court made two findings that are outside its scope of authority. Two prior District Court actions had already made determinations on the validity of the district and that the project was in the public interest. In addition, the issues before this trial court involved only the necessity of taking the particular property of the defendants for septic tanks and connection lines. Since these findings exceeded the trial court's authority, they are set aside. Lincoln/Lewis & Clark County Sewer District v. Bossing, 215 M 235, 686 P2d 989, 42 St. Rep. 318 (1985), followed in Bozeman v. Vaniman, 264 M 76, 869 P2d 790, 51 St. Rep. 154 (1994).

Access Rights: In condemnation proceeding involving access to portion of farm divided by interstate highway, District Court had power to require state to incorporate in its construction plans such structures as would allow two-lane access across county road; but District Court did not have power to require state to submit such plans to court for its approval since such matters were within purview of activities of Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission). State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Lavoie, 155 M 39, 466 P2d 594 (1970), distinguished in St. Highway Comm'n v. Roth, 159 M 268, 496 P2d 1136 (1972).

Necessity of Use: Before District Court may order condemnation, this section requires that it must find that proposed taking is necessary to public use under circumstances of individual case. Mont. Power Co. v. Bokma, 153 M 390, 457 P2d 769 (1969).

Underpass: Where 40.89 acres of ranchland were taken by the Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) as a right-of-way for an interstate highway, consisting of four lanes in width and fully controlled access, which split the remaining land into two divisions, leaving 432.69 acres, on which farm headquarters was located, on the north side of the highway and 393.42 acres on the south side of the highway, trial court in its preliminary order of condemnation properly ordered the Commission to construct and maintain at its own expense an underpass leading from one side of the highway to the other. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Wheeler, 148 M 246, 419 P2d 492 (1966).

Determination of Necessity: In an action by the state to condemn land for interstate highway or controlled access facility the trial judge has the power to determine the public necessity of the proposed highway or facility. Under this section and 70-30-111, the trial judge not only has the power to determine the question of necessity but has been directed to make a finding that the public interest requires the taking of the lands before he has power to issue an order of condemnation. St. v. Yost Farm Co., 142 M 239, 384 P2d 277 (1963).

Necessity Denied: Necessity was properly denied where trial court found that proposed highway would not benefit the people living in its vicinity or the public in general and that the construction of the road was not in the public interest. St. v. Yost Farm Co., 142 M 239, 384 P2d 277 (1963).

Valuation of Property: Income could be used as a basis for arriving at market value in condemnation case where testimony of the various witnesses for both the landowners and the state, who explained their method of valuation, used the same general approach in determining the loss in value, which approach was labeled the "capitalization of income" approach. St. v. Heltborg, 140 M 196, 369 P2d 521 (1962).

Appeal From Commissioners' Award: A Commissioner's assessment is not a judgment but merely an award by the lay Commissioners of damages contained in their report, and, where an appeal has been perfected by the condemner from the assessment, the condemner is entitled to have a necessary party added as a party defendant. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 136 M 362, 348 P2d 132 (1959).

Removal of Improvements: In proceedings to condemn tract of land for new highway which would leave defendant's business on old highway, testimony concerning removal of gas tanks was wholly incompetent. Landowner was not required to remove his buildings or fixtures from the land taken and accept an amount of money to defray costs of removal. St. v. Peterson, 134 M 52, 328 P2d 617 (1958).

Taking of Private Property for Private Use: The taking of private property for the private use of another violates the 14th amendment to the federal Constitution, and the Legislature has not the power to declare that that which is in truth a private use shall be a public one, the question whether a particular use is a private or public one being determinable by the courts. Komposh v. Powers, 75 M 493, 244 P 298 (1926).

Waiver of Objections to Commissioners' Report: Where commissioners, appointed to assess damages occasioned by the taking of land through eminent domain proceedings, do not perform their whole duty in the premises, either by reason of their nonfeasance or malfeasance, the injured party may appeal or move to set aside their report. Upon failure to invoke either of these remedies, such party may not thereafter be heard to say that his property was taken without due process of law. Spratt v. Helena Power Transmission Co., 37 M 60, 94 P 631 (1908).

Default by Defendant: Failure of defendant in condemnation proceedings to appear, either by demurrer or answer, does not relieve the court of the duty of determining whether the use for which the property sought to be condemned is a public use, limiting the amount taken to the necessities of the case, and ascertaining the damages as provided in this section, 70-30-301, and 70-30-304. Yellowstone Park R.R. v. Bridger Coal Co., 34 M 545, 87 P 963 (1906).

Motion for Preliminary Condemnation Properly Granted Following Unaccepted Offer to Purchase Right-of-Way: Seeking to improve and expand a roadway, the city offered Taylens $25,500 for the right-of-way across their property. The offer included an appraisal, an engineer's drawing of the land that the city wanted to purchase, a legal description of the property, and a proposed purchase agreement and set a date by which the offer had to be accepted. When the date passed without a response from the Taylens, the city began condemnation proceedings, while continuing to negotiate with the Taylens for a purchase price. Ultimately, no agreement was reached, the property was condemned, and the city took possession and completed the road improvements. The Taylens appealed on grounds that the city did not properly follow the condemnation process, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court correctly concluded that the city's offer met the requirements of 70-30-111(4) and did not err in granting the city's motion for preliminary condemnation. In addition, the Taylens failed to avail themselves of appropriate legal remedies to preserve the status quo, such as a stay pending appeal or a request that the city give a bond or sufficient sureties during the appeal, and the city completed the improvements, so the Taylens lost the right to raise the issue of whether the court should have granted the city immediate possession following the order for preliminary condemnation. Bozeman v. Taylen, 2007 MT 256, 339 M 274, 170 P3d 939 (2007).

Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Chapter 125 throughout section substituted references to condemnor for references to plaintiff and references to condemnee for references to defendant; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Interim Study Bill — Eminent Domain: Chapter 125, L. 2001, was enacted as a result of an interim study. See Eminent Domain in Montana, published by the Legislative Environmental Policy Office, May 2001.

1981 Amendment: Inserted "current fair market" before "value" throughout the section.

General 378
Measure of Damages 380

GENERAL

Compensation When Damaged Land Has Been Leased: In condemnation actions, compensation accrues only to the one suffering loss or damage. When a lessee paid the landowner the entire, normal lease payment each year that the state used landowner's land, any damages for temporary loss of use of the leased land accrued to the lessee rather than the landowner. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways v. Donnes, 219 M 182, 711 P2d 805, 42 St. Rep. 1938 (1985).

Landowner — Witness Rule Inapplicable to Proof of Causation of Damages: Where the State condemned a piece of the defendant's land as right-of-way for an interstate frontage road, the District Court did not err in admitting the defendant's testimony that the heat, noise, and dust from the road would damage the defendant's pig rearing business and testimony of the resulting reduction in value of the property. The landowner-witness rule relied on by the State to exclude that testimony is not directly applicable to this case. What is at issue is the competency of the landowner to testify on the causal link between the taking and any damages to the remainder, and, ultimately, to the depreciation in market value. The record indicates that the defendant was informed regarding the facts of construction and use of the highway. When a landowner is so informed, he is competent to estimate before-and-after value as to that particular use of his property or the causes of damage to the remaining property. St. v. Howery, 204 M 417, 664 P2d 1387, 40 St. Rep. 975 (1983).

Landowner-Witness Rule: The landowner-witness rule in valuation of property in a condemnation proceeding consists of two parts: the landowner on prima facie showing of ownership may testify as to value so long as his testimony is reasonable and the value testified to is for the use to which he is putting the land; if the landowner desires to testify as to value when used for other purposes, he must have some peculiar means of forming an intelligent and correct judgment beyond what is presumed to be possessed by men generally. Highway Comm'n v. Marsh, 175 M 460, 575 P2d 38 (1978), followed in K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Evidence of Comparable Sales: Evidence of comparable sales is within the discretion of the court and will not be reversed unless there was manifest abuse of that discretion. Dept. of Highways v. Schreckendgust, 170 M 161, 551 P2d 1019 (1976).

Severance Damage to Remainder of Land When Condemnation Results in Excising Very Heart of Ranch: Damage award to remainder of ranch was inadequate for not allowing compensation for permanent interference with farming, as distinguished from temporary interference or inconvenience, when heart of ranch was excised by condemnation as just compensation for a public taking of private land is computed by adding fair market value of land taken to "value of remainder before taking minus value of remainder after taking". Meagher County Newlan Creek Water District v. Walter, 169 M 358, 547 P2d 850 (1976).

Bifurcated Trial Not Required: It was not error for jury to determine a total award and thereafter apportion award among the lessor and lessee as jury was properly admonished to first ascertain entire award as though property were owned by one person, then to apportion this sum between lessor and lessee. Bifurcated trial is not required as court will presume that jury, in reaching its verdict, followed instructions given to it by trial judge. Dept. of Highways v. Hy-Grade Auto Court, 169 M 340, 546 P2d 1050 (1976).

Sales Comparable in Size but Not in Shape: It was proper for the District Court to admit evidence of sales comparable in size but not in shape as the basis for an expert's opinion, where the differences were thoroughly developed on both direct and cross-examination allowing the jury to determine the weight to be given the comparable sales and the expert's appraisal. Mont. Power Co. v. Wolfe, 169 M 234, 545 P2d 674 (1976).

Lack of Certainty: In action for condemnation where none of the witnesses agreed as to the exact amount of acreage to be taken and the engineers did not have all of the facts and figures so as to enable counsel to be exact, the cause was remanded for a new trial. St. Highway Comm'n v. Marsh, 165 M 198, 527 P2d 573 (1974).

Lessee's Testimony: In condemnation action court properly permitted testimony of lessee for the purpose of showing how the operation of the ranch would be affected but refused to allow testimony as to lessee's damage, since the fact of lessee's loss had not been offered in evidence and the lease provided that any condemnation award would go to the owner. St. Highway Comm'n v. Marsh, 165 M 198, 527 P2d 573 (1974).

Noncontiguous Lands: Although the general rule in eminent domain proceedings requires that the land for which depreciation damages are sought be contiguous to that from which severance is made, the landowner may claim, as an exception to the general rule, that the unity of use within an integrated operation to which he applies noncontiguous lands is of such a character that after severance they cannot be fully utilized to their best and most valuable use; where highway right-of-way traversed a tract of ranchland so as to separate it into two parcels with no access for 6 ½ miles, court properly permitted testimony concerning damage to two other noncontiguous tracts used as a part of landowner's ranching operation. St. Highway Comm'n v. Renfro, 161 M 251, 505 P2d 403 (1973).

"Remainder": To determine what is "remainder" of property taken under statute providing for damages for depreciation in value of portion of land not sought to be condemned, there are generally three tests: (1) unity of ownership, (2) contiguity, (3) unity of use; claimant who conveyed part of tract of subsequently condemned land to corporation was not entitled to compensation for depreciation in value to land he still held because claimant and corporation were two distinct owners and hence unity of ownership was absent even though claimant was majority shareholder of corporation and lands were contiguous. St. Highway Comm'n v. Robertson & Blossom, Inc., 151 M 205, 441 P2d 181 (1968), distinguished in St. Highway Comm'n v. Renfro, 161 M 251, 505 P2d 403 (1973).

Extent Access Impaired for the Jury: While it is proper for the trial court to determine whether there has been an impairment of access, the question of the extent to which access has been impaired is for the jury, and it was not error for the court to refuse to give instructions to the effect that all means of access to the defendant's property had been destroyed. St. Highway Comm'n v. Manry, 143 M 382, 390 P2d 97 (1963).

Verdict Form: It was not prejudicial error for the trial judge to give the jury a verdict form which was in accord with this section and which verdict was not out of proportion to the damage done the defendant. St. Highway Comm'n v. Manry, 143 M 382, 390 P2d 97 (1963).

Damages Caused by Severance: To fully determine damages caused by severance of condemned land, subsection (3)(b) is not read alone; rather it must be read in connection with 70-30-302, as amended. St. v. Milanovich, 142 M 410, 384 P2d 752 (1963).

Unity of Use: Where defendants owned seven contiguous lots upon which they had constructed their home and an income-producing residence, planning to build a multiple-family dwelling on three of the vacant lots, the seven lots constituted a single unit; and in action by state to condemn part of the three vacant lots for highway purposes, the unity of use doctrine allowing depreciation of value of remaining land was applicable in assessing damages. St. v. Milanovich, 142 M 410, 384 P2d 752 (1963).

Alteration of Commissioners' Award: Although this section as amended in 1961 gives the presiding judge supervision over the commissioners, it does not grant to the court the right to amend or alter their award. State ex rel. Frelich v. District Court, 141 M 169, 375 P2d 1016 (1962).

Expert Testimony: Testimony of right-of-way agents who had been engaged in the process of appraising real estate for some time all over the state and had extensive experience in and knowledge of real estate values in community and elsewhere should have been admitted by court to establish value of property taken by plaintiff for new highway. St. v. Peterson, 134 M 52, 328 P2d 617 (1958).

Error in Admitting Evidence as to Damage to All Land Whether Contiguous or Not: By eminent domain proceedings the state sought to acquire a strip of land containing 85 acres for highway purposes from a body of land comprising more than 21,000 acres used for livestock purposes. While the major body of the land was inclosed by a common fence, a number of tracts therein were owned by others, and the common fence was maintained by mere license, acquiescence, or failure to protest. A number of tracts controlled by defendant were noncontiguous, and some were more than 9 miles from the desired right-of-way. Error was committed in admitting evidence showing damage to all the lands, whether contiguous or not, on the theory that they were used as a unit as grazing lands in defendant's livestock operations. St. v. Bradshaw Land & Livestock Co., 99 M 95, 43 P2d 674 (1935).

Independent Parcels: Within the meaning of this section, parts of the whole tract separated by intervening private lands are generally considered as independent parcels. St. v. Bradshaw Land & Livestock Co., 99 M 95, 43 P2d 674 (1935).

Discontinuance of Highway: The owner of land abutting on a country highway, as distinguished from a city street, has no property or other vested right in the continuance of it as a highway and may not claim damages for its discontinuance, caused by the laying out of a new road by the Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission), for inconvenience caused to the owner in marketing his farm products, or for diverting traffic from his door, diminishing his trade and thus depreciating the value of his land. St. v. Hoblitt, 87 M 403, 288 P 181 (1930).

Default by Defendant: The defendant in condemnation proceedings is required to appear, either by demurrer or answer. If he fails so to do, he has no standing in court for any purpose and may not be heard in the subsequent proceedings, notwithstanding the provisions of this section that the commissioners shall hear the allegations and evidence of all persons interested, this section having reference to cases where the parties defendant are not in default. State ex rel. Culbertson Ferry Co. v. District Court, 49 M 595, 144 P 159 (1914); Yellowstone Park R.R. v. Bridger Coal Co., 34 M 545, 87 P 963 (1906).

Examination of Premises: Where land, sought to be condemned by a corporation for the construction of a dam to be used in the generation of electric power, had been flooded prior to the appointment of commissioners to determine the damages, an objection to their appointment was properly overruled, in the absence of any evidence that the water could not or would not be withdrawn to enable an examination of the premises. Spratt v. Helena Power Transmission Co., 37 M 60, 94 P 631 (1908).

Adjacent Property Damaged: Damages accruing to adjacent property from improper construction of a railroad are not allowable in condemnation proceedings for a railroad right-of-way. Mont. R.R. v. Freeser, 29 M 210, 74 P 407 (1903).

Railroad Crossings: In condemnation proceedings by a railroad company to obtain parts of the right-of-way of another road, the question of damages for crossings may be properly referred to commissioners. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry. v. Mont. Union Ry., 16 M 504, 41 P 232 (1895).

MEASURE OF DAMAGES

Determination of Fair Market Value Proper — Expert Testimony Properly Allowed: In condemning a parcel of defendants' property for a state highway project, the state's expert testified considering possible depreciation of the remainder of the property based on how the property was being used, the impact of any buildings on the property, no unreasonable impairment of access to the remainder of the property, comparable land sales in the area, and the value of comparable land without highway access. This testimony regarding fair market value was not considered speculative or conjectural, and the District Court properly allowed it. Dept. of Transportation v. Simonson, 2004 MT 60, 320 M 249, 87 P3d 416 (2004).

Lack of Evidence on Impact of Taking on Value of Remaining Property — Jury Instructions on Compensation for Taking of Access Proper: The District Court instructed the jury that defendants were not entitled to compensation merely because traffic access was diverted because of road construction or for defendants' loss of business resulting from the taking of a part of defendants' property. Defendants contended that the instructions were an abuse of discretion because they were not seeking compensation for access impairment, traffic diversion, or loss of business, but rather that those factors had caused severance damages when the remaining property's commercial value sustained a permanent market value loss, entitling defendants to a new trial. The Supreme Court disagreed. Defendants failed to offer any evidence of a loss of revenue from their business and the impact of the loss on the fair market value of the remainder of the property. Thus, the jury instructions did not materially affect defendants' substantial rights, and the motion for a new trial was properly denied. Dept. of Transportation v. Simonson, 2004 MT 60, 320 M 249, 87 P3d 416 (2004).

Measure of Damages for Loss of Use of Land Leased From State: The landowner was entitled to compensation for loss of use of land leased from the state only in the amount of her lease payments to the state. Section 77-6-208 provides that any sublease of state leased lands may not be upon terms less advantageous to the sublessee than the terms given by the state. Since the landowner herself was not using the land, the only possible compensable loss she suffered was the amount for which she could have subleased the land. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways v. Donnes, 219 M 182, 711 P2d 805, 42 St. Rep. 1938 (1985).

Ascertainable Damages:

Where the defendant and others testified in an eminent domain proceeding to the fact that heat, noise, and dirt associated with the construction of an interstate frontage road would cause

"pig stress" to the hogs in the defendant's pig rearing business and the defendant's testimony regarding decreased property values was consonant with the testimony of a professional, experienced property appraiser, the Supreme Court held that the jury's verdict for the defendant was not based on speculative or conjectural evidence and was not excessive in light of the evidence presented. St. v. Howery, 204 M 417, 664 P2d 1387, 40 St. Rep. 975 (1983).

Evidence that the taking of land for highway purposes through cattle country would, after constructing fences, result in cattle breaking through the fences in search of water or when alarmed by automobiles, necessitating employment of additional help to make repairs, etc., was inadmissible as referring to an element of damage too remote, speculative, and conjectural. St. v. Bradshaw Land & Livestock Co., 99 M 95, 43 P2d 674 (1935).

Recoverable damages in eminent domain proceedings must be the natural and proximate consequence of the taking of the lands; they must be readily ascertainable and not remote, speculative, or contingent. St. v. Bradshaw Land & Livestock Co., 99 M 95, 43 P2d 674 (1935).

It is not every possible element of depreciation in value of land a portion of which is taken for highway purposes for which compensation may be awarded; recoverable damages must be the natural and proximate consequence of the taking; they must be direct and certain, actual, reasonable, and readily ascertainable, not remote, speculative, or contingent. Lewis & Clark County v. Nett, 81 M 261, 263 P 418 (1928).

Measure of Damages When Change in Access Has Caused Change in Value of Condemnee's Remaining Land: In an action to condemn 20.45 acres of land for the purpose of expanding a municipal airport, landowners appealed the commissioners' assessment to the District Court. Prior to trial, the District Court granted the airport board's motion in limine and excluded evidence on diminution of value of landowners' remaining land due to the abandonment of a county road contained in the condemned parcel, ruling that landowners had no legal interest in the continuance of a county road unless discontinuance of that road deprived them of access to their remaining property. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that although condemnees cannot recover damages for a reduction in traffic flow caused by discontinuance of a county road, they can recover damages if the change in access has caused a substantial change in value in the condemnees' land and landowners should have been permitted to introduce evidence on this issue. McCone County v. James, 198 M 430, 646 P2d 1209, 39 St. Rep. 1107 (1982).

Just Compensation Computed: Just compensation for a public taking of private land is to be computed as follows: the fair market value of the land taken, plus value of remainder before taking minus value of remainder after taking. Meagher County Newlan Creek Water District v. Walter, 169 M 358, 547 P2d 850 (1976).

Income Capitalization Method of Valuation Permissible: When income capitalization method entails less conjecture and uncertainty than alternative methods, it is the appropriate valuation method because, even though it is generally held that the best method of arriving at market value is recent sales of comparable property, where there are no comparable sales, evidence based upon revenue and valuation based in part thereon is competent and admissible. Dept. of Highways v. Hy-Grade Auto Court, 169 M 340, 546 P2d 1050 (1976).

Method of Calculating Value: Once proper foundation has been laid as to the witness's expertise, he should be permitted to give his opinion using any of the accepted means of calculating value, such as market data, reproduction costs, or income capitalization. Dept. of Highways v. Olsen, 166 M 139, 531 P2d 1330 (1975).

Valuation of Property by Owner: An owner of real property shall be qualified to estimate in a reasonable way the value of his property for the use to which he has been putting it. St. Highway Comm'n v. Marsh, 165 M 198, 527 P2d 573 (1974).

Award Greater Than Requested: Where jury in condemnation action awarded damages for land taken in excess of amount requested by landowner and testified to by expert appraisers, trial court properly granted a new trial, notwithstanding fact that total award was equal to amount sought by landowner as total damages. St. Highway Comm'n v. Emery, 156 M 507, 481 P2d 686 (1971).

Expert Testimony as to Value: Testimony of expert witnesses showing that although presently used for agricultural purposes, highest and best use of land was for residential subdivision, showing comparative values of similar land in same geographical area and showing how property could have been subdivided and how highway running through it detracted from its suitability for subdivision, was sufficient to sustain jury's verdict as against contention of state that expert witnesses based their opinions on mere speculation. St. Highway Comm'n v. Jacobs, 150 M 322, 435 P2d 274 (1967), explained in St. Highway Comm'n v. Wilcox, 155 M 176, 468 P2d 749 (1970).

Apportionment of Damages: It was not error for the jury to express its award of damages separately to lessor and lessee rather than state a single lump sum when such award was not excessive, was supported by substantial evidence, and did not reflect an increased valuation due solely to a distribution of interest. St. Highway Comm'n v. City Serv. Co., 142 M 559, 385 P2d 604 (1963), distinguished in St. Highway Comm'n v. Barnes, 151 M 300, 443 P2d 16 (1968).

Measure of Damages — Leasehold Interests: The proper value of a leasehold interest is the fair market value, not the market value less future rent to be paid. St. Highway Comm'n v. City Serv. Co., 142 M 559, 385 P2d 604 (1963).

Severance Damages: While ordinarily damages for the taking of land for highway purposes may be awarded for injury done to the particular lot or tract of land from which the right-of-way strip is taken regardless of what other lands the owner may possess, where a small tract from which the strip is sought to be taken is isolated from a ranch proper by a railroad but used for the pasturing of dairy cows milked upon the ranch, the additional inconvenience and danger in the use of the pasture by the construction of a highway on which automobiles are constantly passing may be considered as an item of damages, as may also the construction of a fence along the highway to maintain the inclosure. St. v. Hoblitt, 87 M 403, 288 P 181 (1930).

Fencing Costs: In the absence of statutory provision therefor, in determining the damages incident to the taking of ranchland for highway purposes, allowance may not be made for a fence as such, and proof of the necessity of fencing and its cost is proper only as a means of showing the depreciation in market value of the remaining land by reason of the taking of the highway strip. Lewis & Clark County v. Nett, 81 M 261, 263 P 418 (1928).

Measure of Damages: The measure of damages in a proceeding for the condemnation of land for a public highway is the fair cash market value of the land sought to be condemned with the depreciation of such value of the land from which the strip is to be taken, less allowable deductions for benefits proven, the values to be determined as of the date of the commencement of the proceeding. Lewis & Clark County v. Nett, 81 M 261, 263 P 418 (1928).

Benefits Offset: Where land is taken by a railroad company for right-of-way purposes, general neighborhood benefits resulting to the owner in common with others from the construction of the road, the building of a depot, elevator, etc., but not peculiar or special to himself, may not be set off against the damages resulting to him from the taking of the land; hence evidence of such general benefits was properly excluded. Gallatin Valley Elec. Ry. v. Neible, 57 M 27, 186 P 689 (1919).

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 330 in (2) inserted reference to 60-4-104(4) and (5); and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 15, 2003.

Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 330, L. 2003, provided: "[This act] applies to actions initiated on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 15, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 125 in (2) substituted "condemnor" for "plaintiff"; in (2)(b) and (3) substituted "condemnee" for "property owner"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Interim Study Bill — Eminent Domain: Chapter 125, L. 2001, was enacted as a result of an interim study. See Eminent Domain in Montana, published by the Legislative Environmental Policy Office, May 2001.

1991 Amendment: Substituted references to Department of Transportation for references to Department of Highways. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1981 Amendments: Chapter 257 substituted "date of the service of the summons" for "date on which the property owner surrenders possession of the property in accordance with the terms of such order" in (2).

Chapter 531 substituted "current fair market value" for "actual value" in the first sentence of (1) and inserted "current fair market" before "value" where it appears throughout the rest of the section.

Highway Beautification Act: The Federal Highway Beautification Act of 1965, referred to in this section, is found at 23 U.S.C. §§131, 136, 139.

Case Notes

Inverse Condemnation Compensation Based on Value of Land When Land Is Seized: Due to inconsistencies between original surveys and actual square footage found near a right-of-way, Missoula claimed extra area belonged to the city rather than to adjacent landowners, and during litigation, the city completed improvements on the disputed land. The District Court determined that landowners should be compensated for the encumbrance and awarded compensation based on the amount the land was worth after the improvements. On appeal, the city cited 70-30-302, which provides that compensation should be based on value on the date of the summons. The Supreme Court declined to apply 70-30-302 to an inverse condemnation, noting that the proper compensation for an inverse condemnation is the value of the land at the time it is seized. Wohl v. Missoula, 2013 MT 46, 369 Mont. 108, 300 P.3d 1119.

Interest Accruing From Date of Determination of Property Value According to Terms of Condemnation Agreement: The parties entered into an agreement that granted possession of condemned property to defendant, and plaintiff subsequently filed an inverse condemnation action and was awarded a judgment. Plaintiff asserted that pursuant to 70-30-302, interest on the judgment should be paid from the date of the service of summons, preceding the order granting possession. Defendant disagreed, and the Supreme Court held that 70-30-302 does not apply to inverse condemnation proceedings. Rather, 70-30-302 assesses interest when the process described in 70-30-311 puts a condemning plaintiff into possession of the condemned property, but in this case, that process was not used. Instead, the parties' agreement provided that interest would not accrue until the final determination of value was made, which occurred when the jury arrived at its verdict. Therefore, the District Court properly decided that, pursuant to the condemnation agreement, interest began on the date of the jury's verdict. K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Total Compensation in Condemnation to Include Value of Condemned Property and Severance Damages: The city of Whitefish condemned 7,234 square feet of plaintiff's property, but conveyed to plaintiff 10,175 square feet of city property contiguous to plaintiff's lot. The conveyance was intended as severance damages to offset the harm of condemnation. The parties entered an agreement that plaintiff would grant possession of the condemned property to the city and that the city would pay plaintiff $130,000 to convey the 10,175 square foot adjacent lot. The agreement also stated that the parties were unable to agree on the value of the condemned property, the severance damages to plaintiff's remaining property, and the value of the conveyed property. Eventually plaintiff filed a complaint for inverse condemnation and breach of the agreement when the parties were unable to agree on the property values and severance damages. The District Court held that the only issue for the jury was to determine the amount that plaintiff was entitled to for compensation, and the jury was not asked to determine any severance damages owing to plaintiff. The court also disallowed any evidence of the $130,000 payment because that money was considered for severance damages only and could not be considered by the jury in determining plaintiff's compensation for the condemned property. The court further disallowed the city from presenting any evidence regarding the conveyed property because it had not yet been deeded to plaintiff, and absent unity of ownership, the conveyed property could not be considered when determining the fair market value of plaintiff's remaining property after the condemnation. Last, the court determined that plaintiff's "cost-to-cure" damages were noncompensable because plaintiff's access remained the same after condemnation. During trial, various experts presented differing values for the condemned property. The jury ultimately found for plaintiff and held that the city owed $161,000 for the condemned property. The District Court also awarded plaintiff $94,788.23 as litigation expenses. The city appealed, and plaintiff cross-appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court misinterpreted the agreement and improperly limited the issues presented to the jury. The court noted that total compensation in an eminent domain case involves both the value of the condemned property and severance damages, including depreciation suffered as a result of condemnation. In order for the jury to consider all circumstances surrounding the condemnation, a new trial was required, so the case was reversed and remanded. K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Determination of Fair Market Value Proper — Expert Testimony Properly Allowed: In condemning a parcel of defendants' property for a state highway project, the state's expert testified considering possible depreciation of the remainder of the property based on how the property was being used, the impact of any buildings on the property, no unreasonable impairment of access to the remainder of the property, comparable land sales in the area, and the value of comparable land without highway access. This testimony regarding fair market value was not considered speculative or conjectural, and the District Court properly allowed it. Dept. of Transportation v. Simonson, 2004 MT 60, 320 M 249, 87 P3d 416 (2004).

Lack of Evidence on Impact of Taking on Value of Remaining Property — Jury Instructions on Compensation for Taking of Access Proper: The District Court instructed the jury that defendants were not entitled to compensation merely because traffic access was diverted because of road construction or for defendants' loss of business resulting from the taking of a part of defendants' property. Defendants contended that the instructions were an abuse of discretion because they were not seeking compensation for access impairment, traffic diversion, or loss of business, but rather that those factors had caused severance damages when the remaining property's commercial value sustained a permanent market value loss, entitling defendants to a new trial. The Supreme Court disagreed. Defendants failed to offer any evidence of a loss of revenue from their business and the impact of the loss on the fair market value of the remainder of the property. Thus, the jury instructions did not materially affect defendants' substantial rights, and the motion for a new trial was properly denied. Dept. of Transportation v. Simonson, 2004 MT 60, 320 M 249, 87 P3d 416 (2004).

Interest Owed on State Highway Right-of-Way Condemnation Agreement Pursuant to Clear Language of Stipulation: The Department of Transportation filed a condemnation action against defendants in connection with a highway construction project. As part of the action, the parties entered a stipulation granting the Department possession of the right-of-way in exchange for $35,780, $11,000 payable immediately and $24,780 still owing, plus interest, at 10% a year, on the final award or settlement from the date of service of summons until the date of withdrawal by defendants. A dispute arose over the amount of interest owed. The District Court applied this section and determined that the Department owed interest on $7,187 of the total remainder, the amount of land-leveling costs, which the Department paid. Defendants appealed the order, contending that interest was actually owed on the entire $24,780 remaining settlement. The Supreme Court agreed. The language in the stipulation was clear and unambiguous and required the Department to pay interest on the excess of the final settlement award, which was $24,780. The District Court erred in applying the statute to the exclusion of the actual stipulation language to which the parties agreed. The clear language of the stipulation and the intent of the parties controlled. The case was remanded with instructions to order the Department to pay interest on the entire final settlement, with credit for amounts already paid. St. v. Asbeck, 2003 MT 337, 318 M 431, 80 P3d 1272 (2003).

Condemnation of Parking Lot — Error in Refusing Instruction Regarding Prior Stipulation on Minimum Parking Spaces: Prior to trial of a condemnation action by the city of Great Falls against the Temple Baptist Church to condemn the church's parking lot, the city and church stipulated that 272 parking spaces were the minimum necessary for the church under the city zoning ordinances. In the course of the trial on the issue of damages, the District Court allowed city employees to testify and the city attorney to argue that it was conceivable that less than 272 spaces would be required or that a variance from that number could be obtained. However, the District Court refused to give a requested instruction informing the jury that the city had agreed to 272 spaces. The Supreme Court held that under these circumstances, it was error for the District Court to refuse to give the instruction and remanded the case for a new trial. Great Falls v. Temple Baptist Church, Inc., 260 M 319, 859 P2d 1015, 50 St. Rep. 1078 (1993).

Valuation of Property — No Error in District Court's Limitation of Expert's and Owner's Testimony: In the course of condemnation proceedings by the city of Great Falls against the Temple Baptist Church, the District Court limited the testimony of the church's expert witness and the testimony of the church's owner. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in not allowing the church's expert to present testimony on the "cost to cure" method of valuation of the property. This method of compensation would have required the city to compensate the church for additional property purchased by the church. The Supreme Court relied on the method of valuation approved in Meagher County Water District v. Walter, 169 M 358, 547 P2d 850 (1976), and held that the District Court was under no obligation to allow discussion of another method of valuation. The District Court also properly exercised its discretion in striking the testimony concerning sales that the District Court felt were not comparable and in limiting the speculative and conjectural testimony of the church's owner concerning the history of the church and its plans for the future. Great Falls v. Temple Baptist Church, Inc., 260 M 319, 859 P2d 1015, 50 St. Rep. 1078 (1993), followed in K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Interest Prior to "Taking" Included in Condemnation Award: After landowners rejected the city's offer for vacant land, the city of Billings initiated a condemnation proceeding to take the property. At trial, the District Court did not instruct the jury to include interest from the date of the summons as part of the fair market price in the condemnation award despite a request from the landowners for such an instruction. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that landowners who are deprived of all economically viable use of their property as a result of a condemnation proceeding are entitled to interest from the date of service of the takings summons. Billings v. Hunt, 257 M 99, 847 P2d 715, 50 St. Rep. 175 (1993).

State as Condemning Agency — Compensation for Vagrant Surface Waters Required: The state, as a condemning agency, is held to a standard of paying just compensation for land when the diversion of vagrant surface waters causes damage to private lands. St. v. Feenan, 231 M 255, 752 P2d 182, 45 St. Rep. 589 (1988).

Burden of Proof: The landowner has the burden in eminent domain proceedings to prove entitlement to just compensation in excess of that offered by the condemnor. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways v. Donnes, 219 M 182, 711 P2d 805, 42 St. Rep. 1938 (1985).

Fair Market Value — Inconvenience: The amount of compensation to be awarded must be based on the market value of the property at the time of taking. Only when inconvenience results in a diminution of the market value of the property is it compensated. Compensation cannot be for inconvenience per se. The damage being compensated must be to the value of the property itself. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways v. DeTienne, 218 M 249, 707 P2d 534, 42 St. Rep. 1557 (1985).

Fair Market Value — Location of Building: When a landowner objected to the Highway Department's (now Department of Transportation's) motion to exclude evidence of the location of a building on the condemned land and the jury found the landowner was "negligent" in constructing a building as close to the highway as he did, the landowner cannot later complain. There is no evidence that the jury based its decision on the legal doctrine of negligence rather than the evidence, and the jury statement does not constitute reversible error. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways v. DeTienne, 218 M 249, 707 P2d 534, 42 St. Rep. 1557 (1985).

Fair Market Value — Sales to Condemnors: In a condemnation action, the District Court granted the Highway Department's (now Department of Transportation's) motion to prevent testimony from other landowners along the project regarding their sales to the Department. The Supreme Court affirmed and held that sales to condemnors are not admissible to establish fair market value when the sales are part of the same project which resulted in the condemnation of other property, however similar the property may be to that in controversy, and regardless of whether the payment was the result of a settlement, an award, or a jury verdict. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways v. DeTienne, 218 M 249, 707 P2d 534, 42 St. Rep. 1557 (1985).

Severance Damages — Change in Access to Uncondemned Parcel: In an action to condemn 20.45 acres of land for the purpose of expanding a municipal airport, landowners appealed the commissioners' assessment to the District Court. Prior to trial, the District Court granted the airport board's motion in limine and excluded evidence on diminution of value of landowners' remaining land due to the abandonment of a county road contained in the condemned parcel, ruling that landowners had no legal interest in the continuance of a county road unless discontinuance of that road deprived them of access to their remaining property. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that although condemnees cannot recover damages for a reduction in traffic flow caused by discontinuance of a county road, they can recover damages if the change in access has caused a substantial change in value in the condemnees' land, and landowners should have been permitted to introduce evidence on this issue. McCone County v. James, 198 M 430, 646 P2d 1209, 39 St. Rep. 1107 (1982).

Cross-Examination of Witness: When opportunity is afforded on cross-examination to develop facts on which a witness based his valuation of property but the opportunity is not taken, a party cannot claim prejudice on the ground that the witness had not stated the facts sufficiently so that the jury could weigh them. Dept. of Highways v. Schumacher, 180 M 329, 590 P2d 1110 (1979).

Figuring Market Value of Leasehold: The market value of a lease determines the compensation due a lessee. In figuring market value, the factors to be considered include length of the lease, rent to be paid, type of business operated on the property and expenses associated with it, advantages or disadvantages of the operation of the business in that location, and revenue produced from the property. Dept. of Highways v. Schumacher, 180 M 329, 590 P2d 1110 (1979).

Interest Rate: The proper method of calculating interest in eminent domain cases is to apply the 6% interest rate for all periods before July 1, 1975, when the interest rate was increased to 10%, and to apply the 10% interest rate after that date. Dept. of Highways v. Schumacher, 180 M 329, 590 P2d 1110 (1979).

Jury Award: The jury award will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is so obviously out of proportion to the injury done as to be in excess of just compensation. Dept. of Highways v. Schumacher, 180 M 329, 590 P2d 1110 (1979).

Market Value: The test of just compensation for property condemned is "market value", which is what a willing buyer would pay to a willing seller for the estate or interest being valued. Dept. of Highways v. Schumacher, 180 M 329, 590 P2d 1110 (1979).

Testimony as to Market Value: One who knows the real property in question and is familiar with the uses to which it may be put may testify as to its market value, even if the witness does not know of any sales and is not a technical expert. Dept. of Highways v. Schumacher, 180 M 329, 590 P2d 1110 (1979).

Interest to Run From Date of Possession: In an eminent domain action, interest on judgment (prior to the 1981 amendment) does not run from date of preliminary order of condemnation but from date possession of property is granted to condemnor by court. Dept. of Highways v. Hy-Grade Auto Court, 169 M 340, 546 P2d 1050 (1976).

Method of Calculating Value — Capitalization of Income Method: Income capitalization is an appropriate valuation method in cases where it entails less conjecture and uncertainty than alternative methods. Its applicability is determined less by the type of property taken than by a comparison of the relative certainty resulting from the use of various methods. Dept. of Highways v. Olsen, 166 M 139, 531 P2d 1330 (1975).

Market Value:

Where actual value as determined by jury is based on credible testimony as to market value of highest and best use for which land is available, the verdict and the judgment will not be set aside. St. Highway Comm'n v. Vaughan, 155 M 277, 470 P2d 967 (1970).

When there is a market for the type of property being condemned and the property has no other intrinsic value, courts will adopt a market value in determining the actual value of the property, which is nothing more than the price resulting from fair negotiations between a willing seller and buyer. St. Highway Comm'n v. Tubbs, 147 M 296, 411 P2d 739 (1966).

Where state not only took part of plaintiff's land but also eliminated an old channel of water and diked up a new channel, thus creating a flood basin on plaintiff's land, evidence of actual results of taking was proper, even though land values are usually measured as of the date of summons. St. Highway Comm'n v. Biastoch Meats, Inc., 145 M 261, 400 P2d 274 (1965).

The proper value of a leasehold interest is the fair market value, not the market value less future rent to be paid. St. Highway Comm'n v. City Serv. Co., 142 M 559, 385 P2d 604 (1963).

"Actual value" spoken of in this section (prior to the 1981 amendment) is the market value or the price that would in all probability result from fair negotiation, where the seller is willing to sell and the buyer desires to buy. St. v. Milanovich, 142 M 410, 384 P2d 752 (1963).

Lessee is entitled to be reimbursed for the taking of his lease, and the measure is the actual market value of said lease at the time of taking. No lesser measure may be permitted. St. v. Crow, 142 M 270, 384 P2d 273 (1963).

"Actual value" as used in this section (prior to the 1981 amendment) means market value. St. v. Peterson, 134 M 52, 328 P2d 617 (1958).

In attempting to ascertain market value, the location of the land, the character of the neighborhood, and all things surrounding the property may be shown. St. v. Peterson, 134 M 52, 328 P2d 617 (1958).

The "actual value" which under this section (prior to the 1981 amendment) shall be the measure of compensation for land taken under the power of eminent domain is the price which would in all probability result from fair negotiation, where the seller is willing to sell and the buyer desires to buy—the market value. St. v. Lee, 103 M 482, 63 P2d 135 (1936); St. v. Hoblitt, 87 M 403, 288 P 181 (1930).

The test for determining the market value of land sought to be acquired by condemnation is "What is its value for any commercial use in the immediate present, or in reasonable anticipation in the near future?" St. v. Hoblitt, 87 M 403, 288 P 181 (1930).

Commercial Use: Where Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) in order to show public access to highway presented two appraisal witnesses to show that there was access at a certain exit, in which case there would be no loss of commercial usefulness, it was quite proper and necessary to rebut this testimony and to let the jury know the type of easement provided for the access exit. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Wheeler, 148 M 246, 419 P2d 492 (1966).

Improvements:

In eminent domain proceeding trial court did not err in excluding evidence concerning improvement of sole access road to ranch property remaining after Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) had taken part of the property for right-of-way for interstate highway, where any changes in access were made after the date of service of the summons in the condemnation action. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Wheeler, 148 M 246, 419 P2d 492 (1966).

"Improvements" upon property are a part thereof. St. v. Peterson, 134 M 52, 328 P2d 617 (1958).

Assessment of Compensation: Where condemnee's house was between 50 and 60 years old and had been converted into a multiple-family dwelling, court did not err in excluding evidence of reconstruction costs or comparable sales elsewhere in determining value of the property since there was no way of determining depreciation of the old house in arriving at reconstruction cost figures, nor were there sufficient comparable sales in the area. St. Highway Comm'n v. Tubbs, 147 M 296, 411 P2d 739 (1966).

Appeal: In eminent domain proceedings the findings of the District Court will generally not be disturbed on appeal unless they are so obviously and palpably out of proportion to the injury done as to be in excess of just compensation provided for by Art. III, sec. 14, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 29, 1972 Mont. Const.). St. Highway Comm'n v. Woodcock, 147 M 291, 411 P2d 357 (1966).

Cost of Moving Personal Property: Where friends of condemnees gratuitously aided them in moving personal property from condemned realty, condemnees were not entitled to recover the costs of their friends' labor as an element of damages. St. Highway Comm'n v. Manry, 143 M 382, 390 P2d 97 (1963).

Depreciation on Inventory: This section requires the state to pay for any damage to personal property removed from condemned land, including any depreciation in the inventory value of such property. St. Highway Comm'n v. City Serv. Co., 142 M 559, 385 P2d 604 (1963).

Severance Damages: To fully determine damages caused by severance of condemned land, 70-30-301 is not read alone; rather it must be read in connection with this section as amended. St. v. Milanovich, 142 M 410, 384 P2d 752 (1963).

Depreciation Without Taking: No cause of action existed in favor of plaintiff for taking or damaging his property where complaint alleged depreciation of plaintiff's real property and personal hardship by reason of proposed construction of interstate highway through city. Plaintiff had no right to compensation until his property was actually taken or damaged. Bakken v. St., 142 M 166, 382 P2d 550 (1963).

Income as Basis for Value: Income could be used as a basis for arriving at market value in condemnation case where testimony of the various witnesses for both the landowners and the state, who explained their method of valuation, used the same general approach in determining the loss in value, which approach was labeled the "capitalization of income" approach. St. v. Heltborg, 140 M 196, 369 P2d 521 (1962).

Potential Use of Property:

Evidence may be introduced as to the various uses to which the property is adapted, even though it has never been put to such use in fact. St. v. Peterson, 134 M 52, 328 P2d 617 (1958).

The owner of land sought to be condemned has the right to obtain its market value, based upon its availability for the most valuable purpose for which it can be used, whether so used or not, and since under this section the market value at the date of the summons controls, the land must be shown to have been marketable for the purpose stated at that time; the showing must be that the use is one to which the land may reasonably be applied; speculative uses or remote and conjectural possibilities, such as that farmlands might be platted into town lots or as to what they would bring if certain fruit trees were planted thereon, are not to be taken into consideration. St. v. Hoblitt, 87 M 403, 288 P 181 (1930), followed in In re Creation of W. Great Falls Flood Control & Drainage District, 199 M 261, 648 P2d 297, 39 St. Rep. 1333 (1982).

Interest on Award: Where damages are assessed by a jury in condemnation proceedings after and in excess of an award by commissioners, it is proper for the court to add and fix the date and rate of interest in its judgment, since interest is a matter regulated by statute with which the jury has nothing to do. Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, 40 M 254, 106 P 5 (1910).

Improper Construction of Improvements: This section and 70-30-301 definitely fix the time when compensation and damages accrue and also establish the right to recover damages which will accrue to that portion of a larger tract not sought to be condemned; the basis for the appraisal is the proper construction of the improvements as to the entire tract, and additional damages cannot be given by reason of an improper construction of the improvements. Mont. R.R. v. Freeser, 29 M 210, 74 P 407 (1903).

Case Notes

Motion to Dismiss for Failure to Pay Commissioners' Award — Notice of Award: The District Court properly denied the condemnee's motion to dismiss based on failure to pay the commissioners' award since no final judgment had occurred because of the failure of the District Court clerk to serve a notice of the award, together with a true copy of the report, upon the parties in the manner required by 70-30-303. Service of that notice provides a definitely ascertainable time which marks the start of the time for appeal. In this case there was no legal duty upon the condemnor to make payment in the absence of a final judgment. It is only when a condemnor has failed to make payment of a final judgment that the condemnee is entitled to an order of dismissal of the action under 70-30-308. Bozeman Parking Comm'n v. First Trust Co. of Mont., 190 M 107, 619 P2d 168, 37 St. Rep. 1610 (1980).

Notice of Report Mailed to Party — When Time to Appeal Begins to Run: Where notice of the commissioner's report was mailed, the time for appeal of the report, as provided for in 70-30-304, begins to run upon receipt of notice of filing. Where a party receives actual notice of the filing of the report and fails to file a notice of appeal within the time provided by law, the court is without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. St. v. Rogers, 184 M 181, 602 P2d 560 (1979).

Alteration of Award: A District Court cannot alter or amend a commissioners' award after it has been filed with the District Court and notice thereof given to the parties by the Clerk. State ex rel. Frelich v. District Court, 141 M 169, 375 P2d 1016 (1962).

Appeal From Commissioners' Award: A commissioner's assessment is not a judgment but merely an award by the lay commissioners of damages contained in their report, and where an appeal has been perfected by the condemner from the assessment, the condemner is entitled to have a necessary party added as a party defendant. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 136 M 362, 348 P2d 132 (1959).

Case Notes

Final Judgment for Appellant Greater Than Value Commission Award — Appellee Costs Not Recoverable: The Department of Transportation offered the Simonsons an amount for their condemned property that exceeded the amount ultimately awarded by a jury. The District Court concluded that under this section, the Simonsons were not entitled to any expenses of litigation, but that the state was entitled to costs because the Simonsons received less than the state offered. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed. Although the Simonsons' judgment award was less than the original offer by the Department of Transportation, it was more than the amount offered by the condemnation commission, which was the amount actually appealed. Because the Simonsons succeeded in changing the final award to their advantage on appeal, the state was not entitled to costs. Dept. of Transportation v. Simonson, 2004 MT 60, 320 M 249, 87 P3d 416 (2004).

Burden of Proof: The landowner has the burden in eminent domain proceedings to prove entitlement to just compensation in excess of that offered by the condemnor. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways v. Donnes, 219 M 182, 711 P2d 805, 42 St. Rep. 1938 (1985).

Motion to Dismiss for Failure to Pay Commissioners' Award — Notice of Award: The District Court properly denied the condemnee's motion to dismiss based on failure to pay the commissioners' award since no final judgment had occurred because of the failure of the District Court clerk to serve a notice of the award, together with a true copy of the report, upon the parties in the manner required by 70-30-303. Service of that notice provides a definitely ascertainable time which marks the start of the time for appeal. In this case there was no legal duty upon the condemnor to make payment in the absence of a final judgment. It is only when a condemnor has failed to make payment of a final judgment that the condemnee is entitled to an order of dismissal of the action under 70-30-308. Bozeman Parking Comm'n v. First Trust Co. of Mont., 190 M 107, 619 P2d 168, 37 St. Rep. 1610 (1980).

Actual Notice by Mail of Filing — Untimely Appeal: Although 70-30-303 requires that notice that the commissioners' report has been filed be given in the same manner as a summons, where a party receives actual notice of the commissioners' report and fails to file notice of appeal within the time provided by law, the court is without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. St. v. Rogers, 184 M 181, 602 P2d 560 (1979).

When Time for Appeal Extended: In computing the time period for the purposes of appeal of the report of the commissioners, if the notice is mailed, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure provide for a 3-day extension. Furthermore, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure provide for an extension if the last day of the period falls on a Sunday. St. v. Rogers, 184 M 181, 602 P2d 560 (1979).

Expert Appraisal Based on Use Other Than Highest: The court did not err in admitting testimony of the landowner's appraiser relative to valuation of the landowner's property for a recreational use in small tracts rather than as a whole because that portion of the cattle ranch subject to condemnation had a strong potential for river frontage tracts. St. Highway Comm'n v. Marsh, 175 M 460, 575 P2d 38 (1978).

Landowner-Witness Rule: The landowner-witness rule in valuation of property in a condemnation proceeding consists of two parts: the landowner on prima facie showing of ownership may testify as to value so long as his testimony is reasonable and the value testified to is for the use to which he is putting the land; if the landowner desires to testify as to value when used for other purposes, he must have some peculiar means of forming an intelligent and correct judgment beyond what is presumed to be possessed by men generally. St. Highway Comm'n v. Marsh, 175 M 460, 575 P2d 38 (1978), followed in K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Timely Notice of Appeal: State allowed 3 additional days to file notice of appeal because notice was served by mail and last day of period fell on a Sunday. Dept. of Highways v. Helehan, 171 M 473, 559 P2d 817 (1977).

Apportionment of Damages:

The requirement of 70-30-301 that the entire award be determined first and then allocated between respective defendants is applicable to jury awards under this section, but where the jury was instructed to first determine the total award and then apportion it in a single proceeding and the jury did so in a single verdict, there was no error in the absence of a showing of prejudice or excessiveness. Dept. of Highways v. Hy-Grade Auto Court, 169 M 340, 546 P2d 1050 (1976).

It was not error for the jury to express its award of damages separately to lessor and lessee rather than state a single lump sum when such award was not excessive, was supported by substantial evidence, and did not reflect an increased valuation due solely to a distribution of title. St. Highway Comm'n v. City Serv. Co., 142 M 559, 385 P2d 604 (1963), distinguished in St. Highway Comm'n v. Barnes, 151 M 300, 443 P2d 16 (1968).

Bifurcated Trial Not Required: It was not error for jury to determine a total award and thereafter apportion award among the lessor and lessee as jury was properly admonished to first ascertain entire award as though property were owned by one person, then to apportion this sum between lessor and lessee. Bifurcated trial is not required as court will presume that jury, in reaching its verdict, followed instructions given to it by trial judge. Dept. of Highways v. Hy-Grade Auto Court, 169 M 340, 546 P2d 1050 (1976).

Method of Calculating Value — Evidence: The application of the income capitalization method goes to the weight of the expert's testimony and not to its admissibility. When alternative methods of valuation were presented to the jury by experts, there was no error in permitting the use of the income capitalization method. Dept. of Highways v. Olsen, 166 M 139, 531 P2d 1330 (1975).

Witnesses on Appeal: On appeal by state from condemnation award, where it was made clear on direct examination that expert witness for landowner had been one of the commissioners appointed to appraise damages, it was reversible error for the state to try to impeach the witness by using the commission award in order to get the whole commission award before the jury. St. v. Bare, 141 M 288, 377 P2d 357 (1962).

Issues Considered on Appeal:

The state cannot appeal from decision of commissioners, contesting right of county to receive damages, when it did not raise the issue in the pleading stage. St. v. Park County, 141 M 220, 376 P2d 998 (1962).

The sole question presented to the District Court on appeal from the award of commissioners in condemnation proceedings, under this section, is as to the amount of damages to be allowed, and the judgment should determine that issue and no other. Great N. Ry. v. Benjamin, 51 M 167, 149 P 968 (1915).

If commissioners appointed to assess damages in eminent domain proceedings do not perform their whole duty, the injured party may appeal. Spratt v. Helena Power Transmission Co., 37 M 60, 94 P 631 (1908).

Alteration of Award: Improper order of District Court in striking certain damages from commissioners' award could not be corrected where an appeal had been taken from the award. State ex rel. Frelich v. District Court, 141 M 169, 375 P2d 1016 (1962).

Parties Added on Appeal: A commissioner's assessment is not a judgment but merely an award by the lay commissioners of damages contained in their report, and where an appeal has been perfected by the condemner from the assessment, the condemner is entitled to have a necessary party added as a party defendant. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 136 M 362, 348 P2d 132 (1959).

View of Premises by Jury: A view by the jury of premises involved in an eminent domain proceeding does not amount to the taking of testimony but is allowed to enable the jury better to understand the evidence received at the hearing. St. v. Lee, 103 M 482, 63 P2d 135 (1936).

Costs on Appeal: The provision for award of costs to the respondent if the party appealing to the District Court does not succeed in changing to his advantage the amount of damages awarded applies only to an appeal by defendant; hence, where plaintiff State appealed and the court exercised the discretion vested in it by section 93-9921, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and awarded costs against plaintiff, the damages awarded by the jury being substantially the same as those awarded by the commissioners, the Supreme Court will not interfere. St. v. Bradshaw Land & Livestock Co., 99 M 95, 43 P2d 674 (1935).

Assessment of Damages:

The provision that upon appeal from the award of the commissioners the damages "shall be reassessed upon the same principle as hereinbefore prescribed for the assessment of such damages by commissioners" simply means that the assessment shall be made conformably to 70-30-301, which has to do with a finding on the separate items of damages. St. v. Anderson, 92 M 313, 13 P2d 228 (1932).

Findings of the jury in condemnation proceedings, with relation to the amount of damages sustained by defendants by the taking of a railroad right-of-way through their lands, complained of as excessive, will not be disturbed on appeal unless they are so obviously and palpably out of proportion to the injury done as to be in excess of the "just compensation" provided for by Art. III, sec. 14, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 29, 1972 Mont. Const.). Yellowstone Park R.R. v. Bridger Coal Co., 34 M 545, 87 P 963 (1906). See also Lewis v. N. Pac. Ry., 36 M 207, 92 P 469 (1907).

Constitutional Rights:

In condemnation proceedings, the right to appeal is purely statutory and may be granted to or withheld from either party or both, at the discretion of the Legislature, if no constitutional provision is thereby infringed. Great N. Ry. v. Fiske, 54 M 231, 169 P 44 (1917).

Where a railroad company pays a sum into court on an award of damages made by commissioners for right-of-way for railroad purposes, this is to be regarded as a "just compensation", within Art. III, sec. 14, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 29, 1972 Mont. Const.), although the owner has appealed from the award; and the granting of an order by the court, allowing the railroad company possession and use of such right-of-way pending such appeal, is proper. State ex rel. Volunteer Min. Co. v. McHatton, 15 M 159, 38 P 711 (1894).

Entire Award as Subject of Appeal: If there is any right to appeal under this section, given to a railroad company, from the judgment on an award by commissioners in condemnation proceedings instituted by the company, such appeal must, in view of 70-30-301 through 70-30-303 and 70-30-307 through 70-30-311, be taken from the entire award; it cannot be taken from such portions of the award only as the condemner is dissatisfied with. Great N. Ry. v. Fiske, 54 M 231, 169 P 44 (1917).

Title of Defendant: Where, in a proceeding to condemn a right-of-way, plaintiff alleges title in defendant, a contention that the verdict for damages was not supported by the evidence because there was no evidence that defendant's title was valid cannot be considered by the Supreme Court. Helena & Livingston Smelting & Reduction Co. v. Lynch, 25 M 497, 65 P 919 (1901).

2013 Amendment: Chapter 371 in (2) substituted "prevails either by the court not allowing condemnation or by the condemnee" for "prevails by", after "final" inserted "written", and after "condemnor" inserted "that was rejected pursuant to the facts necessary in 70-30-111(1)(d)". Amendment effective April 30, 2013.

Saving Clause: Section 6, Ch. 371, L. 2013, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 7, Ch. 371, L. 2013, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 9, Ch. 371, L. 2013, provided: "[This act] applies to complaints for condemnation filed on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 30, 2013.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 125 in (2) substituted "condemnee" for "private property owner"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Case Notes

Attorney Fees — Customary Hourly Rates: The Department of Transportation initiated a condemnation action concerning a portion of the bank's property. After a hearing, the District Court dismissed the complaint with prejudice and awarded the bank all necessary expenses of litigation. The court ordered the bank to submit a request for reasonable and necessary attorney fees, expert witness fees, exhibit costs, and court costs. Instead, the bank filed affidavits from two of its attorneys in support of the award of fees and necessary expenses of litigation. The Department objected based upon 70-30-306(2) and also submitted affidavits from local attorneys supporting lower hourly rates. The court held a hearing and applied jurisprudential factors and awarded fees based on varying hourly rates for the attorneys involved in the case. The Department appealed, contending that 70-30-306(2) does not require the consideration of the jurisprudential factors enumerated in Forrester & MacGinniss v. B&M Co., 29 M 397, 74 P 1088 (1904). The Supreme Court held that the plain "customary hourly rates" language in 70-30-306(2) means that reasonable and necessary attorney fees are to be computed in a condemnation case based on hourly rates typical or common for a nonspecific attorney's services in the county in which the trial is held. The District Court erred in considering the jurisprudential factors. The case was remanded for computation of attorney fees. St. v. American Bank of Montana, 2008 MT 362, 346 M 405, 195 P3d 844 (2008).

Costs of Litigation in Inverse Condemnation Cases: In providing for costs of litigation in condemnation cases, the Montana Constitution does not distinguish between condemnation litigation initiated by a government entity and condemnation cases initiated by the property owner, and Montana statutes do not distinguish between inverse condemnation and traditional condemnation cases. The only requirement for an award of litigation expenses is that the condemnee prevail by obtaining a judgment in excess of the condemnor's pretrial offer. In the present case, defendant asserted that under 70-31-303, plaintiff was not entitled to litigation expenses in an inverse condemnation case because federal money was not involved, but the Supreme Court affirmed that litigation expenses must be awarded in inverse condemnation cases when the condemnee prevails, as provided in 70-30-305. K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Property Taxes Properly Not Awarded as Litigation Expense: Plaintiff asserted that the District Court erred by not awarding property taxes as necessary litigation expenses as part of an inverse condemnation judgment. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. Under 70-30-305 and 70-30-306, property taxes are not designated as a necessary cost of litigation. The court noted that 70-30-315 does allow for proration of property taxes in certain condemnation cases, but because the 1997 version of the statute applicable in this case used the word "plaintiff" to describe the party condemning the property, the statute did not apply to inverse condemnation cases in which the plaintiff was the condemnee. (Note that the 2001 Legislature amended 70-30-315 by changing "plaintiff" to "condemnor".) K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Proper Award of Attorney Fees and Costs in Condemnation Case: The Slacks owned a piece of land that the Department of Transportation wanted in order to expand Highway 2 into a four-lane highway near Kalispell. The Department offered the Slacks $43,150 for the property, but the Slacks refused to sell, so in 1993, the Department filed a complaint seeking to condemn the property. The Slacks hired an attorney, on a contingent fee basis, to represent them. Nearly a year later and about 1 month before a condemnation commission hearing, the Department offered the Slacks $168,069, plus interest and necessary litigation expenses as defined in 70-30-306. The Slacks accepted, and judgment was entered. The Slacks' attorney requested litigation expenses totaling $41,657.03. The Department considered the fees to be excessive, unnecessary, and unreasonable and moved to retax the fees. About 2 ½ years later, the Department offered the Slacks $26,000 to settle the claim for litigation expenses. The next day, the Slacks filed a supplemental memorandum of litigation expenses requesting an additional $50,407.84 for expenses incurred in the action for fees. The District Court awarded the Slacks $115,493 in litigation expenses and interest, including $46,577 in expenses incurred in settling the condemnation case, of which $29,483 was for attorney and paralegal fees calculated at 1996 rates, plus $62,547 for expenses incurred in the fee litigation. The Department appealed the award. The Supreme Court examined the award for attorney fees related to the condemnation case and concluded that the number of hours claimed by the Slacks was reasonable and not clearly erroneous. The 1996 rates applied by the District Court were affirmed, even though the work was done in 1993, because the court had discretion to adjust the expenses by awarding fees at current rates to account for delay in payment. Compensation awarded at historic hourly rates years after services are provided is not equivalent to the same amount received promptly as the services are performed. State ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Slack, 2001 MT 137, 305 M 488, 29 P3d 503 (2001).

Attorney Fees for Proving Amount of Attorney Fees Incurred in Litigation Generally Not Recoverable: After the condemnation proceeding between the parties was set for trial, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) made a final offer of settlement that included an offer to pay the plaintiffs' necessary litigation expenses up to the date of the settlement offer. The plaintiffs accepted the offer, but both sides disagreed on the amount to be given for necessary litigation expenses. The lower court awarded the plaintiffs' litigation expenses in an amount greater than that offered by the state but refused to award the plaintiffs' attorney fees for proving the amount of attorney fees incurred prior to the settlement offer date. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that in general the attorney fees for proving the amount of attorney fees incurred during litigation should be borne by the attorney and not his client or the other party. The court went on to state that other expenses incurred in proving necessary litigation expenses could be awarded to the party incurring them. St. v. McGuckin, 242 M 81, 788 P2d 926, 47 St. Rep. 590 (1990).

Time Spent With Consultants and With Experts Not Called as Witnesses — Cost of Litigation: Plaintiffs own a farm surrounded on three sides by the Flathead River and Flathead Lake. After Kerr Dam was built in 1939, the water table in the area began to rise. In 1960 plaintiffs filed suit claiming inverse condemnation of their land and damages due to the rising of the water table. The complaint was amended four times over the years and was finally tried in 1979. Defendant claimed that the cause was barred by prescription and the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiffs were awarded damages. Counsel's time spent with consultants examining scientific information is a proper cost of litigation, as are costs for experts never called as witnesses where they are necessary and proper for the case. Blasdel v. Mont. Power Co., 196 M 417, 640 P2d 889, 39 St. Rep. 219 (1982).

Attorney Fees and Costs Taxed After Final Judgment: When the condemnee filed its motion to tax costs and attorney fees, it was not entitled to a judgment on the award of the commissioners because the time for appeal had not begun to run on the day that the motion was filed. The Supreme Court rejected the condemnor's contention that an appeal from the commissioners' award must be perfected by one of the parties, and thereafter, within 30 days the condemnor must submit to the condemnee a written final offer of judgment before the condemnee is entitled to attorney fees and costs. That result is inconsistent with Art. II, sec. 29, Mont. Const. If a condemnee prevails in litigation, he is entitled to recover his expenses. Bozeman Parking Comm'n v. First Trust Co. of Mont., 190 M 107, 619 P2d 168, 37 St. Rep. 1610 (1980).

Attorney Fees and Costs — Verdict Lower Than Final Offer: The right to recover necessary costs of litigation does not vest when the suit is filed but vests only when the private property owner prevails, securing a higher verdict than the State's final offer. The State is not confined, as the landowner contends, to an offer of $6,000 made before the commissioners' value hearing. Before trial the State offered $20,100 as its final offer, which the landowner rejected. Because the jury proceeded to award a lesser amount, the landowner was not entitled to attorney fees and costs of litigation. St. v. Donnes, 187 M 338, 609 P2d 1213 (1980).

Payment of Attorney's Fees Before Trial: Where appellant in a condemnation action was awarded preliminary payment for his property interests prior to trial and withdrew $23,194.50 and paid $7,000 to his lawyer, the payment to the lawyer did not constitute "necessary expenses of litigation" pursuant to 70-30-305 and 70-30-306. St. v. Helehan, 186 M 286, 607 P2d 537 (1980).

Costs to Private Property Owner Denied When Final Award Not in Excess of Final Offer — Law of the Case Not Applicable: When the defendant did not receive an award in excess of the final offer of the condemnor, he was not entitled to the necessary expenses of litigation and was therefore not entitled to costs. The fact that on a previous appeal in the same case the Supreme Court mentioned attorney's fees and inadvertently failed to mention costs did not invoke the "law of the case" principle as between the parties involved. Dept. of Highways v. Burlingame, 185 M 183, 605 P2d 176 (1980).

Necessity of Expense of Appraiser Who Does Not Testify: The expense of an appraiser is a necessary expense and was properly awarded to the landowner even if the appraiser did not testify at the commission hearing. St. v. Rogers, 184 M 181, 602 P2d 560 (1979).

Reasonableness of Contingent Attorney's Fee Based on Agreement Made Prior to 1977 Amendment Precluding Contingent Fees: In eminent domain proceeding, attorney's fee of $9,600 based on a contingent fee agreement entered into in May of 1977 was properly awarded where respondent had introduced evidence as to the reasonableness of the contingent percentage and the appellant offered no evidence as to either a reasonable hourly rate or the reasonableness of the contingent percentage. St. v. Rogers, 184 M 181, 602 P2d 560 (1979).

Attorney Fees — When Right Thereto Arises: The right to necessary costs of litigation provided by 70-30-305 does not arise when the suit is filed but vests only when the private property owner prevails, securing a verdict higher than the state's final offer. St. v. Burlingame, 182 M 298, 597 P2d 51 (1979).

Attorney Fees: Because there is a clear constitutional requirement that attorney fees be paid in condemnation cases whenever the landowner prevails and because the words "condemnor" and "condemnee" were used in the statute implementing the constitutional provision, attorney fees were permitted in an inverse condemnation case. Rauser v. Toston Irrigation District, 172 M 530, 565 P2d 632 (1977).

Application to Cases Arising Prior to Effective Date: When the case arose prior to the effective date of this section but a verdict in favor of the private landowner was entered after the effective date, the landowner was entitled to compensation for necessary costs of litigation since the right vests when the private property owner prevails and secures a verdict higher than the state's final offer. Dept. of Highways v. Olsen, 166 M 139, 531 P2d 1330 (1975).

Case Notes

Computation of Attorney Fees in Condemnation Action: A property condemnation action was resolved by agreement of the parties, and the state agreed to pay defendants' necessary expenses of litigation. Defense counsel charged $250 an hour for 1,906 hours. The state challenged both the rate and the number of hours. Following a hearing, the District Court adjusted the number of hours to 1,205 but adopted the hourly rate, and the state appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. The District Court did not have the benefit of the later decision in Mont. Dept. of Transportation v. Am. Bank of Mont., 2008 MT 362, 346 M 405, 195 P3d 844 (2008), which stated that reasonable and necessary attorney fees awarded in a condemnation action must be computed on hourly rates typical or common for a nonspecific attorney's services in the county in which the trial is held. In this case, the state presented testimony from two attorneys in Flathead County that the usual and customary fee for an attorney in that county was $150 an hour, and that was the evidence upon which the District Court should have relied in setting the hourly fee. Therefore, the case was remanded for an adjustment of the rate to $150 an hour. St. v. Skyline Broadcasters, Inc., 2009 MT 193, 351 M 127, 211 P3d 189 (2009).

Attorney Fees — Customary Hourly Rates: The Department of Transportation initiated a condemnation action concerning a portion of the bank's property. After a hearing, the District Court dismissed the complaint with prejudice and awarded the bank all necessary expenses of litigation. The court ordered the bank to submit a request for reasonable and necessary attorney fees, expert witness fees, exhibit costs, and court costs. The court held a hearing and applied jurisprudential factors and awarded fees based on varying hourly rates for the attorneys involved in the case. The Department appealed, contending that 70-30-306(2) does not require the consideration of the jurisprudential factors enumerated in Forrester & MacGinniss v. B&M Co., 29 M 397, 74 P 1088 (1904). The Supreme Court held that the plain "customary hourly rates" language in 70-30-306(2) means that reasonable and necessary attorney fees are to be computed in a condemnation case based on hourly rates typical or common for a nonspecific attorney's services in the county in which the trial is held. The District Court erred in considering the jurisprudential factors. The case was remanded for computation of attorney fees. St. v. American Bank of Montana, 2008 MT 362, 346 M 405, 195 P3d 844 (2008).

Costs of Litigation in Inverse Condemnation Cases: In providing for costs of litigation in condemnation cases, the Montana Constitution does not distinguish between condemnation litigation initiated by a government entity and condemnation cases initiated by the property owner, and Montana statutes do not distinguish between inverse condemnation and traditional condemnation cases. The only requirement for an award of litigation expenses is that the condemnee prevail by obtaining a judgment in excess of the condemnor's pretrial offer. K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Property Taxes Properly Not Awarded as Litigation Expense: Plaintiff asserted that the District Court erred by not awarding property taxes as necessary litigation expenses as part of an inverse condemnation judgment. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. Under 70-30-305 and 70-30-306, property taxes are not designated as a necessary cost of litigation. The court noted that 70-30-315 does allow for proration of property taxes in certain condemnation cases, but because the 1997 version of the statute applicable in this case used the word "plaintiff" to describe the party condemning the property, the statute did not apply to inverse condemnation cases in which the plaintiff was the condemnee. (Note that the 2001 Legislature amended 70-30-315 by changing "plaintiff" to "condemnor".) K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Computation of Award of Attorney Fees on Basis of Contingent Fee Precluded — Use of Contingent Fee Agreement by Condemnee Not Precluded: The Slacks owned a piece of land that the Department of Transportation wanted in order to expand Highway 2 into a four-lane highway near Kalispell. The Department offered the Slacks $43,150 for the property, but the Slacks refused to sell, so in 1993, the Department filed a complaint seeking to condemn the property. The Slacks hired an attorney, on a contingent fee basis, to represent them. The Department ultimately settled the condemnation action and agreed to pay the Slacks $168,069, plus interest and necessary litigation expenses as defined in this section. After a disagreement arose regarding the amount of attorney fees, the Department argued that the Slacks' contingent fee agreement violated this section. The Supreme Court found that the plain language of this section unambiguously precludes the computation of an award of reasonable and necessary attorney fees on the basis of a contingent fee contract, but does not preclude condemnees from entering into contingent fee agreements with their attorneys. State ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Slack, 2001 MT 137, 305 M 488, 29 P3d 503 (2001).

Improper Award of Attorney Fees Incurred in Proving Attorney Fees: About 2 ½ years after settling a condemnation case, the Department of Transportation offered the Slacks $26,000 to settle their claim for litigation expenses. The next day, the Slacks filed a supplemental memorandum of litigation expenses requesting an additional $50,407.84 for expenses incurred in the action for fees. The District Court concluded that the Department had pursued litigation over the appropriate amount of litigation expenses in bad faith and awarded the Slacks $62,547 for expenses incurred in the fee litigation. The Department appealed the award of fees in the fee action. The Supreme Court examined the fees awarded for the fee litigation, applying St. v. McGuckin, 242 M 81, 788 P2d 926 (1990), for the proposition that the District Court has the authority to award attorney fees as a rare exception in which extraordinary circumstances justify the award of attorney fees incurred in proving the amount of attorney fees incurred in the underlying litigation. However, this was not one of those extraordinary circumstances that arises when the state's objection to the condemnee's fee claim is unreasonable. Here, the Department presented testimony from two experts who asserted that the attorney fees claimed in the fee litigation were excessive and duplicative, and although the District Court did not find the testimony compelling enough to grant a reduction in fees, the Department's claim could not be characterized as unreasonable. The District Court abused its discretion in awarding the Slacks attorney fees incurred in proving attorney fees, and that award was reversed. State ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Slack, 2001 MT 137, 305 M 488, 29 P3d 503 (2001), followed in K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008), regarding the necessity to demonstrate extraordinary circumstances to justify a request for fees on fees.

Blasdel v. Mont. Power Co., 196 M 417, 640 P2d 889, 39 St. Rep. 219 (1982).

Attorneys' Fees — Award for Services of Two Attorneys: An award for attorneys' fees for work of both an attorney representing respondent up to the appellate stage and a second attorney representing respondent through the appellate stage may properly be granted. Within the contemplation of Art. II, sec. 29, Mont. Const., "reasonable, necessary expenses of litigation" include fees paid to two attorneys representing the same party, particularly where the work does not overlap and there is no prejudice to the appellant. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Attorneys' Fees — Evidence of Value of Services: Evidence must be adduced to support an award of attorneys' fees. A hearing allowing for oral testimony, the introduction of exhibits, and the opportunity of a responsible party to cross-examine to test the reasonableness of the attorneys' fees claimed must support the award. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Attorneys' Fees — Reliance by Courts on Experts: In determining attorneys' fees, the court as a jury is not bound absolutely to the testimony of expert witnesses. It can reduce or increase the figures submitted to it by experts as reasonable attorneys' fees, and, as long as its findings are not clearly erroneous, the determination made in its discretion will not be disturbed. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Necessary Expense — Exhibit Costs: Exhibit costs are a "necessary expense" of litigation under 70-30-306, and the cost of preparing an exhibit such as hiring an expert is included in exhibit costs. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Timeliness of Motion for Necessary Litigation Costs: Defendant/respondent filed a motion for determination of necessary expenses of litigation under 70-30-306. He filed the motion 11 calendar days after a jury verdict was rendered in his favor. Plaintiff filed a motion to retax costs on the ground that respondent's motion was untimely filed under the "5 days after the verdict" clause of 25-10-501. The Supreme Court held former Rule 6(a) and (e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), eliminating Saturdays and Sundays and granting 3 business days, must be given effect since defendant was required to take some "action by virtue of papers served upon him by mail" and since defendant was served by mail. Defendant's motion was timely filed. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Payment of Attorney's Fees Before Trial: Where appellant in a condemnation action was awarded preliminary payment for his property interests prior to trial and withdrew $23,194.50 and paid $7,000 to his lawyer, the payment to the lawyer did not constitute "necessary expenses of litigation" pursuant to 70-30-305 and 70-30-306. St. v. Helehan, 186 M 286, 607 P2d 537 (1980).

Costs to Private Property Owner Denied When Final Award Not in Excess of Final Offer — Law of the Case Not Applicable: When the defendant did not receive an award in excess of the final offer of the condemnor, he was not entitled to the necessary expenses of litigation and was therefore not entitled to costs. The fact that on a previous appeal in the same case the Supreme Court mentioned attorney's fees and inadvertently failed to mention costs did not invoke the "law of the case" principle as between the parties involved. Dept. of Highways v. Burlingame, 185 M 183, 605 P2d 176 (1980).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 125 throughout section substituted references to condemnor for references to plaintiff, and references to condemnee for references to defendant; in (1) at end of first sentence substituted "pursuant to the assessment or judgment" for "to those entitled thereto"; and made minor changes in style. Interim Study Bill — Eminent Domain: Chapter 125, L. 2001, was enacted as a result of an interim study. See Eminent Domain in Montana, published by the Legislative Environmental Policy Office, May 2001.

1983 Amendment: In (1)(a), at beginning deleted "if a fee simple interest in the defendant's land is taken"; and deleted former (1)(c), which read: "if an easement over or through the defendants' property is involved, in either a single payment or in not more than five consecutive annual installments."; in (2) after "the court" deleted "or judge".

1981 Amendment: Added the last sentence as an introductory clause in (1); inserted (1)(a), (1)(b), and (1)(c) providing optional forms of payment at the defendants' discretion.

Case Notes

Computation of Attorney Fees in Condemnation Action: A property condemnation action was resolved by agreement of the parties, and the state agreed to pay defendants' necessary expenses of litigation. Defense counsel charged $250 an hour for 1,906 hours. The state challenged both the rate and the number of hours. Following a hearing, the District Court adjusted the number of hours to 1,205 but adopted the hourly rate, and the state appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. The District Court did not have the benefit of the later decision in Mont. Dept. of Transportation v. Am. Bank of Mont., 2008 MT 362, 346 M 405, 195 P3d 844 (2008), which stated that reasonable and necessary attorney fees awarded in a condemnation action must be computed on hourly rates typical or common for a nonspecific attorney's services in the county in which the trial is held. In this case, the state presented testimony from two attorneys in Flathead County that the usual and customary fee for an attorney in that county was $150 an hour, and that was the evidence upon which the District Court should have relied in setting the hourly fee. Therefore, the case was remanded for an adjustment of the rate to $150 an hour. St. v. Skyline Broadcasters, Inc., 2009 MT 193, 351 M 127, 211 P3d 189 (2009).

Deposit of Money With District Court: There is no requirement for a deposit of money with the District Court until it is necessary that the condemnor make payment of a final judgment, with one exception. The exception is when the condemnor seeks an interlocutory order putting the condemnor in possession of the condemned lands. When that occurs, 70-30-311 comes into play and the condemnor must deposit with the District Court for the condemnee the amount of compensation claimed by him in his answer or the amount assessed by the commissioners or by the jury, as the case may be. Bozeman Parking Comm'n v. First Trust Co. of Mont., 190 M 107, 619 P2d 168, 37 St. Rep. 1610 (1980).

Delay in Payment of Damages: In eminent domain proceeding where the Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) did not move within 30 days as required by 70-30-307, it could not excuse its failure to pay by alleging that it had no notice of the entry of the judgment when the Commission itself had caused the judgment to be entered. Robertson v. St. Highway Comm'n, 148 M 275, 420 P2d 21 (1966).

Stay of Execution: Where Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) filed notice of appeal and perfected its appeal after Writ of Execution under this section had issued, the appeal stayed the judgment although no bond was filed as required by section 93-8011, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), since under former Rule 62(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), no security was required from the state. Robertson v. St. Highway Comm'n, 148 M 275, 420 P2d 21 (1966).

Constitutionality: This section, 70-30-309, 70-30-311, and 70-30-312, authorizing an appeal by plaintiff after payment of the judgment into court for defendant and after securing possession of the land, do not contravene Art. III, sec. 14, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 29, 1972 Mont. Const.), prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without paying just compensation therefor. St. v. Bradshaw Land & Livestock Co., 99 M 95, 43 P2d 674 (1935).

Payment to Trustee: A trustee, as holder of the legal title to land taken by a railroad company in condemnation proceedings, is prima facie entitled to the money ordered paid to him. Forbis v. Cannon, 35 M 424, 90 P 161 (1907).

Case Notes

Court Determination of Terms of Compatible Use to Be Included in Final Order of Condemnation: Although eminent domain statutes do not require protective conditions in an easement, courts do have the power under 70-30-206 to set forth protective provisions in an order for condemnation. In this case, the court found the use of property to be compatible for use both for a railroad and for electric power lines. Thus, failure by the court to include any requested protective provisions in its order of possession did not constitute reversible error, but the Supreme Court nevertheless remanded to the trial court for a hearing to determine what protective provisions requested by either party, if any, should be included in its final order of condemnation. Mont. Power Co. v. Burlington N. RR Co., 272 M 224, 900 P2d 888, 52 St. Rep. 625 (1995), following St. Highway Comm'n v. Lavoie, 155 M 39, 466 P2d 594 (1970).

Constitutionality: Section 70-30-308, this section, 70-30-311, and 70-30-312, authorizing an appeal by plaintiff after payment of the judgment into court for defendant and after securing possession of the land, do not contravene Art. III, sec. 14, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 29, 1972 Mont. Const.), prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without paying just compensation therefor. St. v. Bradshaw Land & Livestock Co., 99 M 95, 43 P2d 674 (1935).

Time of Payment: The final order of condemnation follows the payment of an award and cannot be entered in advance without infringing the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken without just compensation having been first made to or paid into court for the owner. Case Notes

Computation of Attorney Fees in Condemnation Action: A property condemnation action was resolved by agreement of the parties, and the state agreed to pay defendants' necessary expenses of litigation. Defense counsel charged $250 an hour for 1,906 hours. The state challenged both the rate and the number of hours. Following a hearing, the District Court adjusted the number of hours to 1,205 but adopted the hourly rate, and the state appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. The District Court did not have the benefit of the later decision in Mont. Dept. of Transportation v. Am. held. In this case, the state presented testimony from two attorneys in Flathead County that the usual and customary fee for an attorney in that county was $150 an hour, and that was the evidence upon which the District Court should have relied in setting the hourly fee. Therefore, the case was remanded for an adjustment of the rate to $150 an hour. St. v. Skyline Broadcasters, Inc., 2009 MT 193, 351 M 127, 211 P3d 189 (2009).

Secured Lenders Not Liable for Overage Judgment: Lender defendants were secured creditors with mortgages on condemned property and perfected UCC liens on the condemnation proceeds. The District Court concluded that the lenders were jointly and severally liable for excess proceeds withdrawn from the condemnor's deposit with the court. The District Court noted that the lenders did not file a claim for relief against any other party in the action and that an attorney's withdrawal from the deposit was done in the attorney's role as counsel for all defendants; thus, judgment for the lenders was not appropriate. The lenders appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. Under 70-30-311, the liability on an overage judgment is limited to the amount of excess actually received by a condemnee. Here, the only amount received by the lenders was the amount of their mortgages. Further, the lenders had no written fee agreement with the attorney, so even though the attorney represented to the District Court that he appeared on behalf of all defendants and the attorney's services were paid through withdrawals made from the deposit, the lenders did not bear responsibility for the attorney's fees and costs. St. v. Skyline Broadcasters, Inc., 2009 MT 193, 351 M 127, 211 P3d 189 (2009). See also Grand River Dam Authority v. Jarvis, 124 F2d 914 (10th Cir. 1942), and St. v. Teuscher, 761 P2d 49 (Wash. 1988).

Interest Accruing From Date of Determination of Property Value According to Terms of Condemnation Agreement: The parties entered into an agreement that granted possession of condemned property to defendant, and plaintiff subsequently filed an inverse condemnation action and was awarded a judgment. Plaintiff asserted that pursuant to 70-30-302, interest on the judgment should be paid from the date of the service of summons, preceding the order granting possession. Defendant disagreed, and the Supreme Court held that 70-30-302 does not apply to inverse condemnation proceedings. Rather, 70-30-302 assesses interest when the process described in 70-30-311 puts a condemning plaintiff into possession of the condemned property, but in this case, that process was not used. Instead, the parties' agreement provided that interest would not accrue until the final determination of value was made, which occurred when the jury arrived at its verdict. Therefore, the District Court properly decided that, pursuant to the condemnation agreement, interest began on the date of the jury's verdict. K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Motion for Preliminary Condemnation Properly Granted Following Unaccepted Offer to Purchase Right-of-Way: Seeking to improve and expand a roadway, the city offered Taylens $25,500 for the right-of-way across their property. The offer included an appraisal, an engineer's drawing of the land that the city wanted to purchase, a legal description of the property, and a proposed purchase agreement and set a date by which the offer had to be accepted. When the date passed without a response from the Taylens, the city began condemnation proceedings, while continuing to negotiate with the Taylens for a purchase price. Ultimately, no agreement was reached, the property was condemned, and the city took possession and completed the road improvements. The Taylens appealed on grounds that the city did not properly follow the condemnation process, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court correctly concluded that the city's offer met the requirements of 70-30-111(4) and did not err in granting the city's motion for preliminary condemnation. In addition, the Taylens failed to avail themselves of appropriate legal remedies to preserve the status quo, such as a stay pending appeal or a request that the city give a bond or sufficient sureties during the appeal, and the city completed the improvements, so the Taylens lost the right to raise the issue of whether the court should have granted the city immediate possession following the order for preliminary condemnation. Bozeman v. Taylen, 2007 MT 256, 339 M 274, 170 P3d 939 (2007).

Deposit of Money With District Court: There is no requirement for a deposit of money with the District Court until it is necessary that the condemnor make payment of a final judgment, with one exception. The exception is when the condemnor seeks an interlocutory order putting the condemnor in possession of the condemned lands. When that occurs, 70-30-311 comes into play and the condemnor must deposit with the District Court for the condemnee the amount of compensation claimed by him in his answer or the amount assessed by the commissioners or by the jury, as the case may be. Bozeman Parking Comm'n v. First Trust Co. of Mont., 190 M 107, 619 P2d 168, 37 St. Rep. 1610 (1980).

Excess Collected by State — No Separate Action Required: Where appellant in an eminent domain action was awarded preliminary payment prior to trial and withdrew $23,194.50 of the preliminary award and paid one-third to his attorney and where appellant was later awarded $5,000 by a jury, the District Court properly ordered the appellant to repay the excess withdrawn, with interest, without a separate legal action being brought by the state. The fact that one-third of the preliminary award was paid to plaintiff's lawyer was a matter between plaintiff and the lawyer and did not require an action to recover the excess from the lawyer. St. v. Helehan, 186 M 286, 607 P2d 537 (1980).

Mootness Due to Completion of Use and Possession: If use and possession are complete on defendant's lands, his motion to stay condemnation is moot since the acts sought to be enjoined are accomplished fact. Mont. Power Co. v. Charter, 173 M 429, 568 P2d 118 (1976).

Payment Pending Appeal: In eminent domain proceeding state was forced to deposit amount of award granted by condemnation commission pending appeal. Dept. of Highways v. Scrivani, 172 M 177, 561 P2d 1321 (1976).

Constitutionality: Sections 70-30-308, 70-30-309, this section, and 70-30-312, authorizing an appeal by plaintiff after payment of the judgment into court for defendant and after securing possession of the land, do not contravene Art. III, sec. 14, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 29, 1972 Mont. Const.), prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without paying just compensation therefor. St. v. Bradshaw Land & Livestock Co., 99 M 95, 43 P2d 674 (1935).

Recovery of Excess From Defendant: A recital in condemnation proceedings that plaintiff have judgment and execution against defendant for any sum theretofore paid by plaintiff to defendant in accordance with the award, which award was appealed from, is improper, as the statute gives an ample remedy if plaintiff is entitled to recover any amount from defendant. Great N. Ry. v. Benjamin, 51 M 167, 149 P 968 (1915).

Reversal of Order of Condemnation:

After the report and assessment of the commissioners appointed to determine the damages in eminent domain proceedings had been made and filed and the amount of damages so assessed had been paid into court for the owner of the property, the court properly permitted plaintiff to continue in possession of the property which had theretofore been obtained under an order in a like proceeding, the judgment in which had been reversed on appeal. Spratt v. Helena Power Transmission Co., 37 M 60, 94 P 631 (1908).

Merely because a corporation had become a trespasser by reason of the reversal of an order of the District Court empowering it to take lands under condemnation proceedings, it was not thereafter, while still a trespasser, deprived of the right to again invoke the power of eminent domain. Spratt v. Helena Power Transmission Co., 37 M 60, 94 P 631 (1908).

Appeal:

Since this section allows appeals from any finding or judgment made or rendered under this chapter, as in other cases, and section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), allows appeals from final judgments or orders, an appeal does not lie from the court's finding of fact or conclusions of law. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Anhalt, 127 M 71, 257 P2d 889 (1953).

This section, 70-30-308, 70-30-309, and 70-30-311, authorizing an appeal by plaintiff after payment of the judgment into court for defendant and after securing possession of the land, do not contravene Art. Case Notes

Property Taxes Properly Not Awarded as Litigation Expense: Plaintiff asserted that the District Court erred by not awarding property taxes as necessary litigation expenses as part of an inverse condemnation judgment. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. Under 70-30-305 and 70-30-306, property taxes are not designated as a necessary cost of litigation. The court noted that 70-30-315 does allow for proration of property taxes in certain condemnation cases, but because the 1997 version of the statute applicable in this case used the word "plaintiff" to describe the party condemning the property, the statute did not apply to inverse condemnation cases in which the plaintiff was the condemnee. (Note that the 2001 Legislature amended 70-30-315 by changing "plaintiff" to "condemnor".) K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008).

Case Notes

Fee Simple Ownership of Fractional Mineral Interest — No Reversion: Through a series of transactions, Libby obtained 75% of the mineral interest in a property and Noranda obtained the remaining 25% of the mineral interest. Noranda filed a condemnation action against Libby seeking acquisition by condemnation of all interests other than those that it owned. The judge found for Noranda. After a subsequent transaction Noranda was vested with all surface and mineral rights except for a reservation of the timber. Subsequently, Libby filed a notice of reversionary interest concerning the property if Noranda abandoned the condemned interest or if the purpose for which the property was condemned terminated. After the passage of 6 years, Noranda announced that it was abandoning its plan to mine the property. Libby filed suit seeking the reversion of the condemned mineral interest. Noranda opposed the claim and counterclaimed to quiet title in the property. Noranda denied abandonment or that the issue of abandonment was material to the issue. The District Court concluded that Noranda owned 100% of the surface and mineral estate and therefore Libby had no reversionary interest regardless of whether Noranda abandoned the mining project. The Supreme Court concluded that a property owner has the right to carve out of his property as many estates or interests (perpendicular or horizontal, perpetual or limited) as it may be able to sustain. Montana courts have long recognized that title to mineral interests in land may be segregated in whole or in part from the rest of the fee simple title. A division of the mineral interest from the surface interest is a horizontal division. Mineral interests, like surface interests, may be divided vertically into fractional interests. The extent of the interest conveyed, reserved, or excepted by a grant, reservation, or exception of a fractional interest in minerals or mineral rights depends on the particular terms of the instrument. A fee simple title is presumed to be intended by every grant of real property from which it does not appear that a lesser estate was intended. The fact that Libby's interest was a fractional interest has no bearing on the quality of its estate. Contrary to Libby's argument that fee simple refers to a particular quantity (i.e., the whole) of real property, fee simple describes the infinite or perpetual duration of the ownership of the interest, whether it is an interest in the whole, the surface, a fraction of the surface, the minerals, or a fraction of the minerals. Because Noranda acquired all of Libby's fee simple right, title, and interest in the condemnation action, Libby did not retain a reversionary interest either under the terms of the condemnation decree or by operation of law. Montana courts have long recognized that title to mineral interests in land may be segregated in whole or in part from the rest of the fee simple title. A division of the mineral interest from the surface interest is a horizontal division. Mineral interests, like surface interests, may be divided vertically into fractional interests. The extent of the interest conveyed, reserved, or excepted by a grant, reservation, or exception of a fractional interest in minerals or mineral rights depends on the particular terms of the instrument. A fee simple title is presumed to be intended by every grant of real property from which it does not appear that a lesser estate was intended. The fact that Libby's interest was a fractional interest has no bearing on the quality of its estate. Contrary to Libby's argument that fee simple refers to a particular quantity (i.e., the whole) of real property, fee simple describes the infinite or perpetual duration of the ownership of the interest, whether it is an interest in the whole, the surface, a fraction of the surface, the minerals, or a fraction of the minerals. Because Noranda acquired all of Libby's fee simple right, title, and interest in the condemnation action, Libby did not retain a reversionary interest either under the terms of the condemnation decree or by operation of law. Libby Placer Mining Co. v. Noranda Minerals Corp., 2008 MT 367, 346 M 436, 197 P3d 924 (2008).

Case Notes

Reasonable Access Not Denied by Highway Reconstruction Project — Inverse Condemnation Claim Properly Denied: Plaintiffs sued the state for inverse condemnation and taking for constructing a highway improvement project that allegedly impaired access by large trucks to plaintiffs' business on a main street in Dillon. Plaintiffs presented evidence that it was difficult for large trucks to back into plaintiffs' receiving area without encroaching on the street and running off of curbs. The state presented evidence that a large truck could access the receiving area through curb cuts without falling off the curbs. The business manager testified that larger truck-trailer combinations could be unhooked to make them shorter and that a power unit could then push the trailers into the receiving area, that the plant was set up for pneumatic delivery and could receive almost all its products in this manner, precluding the necessity of maneuvering large trucks, and that it was possible to request delivery of the product in any size truck and trailer combination. The jury evaluated the conflicting evidence and concluded that plaintiffs' access was reasonable, and on appeal, the Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict. Williams Feed, Inc. v. St., 2007 MT 79, 336 M 493, 155 P3d 1228 (2007).

Case Notes

Costs of Litigation in Inverse Condemnation Cases: In providing for costs of litigation in condemnation cases, the Montana Constitution does not distinguish between condemnation litigation initiated by a government entity and condemnation cases initiated by the property owner, and Montana statutes do not distinguish between inverse condemnation and traditional condemnation cases. The only requirement for an award of litigation expenses is that the condemnee prevail by obtaining a judgment in excess of the condemnor's pretrial offer. In the present case, defendant asserted that under 70-31-303, plaintiff was not entitled to litigation expenses in an inverse condemnation case because federal money was not involved, but the Supreme Court affirmed that litigation expenses must be awarded in inverse condemnation cases when the condemnee prevails, as provided in 70-30-305. K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008). See also Wohl v. Missoula, 2013 MT 46, 369 Mont. 108, 300 P.3d 1119.

Denial of Application for Subdivision — Failure to State Claim for Inverse Condemnation: Madison River R.V. Ltd. (RV) applied to build a recreational vehicle park in Ennis, but the application was denied. RV's petition to the District Court included a claim that denial of the project amounted to an inverse condemnation of RV's property without just compensation. The District Court dismissed the claim on grounds that RV had not alleged facts from which the court could find that RV had suffered a taking, citing Kudloff v. Billings, 260 M 371, 860 P2d 140, 50 St. Rep. 1108 (1993). The Supreme Court affirmed. There was nothing in the record to suggest that the effect of the denial of the application denied RV all economically beneficial use of the property in question. Madison River R.V. Ltd. v. Ennis, 2000 MT 15, 298 M 91, 994 P2d 1098, 57 St. Rep. 84 (2000).

CHAPTER 32
HOMESTEADS

Chapter Case Notes

Homestead Property Not Asset Subject to Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act: Gribble took out at least four loans with the credit union and defaulted on most if not all of them. The loans were secured with large equipment, not real property. The credit union filed a complaint seeking repayment and the right to foreclose on the collateral. Gribble transferred his residential real property to another party by quitclaim deed 11 days later. The credit union asked the District Court to set aside the transfer under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA), but instead the court granted summary judgment to defendant, and the credit union appealed. The Supreme Court held that because the real property was Gribble's residence, it qualified as a homestead that would generally be exempt under nonbankruptcy law and thus was not an asset for purposes of the UFTA. The District Court was affirmed. McCone County Fed. Credit Union v. Gribble, 2009 MT 290, 352 M 254, 216 P3d 206 (2009).

Retention of Creditor's Lien on Homestead Property Following Bankruptcy Discharge: Newmans borrowed money from a bank to buy a grocery store. To secure repayment, they granted the bank a security interest in the store assets and gave the bank a mortgage on their home. When the business failed, Newmans filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy protection, scheduling the bank as secured creditor but disputing the bank's security interest in their home. The bank filed a proof of claim but identified only the business assets as security for the claim. The home was set aside to Newmans under the homestead law, and Newmans were granted their bankruptcy court discharge. When a deficiency resulted after sale of the business assets, the bank sought to enforce the mortgage lien against the home. The federal court held that the bank retained its lien on the home although it was not in possession of the property and was not required to file a secured claim in bankruptcy proceedings to retain its secured status. Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, applicable to this case, the bankruptcy discharge had no effect on the lien. Newman v. First Sec. Bank of Bozeman, 887 F2d 973 (9th Cir. 1989).

Homestead Declaration Filed After Judgment — Bankruptcy Proceedings: A homestead declaration, even though filed 5 months after judgment, avoids the state District Court judgment lien against real property in a bankruptcy action. AMFAC Mechanical Supply Co. v. Kelly, 39 St. Rep. 135 (U.S. Bankruptcy Ct., D.C. Mont. 1982) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Liberal Construction:

Homestead exemption laws were enacted for the benefit of the debtor and should be liberally construed in his favor. Oregon Mtg. Co., Ltd. v. Dunbar, 87 M 603, 289 P 559 (1930).

The purpose of the homestead statutes is to carry out the mandate of the Constitution, "that the legislative assembly shall enact liberal homestead and exemptions laws". Mitchell v. McCormick, 22 M 249, 56 P 216 (1899).

Lien on Homesteads: A money judgment cannot be impressed as a lien on a homestead without a showing that the money was borrowed for the purpose of buying the homestead, it not being sufficient that the money did buy the homestead. Mitchell v. McCormick, 22 M 249, 56 P 216 (1899).

Part 1
Establishment of the Homestead

Part Case Notes

Defect in Property Description — No Invalidation of Homestead Exemption: Where a Writ of Execution was obtained against the plaintiff's home after she and her husband filed a homestead exemption for the property, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred, in a declaratory judgment action brought by the plaintiff, in holding that a misdescription of homestead made the exemption invalid. The Supreme Court examined the purpose of including a real property description in a homestead declaration and followed the rationale of prior Montana Supreme Court opinions concerning the use and construction of the homestead declaration and held that a misdescription of "town or townsite" as "first addition" did not void the declaration, especially since the defendant knew where the homestead was located and knew it was the subject of a homestead declaration. Neel v. First Fed. S&L Ass'n, 207 M 376, 675 P2d 96, 41 St. Rep. 18 (1984).

Retroactive Filing of Exemption Held Not to Impair Obligations of Contract: Where the Supreme Court reversed a District Court decision and held that an amendment to the homestead exemption statutes allowing the filing of a homestead declaration after an auditor obtained a judgment applied retroactively to allow exemption of homesteads from judgments obtained prior to the effective date of the amendment, the Supreme Court also held that the retroactive application did not violate the provisions of the state and federal constitutions prohibiting interference with obligations of contracts. Under the rationale of Energy Reserves Group, Inc. v.

Kans. Power & Light Co., 459 US 400, 74 L Ed 2d 52, 103 S Ct 697 (1983), the Supreme Court determined that the amendment did not substantially impair the obligations of the contract between the parties because: (1) the area of law of homestead exemptions had been heavily regulated by statute in the past; (2) when the defendant bank made its loan to the plaintiff, it was made subject to further state regulation of homestead exemptions; and (3) the bank should have been aware that the exemption had been increased over the last 50 years, knew that the plaintiff's home would be subject to a homestead exemption, and took its chances that the state might increase the exemption. Moreover, because the loan was not secured by a mortgage on the home, the bank could not have relied on the plaintiff's continued ownership of the home. For these reasons, the bank's reasonable contract expectations were not impaired by the state's amendment of the statute. Neel v. First Fed. S&L Ass'n, 207 M 376, 675 P2d 96, 41 St. Rep. 18 (1984).
